Mrs. Riordan, living near Tremont street, while out doors walking in the rear of her dwelling last Saturday, slipped, and falling strained the muscles of her arm so badly as to be unable to use it since.

The Naumkeag Clothing Co. call attention to their line of fine overcoats which they do not desire to carry over till another season. They are made from fine foreign goods and can be bought for about 60 cts. on a dollar. It is an opportunity which does not often occur, and doubtless will not occur again, as it is probable that this class of goods has touched bottom prices.

The man with the spirometer ventured into the heart of our town last week, and during the day most of the boys had a "whack" at the thing. The manipulator had good lungs and called out to the crowd, "Test your lungs gentlemen, two blows for five cents. Now is the opportunity to measure the vital capacity and see the quantity of air you can expire after a forced inspiration." We believe our "Sparks" reporter was looking for our South Peabody correspondent, believing him to have the greatest capacity in all senses of the word.

An exchange shouts that the silver dollar must go. Will some one kindly inform that paper that the silver dollar does go. It goes fast too. A little too fast for a man on a small salary. It goes in droves or singly. It goes anywhere and every where. In these times there is nothing that seems to have more go to it than a silver dollar.

Onion socials are now the rage in some parts of the state. A lot of girls go into a room, eat an onion, and then a blushing young dude is hustled in and the giddy girls glue their onion scented lips to his. The dude generally dies of exhaustion.

Hammering brass is still a craze, in some families men, women and children are at it, and the racket sounds like a boiler manufactory. The outfits are sold by art stores and are not expensive. Some work of this kind is very handsome.

There are 18 new engines contracted for the Boston & Maine railroad, to be used on the Eastern division, to be completed June 1st; four of them are to be switch, and fourteen passenger engines; three of these latter are to be larger than any now in use, as they will have cylinders 18x24 inches; the largest now is 18x22.

The firm of Charles A. Ropes & Son of Salem are an excellent one to trade with. They are large dealers in flour, grain and meal, and are always ready to quote the lowest prices in any brand of flour or other articles in this line. Making a specialty of these goods they are able to serve our readers with the choicest and freshest goods—and we know the price will be satisfactory. Goods are delivered free in Peabody—they are connected by telephone, and we advise our readers to try them.

F. W. Lucas & Co., the New England Boot and Shoe Co., of Salem, show an elegant line of boots and shoes for fine wear. He carries many lines of goods which cannot be obtained elsewhere. We heard a lady say that it is of no use to go elsewhere for a certain kind of boot; Mr. Lucas always had just what she wanted, and there she was going. That is the kind of customers Mr. Lucas tries to get and keep, and we should judge he is doing it.

To-day we don our heavy coat,
To-morrow wear a duster,
Next day our heavy coat again

Poet's Corner.

Snow-Flakes.

BY J. T. BURTON WOLLASTON.

Through the chilly Winter morning,
Through the gloomy veil of mist,
Came the snow-flakes, thickly falling,
Hiding everything they kissed—
Every window-sill and doorstep,
And the stones beneath the feet,
Till a pall of perfect whiteness
Covered all the silent street.

Soon the feet of busy people,
Passing to their daily toil,
Trod the whiteness out and marred it
With the grimy stain of soil;
Till the trampled mass presented
But a sad and painful sight—
Painful in its wretched contrast
With the snow of yesternight.

In the chilly Winter morning
Came a little soul one day,
Sweet as any mountain daisy
Growing in its bed of clay.
Fair the face that shone above it,
Lithe the limbs that made its prison;
It was fairer than the snow-flakes
E'er the morning sun had risen.

Soon the hasting feet of Passion
Trod the soul and beat it down;
And a sinful hand defiled it
In the markets of the town:
Till the face had lost its beauty
And the limbs grown worn and thin,
With the wretchedness that follows
In the deadly track of sin.

Sullied snow is never whitened,
Never can be fair again;
But there is a purifying
For the sinful souls of men;
And the print of evil footsteps
In the downward path we trod
May be blotted out forever
By the mercy of our God.

First Steps.

Hush! the baby stands alone—
Hold your breath and watch him,
Now he takes a step—just one—
Wavers, stops—quick, catch him!
Courage! Life's first step will cost.
Now again he's trying—
One, two—three! he walks, almost,
Trembling, stumbling, crying.

One, two, three—Oh! he will walk
Now, before we know it.
Hear his sweet-voiced baby talk,
Little bird or poet!
Prattling, toddling, there he goes,
Stepping off so proudly—
Turning in his untaught toes,
Pleased—then laughing loudly.

There lies baby on the floor,
Sprawling, rolling, screaming!
Are life's first attempts so poor?
Baby was but dreaming
When he felt so bold and strong.
Gladly now he's clinging
To the one whose soothing song
Back his smile is bringing.

Kiss-cured, see, the little man
Brave again as ever,
(Ne'er such pluck since world began!)
Makes his best endeavor.
Walks right off—the darling pet—
Rush now to caress him!
Come what will of first steps yet,
All good angels bless him!

Two Pictures.

BY WILLIAM LYLE.

Side-boards of silver and statues of gold,
Carpets of velvet and bric-a-brac old.
Pictures of fabulous wealth on the walls,
Electric stars making day in the halls.
Wines of rare vintage, of age beyond price.
Rich Arabesques, set to every device.
Music entrancing, that meets in the air
With delicate odors from everywhere.

Misery praying for morn, and for night.
Hope bearing no print and cheeks wan and white.
Rags mocking modesty, mended and thin.
Hunger and squalor, without and within.
Walls ruined with filth, and a pest-laden air.
Forms reeking with sin, that might have been fair.
Curses, low uttered, but deep as the soul,
Hearts broken and fiends holding rampant control.

Twin pictures that hang in the sight of God.
Strange, that Omnipotence holds up its rod!
Shut out your faith in the Christ and the Book,
Through Reason's camera, how does it look?
Deify Nature, solution comes not.
Writhe as we may, we are chained to this thought:
Omniscience can see, both pictures must blend,
God shall be justified—wait till the end.

An exchange thus poetically does the rink business: If all of life could be as smooth as roller-skating in the rink no charm would be required to smooth the many ills from which we shrink; mankind might glide through life in peace, unmindful of the bitter fates, and all things move as slick as grease—as smooth as life on roller skates.

A new amusement at some skating rinks is to tie sums of money in packages, suspended from the beams by strings, just within reach of the skaters who are blind-folded, and each skater has what he finds.

A Letter from the Far West.

NO. II. MANY CHANGES.

Many changes have been wrought since our letters of last year. The most prominent event is the completion of The Northern Pacific Railway, now an old story. The last spike was drawn on the 8th day of September, 1883, a few miles west of Helena. From Duluth, Minnesota, at the head of Lake Superior, to Taconia, on Puget Sound, in Washington Territory—the two termini of the road, it is 2116 miles. This is the main line of the road. It has also about 2000 miles of branches projected and constructed, making the longest railroad in the world.

Between 800 and 1100 miles of this road is within the territory of Montana at a mean elevation of about 2000 feet above sea level. It has two tunnels—the Bozeman tunnel through the Belt range, 120 miles east of Helena, and the Mullen tunnel through the main range of the Rockies, 14 miles west of Helena. The Bozeman tunnel is 3611 feet long and 5564 feet above the sea. The Mullen is 3850 feet long and 5548 feet above sea level. The average grade of both tunnels is 116 feet to the mile.

Before the completion of the tunnels, the road zigzaged over both mountains presenting a curiosity in railroading; and now the cars often pass through the clouds in climbing up to the tunnels, yet there is a saving of 2500 feet in the altitude of the Northern Pacific over the Union Pacific at Sherman, and of 1200 feet over the Sierras on the Central Pacific, besides the saving of several hours' time into Portland, points which will not fail to give the Northern Pacific the precedence over other transcontinental lines. It has a government grant of each alternate section of land, forty miles each side of the track in the territories and twenty miles each side in the States through which it runs. This in time must make it one of the wealthiest corporations in the world.

The last 9 1-2 miles of the track were lain between the hours of 6 A. M. and 3 P. M. The last mile was laid in 65 minutes—this is a fast age. It would have been a great curiosity to have seen some of this marvellous track laying. When your correspondent went east, a year ago last summer, on a hurried visit, he went 70 miles by coach before he came to the end of the track and when he returned the road had reached Helena and gone 14 miles beyond it; so he missed the sight of seeing a gang of men walk into town and out of it in a single day and leave a complete railroad behind them. It is said that the best paying branch of the road is from Helena to Wickes, a mining camp 24 miles distant. This road was first projected and surveyed in September, 1883; and was running in December following, making the quickest built railroad on record, counting from its first inception. At Livinston 130 miles east of Helena is another branch 70 miles long leading into the Yellowstone National Park—the wonderland of the world.

Another important branch projected, is from Helena to Burton, to connect with the head of navigation on the Missouri river, at the great falls of the Missouri, where there is one of the best natural water powers in the world, in the immediate vicinity of unlimited coal mines and where there is a new town already "booming." This branch will also top Marysville, 18 miles from Helena, where the celebrated Drum Lummon mine is located, which was recently sold to an English company and which has the largest out put of any gold mine in the United States at the present time.

Whether we agree with Mr. Beecher or not, few men can speak or write on any subject of public interest with so great a certainty that everybody will want to know what they say. In discussing the question as to how far ministers may properly go in politics,—which he does in the North American Review for February,—the great preacher shows himself to advantage perhaps all the more because it is a matter that touches him personally as well as professionally. In the same number of the Review, the question, "How shall the President be Elected?" is ably treated by five happily chosen writers. The substantial agreement of four of them on the same point is significant. Another notable article in this unusually strong number is a review of "Holmes's Life of Emerson," by the veteran historian George Bancroft; and still another is an essay by Prof. C. A. Young on "Theories regarding the Sun's Corona." The Rev. Dr. W. G. T. Shedd defends the dogma "Endless Punishment," and Prof. G. Stanley Hall writes on "New Departures in Education."

Washed-Out Hair.—There is a sort of pallid, chalky complexion, which the novelists call a "washed-out complexion." It is ghastly enough, and no mistake. Washed-out, faded, discolored, or parti-colored hair is almost as repulsive and melancholy. Parker's Hair Balsam will restore your hair to its original color, whatever it was; brown, auburn or black. Why wear moss on your head, when you may easily have lively, shining hair.

DARK DAYS.

"I will see him no more. It is to save myself from seeing him that I come to you. Little right have I to ask aid from you; but your words came back to me in my need. There was one friend to turn to. Help me, Basil! I come to you as a sister may come to a brother."

"As a sister to a brother," I echoed. "I accept the trust," I added, laying my lips reverentially on her white forehead, and vowing mentally to devote my life to her.

"You will stay here, now?" I asked.

"No, I must go back. To-morrow I will come—to-morrow, Basil, my brother, you will take me far away—far away?"

"Where you wish. Every land is as one to me now."

She had given me the right, a brother's right, to stand between her and the villain who had wronged her. To-morrow that man would be here! How I long for the moment which would bring us face to face!

Philippa arose. "I must go," she said.

I pressed food and wine upon her; she would take nothing. She made, however, no objection to my accompanying her to her home. We left the house by the casement by which she entered. Together we stepped out on the snow-whitened road. She took my arm and we walked toward her home.

I asked her with whom she was staying. She told me with a widow lady and two children, named Wilson. She went to them at Sir Mervyn Ferrand's command. Mrs. Wilson, he told her, was a distant connection of his own, and he had made arrangements for her to look after Philippa during her illness.

It was but another proof of the man's revolting cynicism. To send the woman who falsely believed herself to be his wife to one of his own relatiove! Oh, I would have a full reckoning with him!

"What name do they know you by?" I asked.

"He said I was to call myself by the false name, which, for purposes of his own, he chose to pass under. But I felt myself absolved from my promise of secrecy. Why should I stay in a strange house, with with strange people, by Sir Mervyn Ferrand's request, unless I could show good cause for doing so? So I told Mrs. Wilson everything.

"She believed you?"

"She was bound to believe me. I would have no doubt cast upon my word. I showed her the certificate of my marriage. Whatever she may have thought at first, she saw then that I was his wife. No one else knows it except her. To her I am Lady Ferrand. Like me, she never dreamed of what man's villainy can reach. Oh, Basil! Basil! why are such men allowed to live?"

For the first time Philippa seemed to break down. Till now the chief characteristics of her mood had been scorn and anger. Now, sheer grief for the time appeared to sweep away every other emotion. Sob after sob broke from her. I endeavored to calm her—to comfort her. Alas! how little I could say or do to these ends! She leaned heavily and despondingly on my arm, and for a long while we walked in silence. At last she told me her home was close at hand.

"Listen, Philippa," I said; "I shall come in with you and see this lady with whom you are staying. I shall tell her I am your brother; that for some time I have known how shamefully your husband has neglected you; and that now, with your full consent, I mean to take you away. Whether this woman believes in our relationship or not matters nothing. I suppose she knows that man is coming to-morrow. After his heartless desertion, she cannot be surprised at your wish to avoid meeting him."

I paused. Philippa bent her head as if assenting to my plan.

"To-morrow," I continued, "long before that wretch comes here to poison the very air we breathe, I shall come and fetch you. Early in the morning I will send my servant for your luggage. Mrs. Wilson may know me and my man by sight. That makes no difference. There need be no concealment. You are free to come and go. You have no one to fear. On Thursday morning we will leave this place."

"Yes," said Philippa, dreamily, "to-morrow I will leave—I will come to you. But I will come alone. In the evening, most likely, when no one will know where I have gone."

"But how much better that I should take you away openly and in broad daylight, as a brother would take away a sister!"

"No; I will come to you. You will not mind waiting, Basil. There is something I must do first. Something to be done to-morrow. Something to be said; some one to be seen. What is it? who is it? I cannot recollect."

She placed her disengaged hand on her brow. She pushed back her head a little, and gave a sigh of relief as she felt the keen air on her temples. Poor girl! after what she had that day gone through, no wonder her mind refused to recall trivial details and petty arrangements to be made before she joined me. Sleep and the certainty of my sympathy and protection would no doubt restore her wandering memory.

However, although I again and again urged her to change her mind, she was firm in her resolve to come to me alone. At last, very reluctantly, I was obliged to give way on this point; but I was determined to see this Mrs. Wilson to-night; so when we reached the house I entered with Philippa.

I told her there was no occasion for her to be present at my interview with the hostess. She looked frightfully weary, and at my suggestion went straight to her room to retire for the night. I sat down and awaited the advent of Mrs. Wilson. She soon appeared.

A woman of about five and thirty; well but plainly dressed. As I glanced at her with some curiosity I decided that when young she must, after a certain type of beauty, been exceedingly good looking. Unfortunately hers was one of those faces cast in an aquiline mold—faces which, as soon as the bloom of youth is lost or the owners thereof turn to thinness, become, as a rule, sharp, strained, hungry and severe looking. Whatever the woman's charms might once have been she could now boast of very few.

There were lines around her mouth and on her brow which told of suffering; and, as I judged it, not the calm, resigned suffering which often leaves a sweet if sad expression on the face, but fierce, rebellious, constrained suffering, such as turns a young heart into an old one long before its time.

As she entered the room and bowed to me her face expressed undisguised surprise at seeing a visitor who was a stranger to her. I apologized for the lateness of my call, then hastened to tell her its object. She listened with polite impassibility. She made no comment when I repeatedly spoke of my so-styled sister as Lady Ferrand. It was clear that, as Philippa had said, Mrs. Wilson was convinced as to the valid nature of the marriage. I inveighed roundly against Sir Mervyn Ferrand's heartless conduct and scandalous neglect of his wife. My hearer shrugged her shoulders, and the meaning conveyed by the action was that, although she regretted family jars, they were no concern of hers. She seemed quite without interest in the matter; yet a suspicion that she was acting, indeed rather over-acting, a part, crossed my mind once or twice.

When I told her it was Lady Ferrand's intention to place herself to-morrow under my protection, she simply bowed. When I said that most likely we should leave England, and for a while travel on the continent, she said that my sister's health would no doubt be much benefited by the change.

"I may mention," she added, for the first time taking any real part in the talk, "that your sister's state is not quite all it should be. For the last day or two I have been thinking of sending for the medical man who attended her during her unfortunate confinement. He has not seen her for quite a week. I mentioned it to her this afternoon, but she appears to have taken an unaccountable dislike to him, and utterly refused to see him. I do not wish to alarm you—I merely mention this; no doubt you, her brother, will see to it."

The peculiar stress she laid upon the word "brother" told me that I was right in thinking the woman was acting, and that not for one moment did my assumed fraternity deceive her. This was of no consequence.

"I am myself a doctor. Her health will be my care," I said. Then I arose.

"You are related to Sir Mervyn Ferrand, I believe, Mrs. Wilson?" I asked.

She gave me a quick look which might mean anything.

"We are connections," she said, carelessly.

"You must have been surprised at his sending his wife away at such a time?"

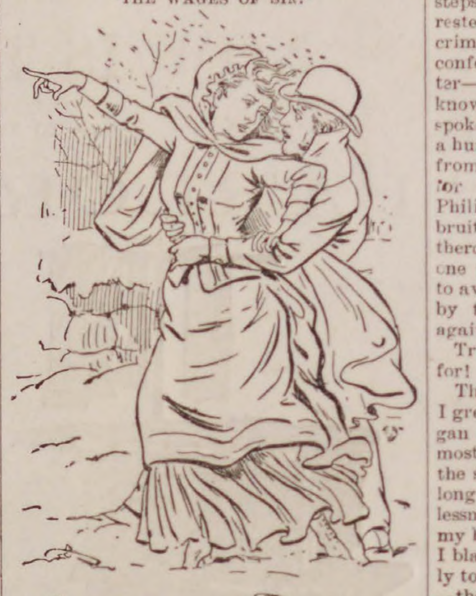
"I am not in the habit of feeling surprised at Sir Mervyn's actions. He wrote to me and told me that, knowing my circumstances were straitened, he had recommended a lady to come and live with me for a few months. When I found this lady was his wife, I own I was, for once, surprised."

From the emphasis which she laid on certain words I knew it was but the fact of Philippa's being married to the scoundrel that surprised her, nothing else. I could see that Mrs. Wilson knew Sir Mervyn Ferrand thoroughly, and something told me that her relations with him were of a nature which might not bear investigation.

I bade her good-night, and walked back to my cottage with a heart in which sorrow, pity, love, hatred, exultation, and, it may be, hope, were strangely and inextricably mingled.

CHAPTER III.

"THE WAGES OF SIN."



"Go on, go on! till you see the wages of sin—"

Morning! No books: no idle, listless hours for me to-day. Plenty to do, plenty to think about; all sorts of arrangements to make. Farewell to my moody, sullen life. Farewell to my aimless, selfish existence. Henceforward I should have something worth living for—worth dying for, if needs be! Philippa was coming to me to-day: coming in grief, it is true; coming as a sister comes to a brother. Ah! after all the weary, weary waiting, I shall see her to-day—to-morrow, every day! If a man's devotion, homage, worship and respect can in her own eyes reinstate my queen, I shall some day see the bloom come back to her cheek, the bright smile play once more round her mouth, the dark eyes again eloquent with happy thoughts. And then—and then! what should I care for the world or its sneers? To whom, save myself, should I be answerable? Then I might whisper in her ear: "Sweet, let the past vanish from our lives as a dream. Let happiness date from to-day."

Although Philippa would grace my poor cottage for one night only, I had a thousand preparations to make for her comfort. Fortunately I had a spare room, and, moreover, a furnished one. Not that I should have troubled, when I went into my seclusion, about such a superfluity as a guest-chamber; but as it happened I had bought the house and furniture complete, so could offer my welcome guest fair accommodation for the night.

I summoned my solid man. I told him that my sister was coming on a visit to me; that she would sleep here to-night, but that most likely we should go away to-morrow. He could stay and look after the house until I returned or sent him instructions what to do with it. William manifested no surprise. Had I told him to make preparations for the coming of my wife and five children he would have considered it all a part of the day's work, and would have done his best to meet my requirements.

He set to work in his imperturbable, methodical, but handy way to get Philippa's room in trim. As soon as this was done, and the neglected chamber made cosy and warm-looking, I told him to borrow a horse and cart somewhere, and fetch the luggage from Mrs. Wilson's. He was to mention no names; simply to say that he had come for the luggage, and to ask if the lady had any message to send.

Then I sat down in the room which my love would occupy and mused upon the strange but unhappy chance which was bringing her beneath my roof. I wished that I had an enchanter's wand to turn the humble garniture of the chamber into surroundings meet for my queenly Philippa. I wished that I had, at least, flowers with which I could deck her resting place; for I remembered how passionately she loved flowers. Alas! I had not seen a flower for months.

Then I drew out Sir Mervyn Ferrand's letter, read it again and again, and cursed the writer in my heart.

William was away about two hours; then he made his appearance with some boxes. I was delighted to see these tangible signs that Philippa meant to keep her promise. Till that moment I had been troubled by something like the doubt that after all she might, upon calm reflection, rescind the resolution formed in her excitement. Now her coming seemed to a certainty.

Nevertheless, William brought no message; so there was nothing for me to do but wait patiently until she chose to cross my threshold.

Although my pleasing labors of love were ended, I was not left idle. There was another task to be done to-day. I set my teeth and sat down, thinking quietly as to the way in which it might be best performed. To-night I meant to stand face to face with that black-hearted scoundrel known as Sir Mervyn Ferrand!

I consulted the time table. His letter named no particular hour; but I saw that if he carried out his expressed intention of being here to-night, there was but one train by which he could come; there was but one way from Roding to the house at which Philippa had been staying. He meant to walk, his letter said; this might be in order to escape observation. The train was due at Roding at 7 o'clock. The weather was cold; a man would naturally walk fast. Mrs. Wilson's house must be four miles from the station. Let me start from there just before the train arrives, and I should probably meet him about half way on his journey. It would be dark, but I should know him. I should know him among a thousand. There on the open lonely road Sir Mervyn Ferrand, coming gayly, and in his worldly cynicism certain of cajoling, buying off, or in some other way silencing the woman who had in an evil day trusted to his honor and love, would meet, not her, but the man who from the first had sworn that a wrong to Philippa should be more than a wrong to himself! He would meet this man and be called to account.

Stern and sinister as were my thoughts—freely and unreservedly as I record them, as indeed I endeavor in this tale to record everything—I do not wish to be misjudged. It is true that in my present mood I was bent upon avenging Philippa with my own hand; true that I meant, if possible, to take at some time or another this man's life; but at least no thought of taking any advantage of an unarmed or unsuspecting man entered into my scheme of vengeance. I designed no murderous attack. But it was my intention to stop the man on his path; to confront him and tell him that his villainy was known to me; that Philippa had fled to me for aid; that she was now in my custody; and that I, who stood in the position of her brother, demanded the so-called satisfaction which, by the old-fashioned code of honor, was due from the man who had ruthlessly betrayed a woman. Well I knew that it was probable he would laugh at me—tell me that the days of duelling were over, and refuse to grant my request. Then I meant to see if insults could warm his noble blood; if my hand on his cheek could bring about the result which I desired. If this failed I would follow him abroad, cane him and spit upon him in public places.

A wild scheme for these prosaic, law-abiding days; yet the only one that was feasible. It may be said that I should have taken steps to have caused the recreant to be arrested for bigamy. But what proof of his crime had we as yet, save his own, unsigned confession? Who was to move in the matter—Philippa—myself? We did not even know where this wife of whom he had spoken lived, or where she died. There were a hundred ways in which he might escape from justice, but whether he was punished for his sin, or allowed to go scot-free, Philippa's name and wrongs must be bruited about, her shame made public. No; there was but one course to take, and but one person to take it. It rested with me to avenge the wrongs of the woman I loved by the good old-fashioned way of a life against a life.

Truly, as I said, I had now plenty to live for!

The hours went by, yet Philippa came not. I grew restless and uneasy as the dusk began to make the road, up which I gazed almost continually, dim and indistinct. When the short winter's day was over, and the long dark night had fairly begun, my restlessness turned into fear. I walked out of my house and paced my garden to and fro. I blamed myself for having yielded so lightly to Philippa's wish—her command, rather—that I should on no account fetch her. But then, whenever did I resist a wish, much less a command, of hers? Oh, that I had been firm this once!

The snow-storm of the previous evening had not lasted long—not long enough to thoroughly whiten the world. The day had been fine and frosty, but I knew that the wind had changed since the sun went down. It was warmer, a change which I felt sure presaged a heavy downfall of snow or rain. There was a moon, a fitful moon; for clouds were flying across it, dark clouds, which I guessed would soon gather coherence and volume, and veil entirely that bright face, which now only showed itself at irregular intervals.

The minutes were passing away. I grew nervous and excited. Why does she not come? My hope had been to see my poor girl safely housed before I started to execute my other task. Why does she not come? Time, precious time, is slipping by! In the hope of meeting her, I walked for some distance up the road. "Why does she delay?" I groaned. Even now I should be on my way to Roding, or I may miss my prey. Heavens! can it be that she is waiting to see this man once more? Never! never! Perish the thought!

But, all the same, every fibre in my body quivered at the bare supposition of such a thing.

I could bear the suspense no longer. For the hundredth time I glanced at my watch. It wanted but ten minutes to seven o'clock, and at that hour I had resolved to start from Mr. Wilson's on my way to Roding. Yet now I dared not leave my own house. Any moment might bring Philippa. What would she think if I was not there to receive and welcome her?

Five more precious moments gone! I stamped in my rage. After all, I can only do one-half of my task; the sweet, but not the stern half. Shall I, indeed, do either? The train must now be close to Roding. In an hour everything may be lost. The man will see her before she leaves the house. He will persuade her. She will listen to his words; for did he not once love her? He must have loved her! After all, he broke the laws for the sake of possessing her, and —cursed thought!—she loved him then; and she is but a woman!

So I tortured myself until my state of mind grew unbearable. At all hazards I must prevent Ferrand from meeting Philippa. Oh, why had she not come as she promised? Could it be she was detained against her will? In spite of her uninterested manner I distrusted the woman I had seen last night. It is now past seven o'clock. Philippa's house, from which I had reckoned my time, was nearly three miles away. I must give up my scheme of vengeance. I must go in search of Philippa. If I do not meet her I must call at Mrs. Wilson's, find out what detains her, and if needful bear her away by force.

By this time my steps had brought me back to my own house. I called William, and told him I was going to walk up the road and meet my expected guest. If by any chance I should miss her he was to welcome her on my behalf, and tell her the reason for my absence.

"Best take a lantern, sir," said William; "moon'll be hidden, and them roads is precious rough."

"I can't be bothered with that great horn affair," I said, rather testily.

"Take the little one—the bull's eye—that's better than nothing," said William. To humor him I put it into my pocket.

I ran at the top of my speed to the house at which I had last night left Philippa. It took me nearly half an hour getting there. I rang the bell impetuously. The door was opened by a maid servant. I inquired for Mrs. Farmer, knowing that Philippa had passed under this name to all except her hostess. To my surprise I was told that she had left the house, on foot and alone, some little while ago. The maid believed she was not going to return, as her luggage had that morning been sent for.

The first effect of this intelligence was to cause me to blame my haste. I must have missed her: no doubt passed her on the road. No; such a thing was impossible. The way was a narrow one. The moon still gave some light. If I had met Philippa I must have seen her. She must have seen me, and would then have stopped me. She could not have gone the way I came.

But where was she? In what direction was I to seek her? Argue the matter as I would—loath as I was to allow myself to be convinced, I was bound to decide that she must have taken the path to Roding. There was no other. She had gone, even as I was going, to meet Ferrand. She may have started, intending to come to me; but at the last moment a desire to see the man once more—I fondly hoped for the purpose of heaping reproaches on his head—had mastered her. Yes, whatever her object might be, she had gone to meet him. And my heart sank as conviction was carried to it by the remembrance that coupled with her refusal to permit me to fetch her was an assertion that she had something to do before she came to me. That, as I now read it, could be but one thing—to meet this man!

Never again, if I can help it, shall his voice strike on her ear! Never again shall their eyes meet! Never again shall the touch of even his finger contaminate her! Let me follow, and stand between her and the scoundrel. If they meet he will wound her to the heart. Her pride will rise; she will threaten. Then the coward will try another line. He will plead for mercy; he will swear he still loves her; he will bait his hook with promises. She will listen; hesitate; perhaps yield, and find herself once more deceived. Then she will be lost to me forever. Now she is, in my eyes, pure as when first we met. Let me haste on, overtake, pass her; meet her betrayer, and, if needful, strike him to the ground.

As I turned from the house I became aware that a great and sudden change had come over the night. It seemed to me that, even in the few minutes which I had spent in considering what to do, the heavy clouds had banked and massed together. It was all but pitch-dark; so dark that I paused, and drawing from my pocket the lantern with which William's foresight had provided me, managed after several trials to light it. Then, impatient at the delay, I sped up the road.

I was now almost facing the wind. All at once, sharp and quick, I felt the blinding snow on my face. The wind moaned through the leafless branches on either side of the road. The snow flakes whirled madly here and there. Even in my excitement I was able to realize the fact that never before had I seen in England so fierce a snow storm, or one which came on so suddenly. And, like myself, Philippa was abroad, and exposed to its full fury. Heavens! she might lose her way, and wander about all night.

This fear quickened my steps. I forced my way on through the mad storm. For the time all thought of Sir Mervyn Ferrand and vengeance left my heart. All I now wanted was to find Philippa; to lead her home, and see her safe beneath my roof. "Surely," I said, as I battled along, "she cannot have gone much further."

I kept a sharp lookout—if, indeed, it can be called a lookout; for the whirling snow made everything, save what was within a few feet of me, invisible. I strained my ears to catch the faintest cry or other sound. I went on, flashing my lantern first on one and then on the other side of the road. My dread was that Philippa, utterly unable to fight against the white tempest, might be crouching under one of the banks, and if so I might pass without seeing her or even attracting her attention. My doing so on such a night as this might mean her death.

Oh, why had she not come as promised? Why had she gone to meet the man who had so foully wronged her? After what had happened, she could not, dared not love him. And for a dreary comfort I recalled the utter bitterness of her accent last night when she turned to me and said, "Basil, did you ever hate a man?" No, she could not love him!

These thoughts brought my craving for vengeance back to my mind. Where was Ferrand? By all my calculations, taking into account the time wasted at starting, I should by now have met him. Perhaps he had not come, after all. Perhaps the look of the weather had frightened him, and he had decided to stay at Roding for the night. I raged at the thought! If only I knew that Philippa was safely housed, nothing, in my present frame of mind, would have suited me better than to have met him on this lonely road, in the midst of this wild storm. If Philippa were only safe!

Still no sign of her. I began to waver in my mind. What if my first supposition, that I had passed her on the road, was correct? She might be now at my cottage, wondering what had become of me. Should I go further or turn back? But what would be my feelings if I did the latter and found when I arrived home that she had not made her appearance?

I halted, irresolute, in the centre of the road. Instinctively I beat my hands together to promote circulation. I had left my home hurriedly, and had made no provision for the undergoing of such an ordeal as this terrible, unprecedented snowstorm inflicted. In spite of the speed at which I had traveled, my hands and feet were growing numbed, my face smarted with the cold. Heaven help me to decide aright, whether to go on or turn back!

The decision was not left to me. Suddenly, close at hand, I heard a wild peal, a scream of laughter which made my blood run cold. Swift from the whirling, tossing, drifting snow emerged a tall gray figure. It swept past me like the wind; but as it passed me I knew that my quest was ended—that Philippa was found!

She vanished in a second, before the terror which rooted me to the spot had passed away. Then I turned and, fast as I could run, followed her, crying as I went, "Philippa! Philippa!"

I soon overtook her; but so dark was the night that I was almost touching her before I saw her shadowy, ghost-like form. I threw my arms round her and held her. She struggled violently in my grasp.

"Philippa, dearest! it is I, Basil," I said, bending close to her ear.

The sound of my voice seemed to calm her, or I should rather say she ceased to struggle.

"Thank heaven, I have found you!" I said. "Let us get back as soon as possible."

"Back! No! Go on, go on!" she exclaimed. "On, on, on, up the road yet awhile—on through the storm, through the snow—on till you see what I have left behind me! On till you see the wages of sin—the wages of sin!"

Her words came like bullets from a mitrailleuse. Through the night I could see her face gleaming whiter than the snow on her hood. I could see her great, fixed, dark eyes full of nameless horror.

"Dearest, be calm," I said, and strove to take her hands in mine.

As I tried to gain possession of her right hand something fell from it, and, although the road was now coated with snow, a metallic sound rang out as it touched the ground. Mechanically I stooped and picked up the fallen object.

As I did so, Philippa, with a wild cry, wrested herself from the one hand whose numbed grasp still sought to retain her, and with a frenzied reiteration of the words, "The wages of sin!" fled from me, and was lost in the night.

Even as I rushed in pursuit I shuddered as the sense of feeling told me what thing it was I had picked up from the snowy ground. It was a small pistol! Cold as the touch of

MAYO'S
Compound Vegetable Anæsthetic.
A safe and pleasant substitute for gas and ether.

Discovered by Dr. N. K. Mayo of Boston, April 1883, subsequently administered by him in nearly two thousand cases, producing perfect slumber, being applicable to the child, the delicate sentitive woman as well as the hardy man. No ill effects have followed its use in any case, it acting rather as a vegetable tonic.

It controls the patient one-fourth longer than gas giving us time to remove from three to twenty teeth. It is with great confidence we have introduced it into our practice, giving very successful results.

A FIRST-CLASS FAMILY MAGAZINE.
Lippincott's Magazine.
A Popular Monthly of General Literature.
ON THIS SIDE,
A new serial story, by F. C. Baylor, is commenced in this number.

Several chapters of Mary Agnes Tincker's charming story, AURORA, with a frontispiece, also appear, together with other Short Stories, Poems, and Articles of Interest upon Current Topics.

PROSPECTUS FOR 1885.

Among the chief periodicals of the country, Lippincott's Magazine has acquired the distinctive reputation of being "eminently readable.

Arrangements have been made for many contributions of special interest during the coming year. Among these particular attention is invited to a serial story entitled "On This Side," by F. C. Baylor, author of "The Perfect Treasure" (commenced in the January number), in which the experiences of an English baronet and his friends during a tour through the United States are related with a mirth-provoking humor, a knowledge and appreciation of national characteristics, and a perfect fairness of tone and freedom from caricature that cannot fail to secure critical approval and wide popularity. Miss Tincker's beautiful novel, "Aurora," will be completed in the summer, and will be followed by several stories in two or more parts, including "The Lady Lawyer's First Client," by the author of "A Latter-Day Saint." Sketches of Italian Life, by Mrs. Launt Thompson, an account of the Pioneers of Tennessee, by "Edmund Kirke," a narrative of the experiences of a Steerage Passenger to and from Liverpool, by Thomas Wharton, an article on Queen Anne, or Free Classic Architecture, by George C. Mason, Jr., and a Comedy for private theatricals, by James Payn, will be published in early numbers, together with the usual variety of short stories and articles of general interest by popular writers.

For sale by all newsdealers. 25c. per copy. $3 per annum.

SKATING RINK NOTES.

The first grand costume carnival was held at the Peabody Roller Skating Rink last Thursday evening and was very successful. There was a large audience present and they watched the skaters, and commented on the different costumes, holding their seats until after the prizes were awarded. Previous to the grand march the Salem Brass Band gave several fine selections. At 8.25 the grand march was started from the lower side of the rink where the skaters had formed behind a temporary curtain. There were 106 couples in the march, which was headed by Mr. Lewis Nevers and his sister, Miss Addie, followed by the two little Thomas girls in light and pleasing costumes. As the merry skaters wended their way in a serpentine course around the rink two clowns made their appearance and all through the evening kept the company in good humor. The following are the names of many of those in costume;

Miss Addie Nevers, fancy; Mrs. Frank Mason, grand-mother; Miss Cronin, Lady of the Lake; Minnie Wheeler, Salem, fancy; Nellie Stewart, Mother Hubbard; Ella Lewis, Topsy; Nellie S. Dwyer, Battery C. M. V. M., G. A. Ingalls, Mother Hubbard, Mr. Peach, military, all of Lynn. We will not speak of the different costumes, all did well and each showed excellent taste in their selections. The judges were Messrs. James A. Todd of Salem, O. W. Upham, AlbertVittum, Miss Alice Nelson and Mrs. Warren Shaw of Peabody, and at 9.30 they reported to Manager McCully as follows. Handsomest Ladies' costume prize $10 in gold, Miss Addie Nevers of Peabody, who wore a fancy suit. Handsomest gentleman's costume, prize $10 in gold, Mr. John F. Driscoll of Peabody, Olivette. Best burlesque ladies costume, Miss Bell Jeffrey of Salem, representing Mrs. Sarah Nagle, a well known character of that city. Best burlesque gents' costume, Joseph F. Bessom of Marblehead, representing an Italian tramp, a character from a play at the Bijou theatre at Boston. The skating was kept up till 10. 30 o'clock. Special horse cars were provided to take the skaters to Salem and Lynn.

The return game of polo between the Peabodys and Globes of Haverhill was played last Wednesday night and won by the Peabodys securing the second goal in 3 1-2 minutes, the fourth in 5 minutes and fifth in three minutes. The Globes won the first goal in six minutes and the third goal in 5 1-2 minutes. John F. Finn was referee.

W. H. Upton was referee of a polo game at Quincy, last Wednesday night, between the R. H. Whites and the Coliseums of that town.

It is respectfully suggested to the Massachusetts League management, that they appoint more official referees.

The following is the letter of resignation of Mr. E. W. Grant of Chelsea, secretary of the Mass. Polo League to Mr. H. N. McCully:

OFFICE OF THE MASSACHUSETTS POLO LEAGUE,
BOSTON, January, 10, 1885.

H. N. McCully, Esq., President Massachusetts Polo League:—

DEAR SIR—It is with very considerable regret that I ask you to accept this as a notification of my resignation as secretary of the Massachusetts Polo League. This resignation I desire to take effect immediately, as I am assuming other duties. My sole reasons for resigning are of pecuniary nature, otherwise I should have been glad to continue my position in the League, and I assure you that I shall always take a keen interest in polo matters, and in those of the Massachusetts League in particular, which I know will be successfully conducted under your able presidency. My connection with the League has been of a very pleasant nature, both in an official and in a personal way, and I express again my sincere regret at being obliged to sever my official connection with it. I wish it every and all success in the future, and shall always take an active interest in its welfare. Obediently,

E. W. GRANT, Secretary.

Mr. W. F. Kenney of Woburn, who was strongly recommended by Mr. Grant, was elected Secretary at the meeting last Friday.

The new schedule of polo games to be played at the Peabody skating rink in the Mass. League series with the Peabodys, is as follows:—Maldens, Jan. 20; Paris, Jan. 28; Stars, of Haverhill, Feb. 3; Brockton Citys, Feb. 12; Bay States, Feb. 27; Gloucesters, March 19; Stars, of Haverhill, March 26; Woburns, April 2; Maldens, April 10; Bay States, April 17; Globes, Apr. 23; Gloucesters, May 7; Woburns, May 21.

On Thursday evening, Feb. 5th, the Peabody Bicycle Club has engaged the rink for that evening and will present the following attractions: Skating from 7.30 to 9 o'clock, when Mr. Wm. W. Marshall of the Thorndike Club, of Beverly, will give one of his fine exhibitions. Mr. Marshall is the champion of Essex County; this is to be followed by a Slow Race for an elegant Gold Medal. Mr. Edward McLaughlin, the contortionist, will also appear and give an exhibition. The last on the programme will be an Obstical Race; this will be the exciting race of the evening, for which a gold medal will also be given to the successful contestant. After the exhibition there will be dancing till 12 o'clock.

To-morrow evening the Father Matthew C. T. A. Societies of Peabody and Salem have hired the Salem Skating Rink and in addition to skating, dancing and other amusement, will offer an exhibition game of polo between the Peabodys and Wright & Ditson's. The latter are professional players and the game will be a very interesting one. Probably a goodly number of the frienda of the Peabody boys will be on hand.

The Peabody Bicycle Club was only organized last November, but it is now on a firm basis. Its exhibition at the roller skating rink, February 5, will consist of slow and obstacle bicycle races, each for a gold medal; an exhibition by Edward McLaughlin, and general skating and dancing. Entries for the races are to be sent to William H. Friend, Peabody skating rink. party go from here.

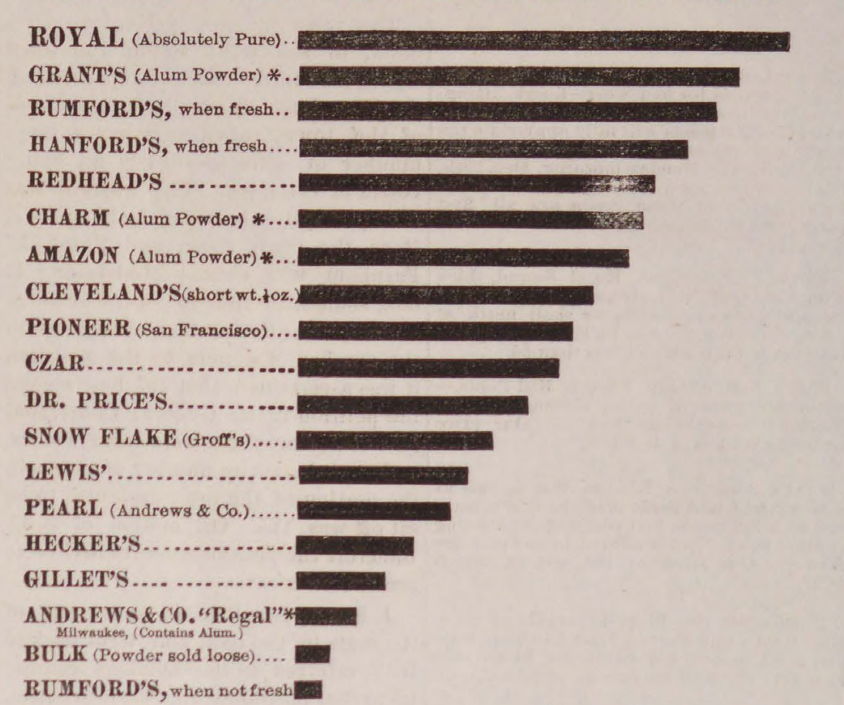
On Friday evening the Peabodys will play the Tauntons at Taunton in an exhibition game.

On the first evening of the Gloucester and Peabody game, the Paris club of East Boston will be here as spectators, coming in a tally-ho-coach. The Paris boys speak very highly of our club, and say we are the only club who can hold them a good game.

The Peabodys play the Maldens a return game at Malden to-night.

Don't forget the benefit, Jan. 29th!

COMPARATIVE WORTH OF BAKING POWDERS.



REPORTS OF GOVERNMENT CHEMISTS

As to Purity and Wholesomeness of the Royal Baking Powder.

"I have tested a package of Royal Baking Powder, which I purchased in the open market, and find it composed of pure and wholesome ingredients. It is a cream of tartar powder of a high degree of merit, and does not contain either alum or phosphates, or other injurious substances. E. G. LOVE, Ph.D."

"It is a scientific fact that the Royal Baking Powder is absolutely pure. "H. A. MOTT, Ph.D."

"I have examined a package of Royal Baking Powder, purchased by myself in the market. I find it entirely free from alum, terra alba, or any other injurious substance. HENRY MORTON, Ph.D., President of Stevens Institute of Technology."

"I have analyzed a package of Royal Baking Powder. The materials of which it is composed are pure and wholesome. S. DANA HAYES, State Assayer, Mass."

The Royal Baking Powder received the highest award over all competitors at the Vienna World's Exposition, 1873; at the Centennial, Philadelphia, 1876; at the American Institute, New York, and at State Fairs throughout the country.

No other article of human food has ever received such high, emphatic, and universal endorsement from eminent chemists, physicians, scientists, and Boards of Health all over the world.

NOTE—The above DIAGRAM illustrates the comparative worth of various Baking Powders, as shown by Chemical Analysis and experiments made by Prof. Schedler. A pound can of each powder was taken, the total leavening power or volume in each can calculated, the result being as indicated. This practical test for worth by Prof. Schedler only proves what every observant consumer of the Royal Baking Powder knows by practical experience, that, while it costs a few cents per pound more than ordinary kinds, it is far more economical, and, besides, affords the advantage of better work. A single trial of the Royal Baking Powder will convince any fair minded person of these facts.

* While the diagram shows some of the alum powders to be of a higher degree of strength than other powders ranked below them, it is not to be taken as indicating that they have any value. All alum powders, no matter how high their strength, are to be avoided as dangerous.

JOHN P FERNALD, ALBERT VITTUM,
Editors and Publishers

THE ATTITUDE of some of the leading democratic congressmen last week in Congress, brings to our notice the fact that their free trade tendencies are beginning to show themselves, and that the issue between protection and free trade is to be met in this country, and in a manner new to this generation of voters. The recent organization of a protective association in one of our large cities designed to be national in its character, would seem to indicate that this is being realized.

It is urged by many democrats here in New England, and by many of those who allied themselves with the democrats at the last election, that they are not free traders. And this may be true. And it is also a common expression, by those who do not understand the matter, that there is little or no difference between the two parties on the matter of protection. This is very far from being true. Despite the views of some of the prominent leaders on both sides, the course of the Republican party, since 1860, has been steadily in the line of protection, while the attitude of the democratic party has been in opposition to it.

It does not follow, because a man is a protectionist, that he is not in favor of a revision of the tariff. Here is where a great mistake is made. Most Republicans are ready to follow Henry Cabot Lodge in this respect. It is not the amount of protection put upon an article that makes a protectionist. It is the principle of the thing. It is whether he is in favor of any protection at all, in opposition to absolute free trade.

The free traders, knowing as they do, that this distinction is not fairly understood, are apt to disguise their intentions under the pretext of a revision of the tariff, and as their intentions become more developed, it will become the young men of this country to inform themselves more thoroughly on this subject. The discussion on the matter have been confined, of late, mostly to platitudes by our campaign orators. But the real issue is deeper than this, and must be met by the intelligence and education in the matter of the common people.

We consider it a matter of much regret that the instructors in political economy in our collegiate institutions are free traders. It is so in Yale; it is so in Amherst, and we think it is so in Harvard. Not only this, but they teach absolute free trade to the young men under their care. They are sowing a seed which cannot fail in the future to have its results. We believe they are treading on dangerous ground. And whatever the sentiment of this country, as a whole, that of New England, unquestionably, without reference to party, is in favor of protection. Yet here are at least three New England Colleges, teaching the children of the fathers who have been and are life long protectionists, the very doctrine which they know to be fallacious and wrong in principle. We feel and have felt for a long time, that this ought not to be so. And in the agitation that must come in the future on this matter, it will be more and more realized.

Mr. Ives, at the "Old Corner Bookstore," is offering great bargains in note paper and envelopes, and it is a good time to lay in a stock for future use. Prices will not long remain at present figures, if we rightly read the indications.

TOWN MEETING.

The town meeting yesterday afternoon, to see what action the town would take in relation to the petition of the West Peabody people for a division of the town, called together a large number of citizens—nearly all being voters of the town. The warrant was read promptly at two o'clock by Mr. Poor, the town clerk, and Frank E. Farnham was chosen Moderator. It took some little time to get the business started, and after some questions as to the number of signers to the petition, it was ascertained that 107 had signed the petition to the General Court, that all but two or three were legal voters, and that the entire number of voters in the portion of the town designed to be set off was 115. On motion of S. C. Bancroft the petitioners were invited to present their case.

J. Shedd Needham mounted one of the seats in the hall, and went back to 1630; referred to the Quakers coming up in that portion of the town to settle, the Buxtons, the Needhams and Osborns. The speaker was a lineal descendant of those old settlers; he was born in a house built in 1656. The people there had lived one hundred years under the jurisdiction of Salem; one hundred years under Danvers; he referred to the division of the town 30 years ago; the West Peabody people took no part in that division. It was all done by So. Danvers alone. North Danvers had very little to say about the line. But there was some difficulty about the line, and West Peabody chose to come this way; there was a good thoroughfare this way—the best in town. Danvers said "they did not care much about them; they were only a grasshopper region, anyway." Their Quaker blood could not take this in. So they decided to go with South Danvers, they got up a petition, went to Otis P. Lord to advocate their claims before the Governor's Commission, and had been with this town since. Its misfortunes had met with their sorrow; they had had all they asked of the town; all they asked now was to be allowed to go in peace; hoped that every citizen would vote to let them go; they intended to fight it out, if it takes more than all summer.

Rev. Willard Spaulding was the next speaker. He said it was a comforting thought that if they went away they would do the rest of the town no harm. They would leave eight square miles of territory, sufficient to accommodate 100,000 inhabitants. They would leave all its industries intact. They would leave nearly 10,000 inhabitants—a very respectable town. They would leave 2400 polls—the 115 would be scarcely missed. They would leave $6,500,000 of money—the town would never miss the small pittance that would be left to them after the payment of their taxes. It would not weaken the town in the least. One or two years would bring more polls than they would take away. If the town would consent to the addition of one mill more to their tax, they would have more money in the treasury—they would not miss the one mill gathered from West Peabody. It was joy to think they would leave the town not weak, not feeble, not poor.

The people whom he represented had passed the Rubicon: they had burned their boats behind them. The town had passed their Rubicon thirty years ago. They were only imitating its example. He was very glad to have the number questioned of those who had signed, the petition and who were left. He would not feel that joy if it were only a majority; but there were only a few left—representing less than $300—and they would be with us if it were not for satisfactory reasons which he was not at liberty to present. They would not look back till the entire field was cultivated and the harvest gathered. We want to go out. We mean to go out—after long consideration. Did the town want to hold their bands under these circumstances? He did not believe it had this desire. They were removed a considerable distance from this house—characterized by the learned orator who delivered the dedicatory address, as your future municipal home. There intervenes a broad and barren belt of land running from Danvers to Lynnfield a mile and a half in breadth. It has been in the same condition 250 years—and will likely remain in that state, a rocky hill on the north, a low narrow meadow along the road which we travel in our journey to the town, before us a ledgy hill, an unproductive section. They were four miles from this municipal home; had to travel eight miles every town meeting, and if, as at the last one, it took two days, they had a journey of sixteen miles. They had to travel it sometimes in the night—as when this temple was initiated. It was something of a task—they were all farmers, 100 owners of the soil. The speaker said coming events cast their shadows before. In the political world these were cast in the caucus room. Everything nowadays was cut and dried. And in the kindness of their heart, the people of the center of the town had consented to do most of the cutting and drying. They had not always forgotten West Peabody in town officers; but they had sometimes forgotten the survival of the fittest; the speaker would not have them take the Lilliputian but the strong man. Our civil home would not be so grand as this house; but it would seat three times as many as there were voters, and there was a sufficiency of air to breathe. They were within three quarters of a mile mostly from their civil home. They would have no opera hall; no court room in the basement, but they were satisfied.

The speaker did not like boundaries of the compass as applied to municipalities. They were a crowning nuisance, as applied to towns. He referred to the mail facilities, and spoke of a time during the past campaign when he was expected to save the country one Friday night; flaming posters had announced his appearance but he was not there. On the following Tuesday he received the notice that he was expected to speak on the preceding Friday. The Postmaster in Peabody had told him it was a common occurrence—this plying back and forth of the mails. Sometimes the same letter went back and forth between Boston and Peabody and West Peabody a week before it reaches its destination. It was the same way in telegraphing. He had paid $1 and $2 for a telegram that should cost but a shilling. This annoyance was the same when they were West Danvers—ever since they had a post office. There was no remedy until they were an independent town, with an independent name. They wanted to live where they could get a letter in the same year in which it was written; they wanted to live somewhere; now they lived nowhere, and they did not like the locality.

The people of West Peabody were going in on the equities of the case; they had no money; they believed in justice and right. If they could not win with justice they would not win at all. They had burdens laid upon them which they ought not to bear. He did not say it was impossible to bear them now; or in the near future. They were willing to come and appeal to the consciences of the town; they did not come with deception. They came with honesty and asked a just relief.

The speaker then referred to the expenses of the different departments of the town. First the health department, a very important one. There had been expended $8000—not one dollar of it in West Peabody. It was not the town's fault, but it was not right that they should bear the burden of it.

The Police Department had cost not less than $80,000 since Peabody was an independent town—and this year not less than $8000. How much of it had been expended in West Peabody? Not $8.00, and not over $300—in the whole $80,000. The people of West Peabody are a law unto themselves. The town is not to blame; but if none of the benefits come to us, ought we to pay $600 or $700 towards it?

In the department of Schools—and he disliked to say anything on this department—half a million of dollars had been expended for an educational fund in 30 years. Some $15,000 had been paid by West Peabody, more than had been received by them.

The Alms House cost $5000 a year to run. How much of it (out of the 600 or 700 out-of-door poor) had gone to West Peabody? Less than $200. They estimated that in the division $400 at the outside would take care of their poor. In 30 years the town had expended $175,000 on their poor. How much had come to West Peabody? Not one-third in the proportion measured by taxation. Is this right?

Then there is the street lighting. He estimated there were about thirty miles of lights. They run almost to Danvers—almost to Lynnfield. Of all the luminous spots on the globe Peabody is nearest the meridian of day. They cost money. West Peabody is left to wander by the stars. Is it right that we should give to the town the light of evening with the same generosity as God gives the light of day? It is of no benefit to us.

Of the property of this town $130,000 worth is bought and paid for; the rest is represented by $20,000 interest, for improvements of no benefit to us—including this temple. Our proportion of interest is $1500—and it is a burden upon us. It belongs to the center of the town to pay the interest for these things which we have no use for.

Then the Fire Department. The speaker here explained his action at the Town meeting in the spring. Denied that he voted for the additional pay, just to win their support. He did not do business that way. He was ready to fight for justice, even if defeated. Well, the Fire Department had cost $175,000—this year $8000.—Of what use was it to West Peabody? He had owned his present residence 20 years; had never seen a steamer but once, and then it arrived too late to cool the embers. Once previous it had come to the mills, but it was of no service, and the outcome of the visitation was that it run over a man. Is it worth $800 or $900 to us? The speaker said they were paying $4000 more than was returned to them, and from which they got no benefit. He went to the Town clerk a few days since to see if the town Fathers were running the expenses of the town on the solid basis marked out for them by the Finance Committee. He found they were all "up in a balloon." He had prepared some figures which he thought might be interesting to the people—had given them to the Salem News. A few days after he read in the Boston Journal that the people of Peabody were "mightily amused" at Spaulding's figures. The people of West Peabody were running in a tax got out their mother earth; they were sending $15 00 a day, Sundays and every day for things that were of no benefit to them. Well, they were "mightily amused" at his figures. He had revised them. If you want to get at the whole truth you must go round the circle of apostles. He had sliced off a little in one place; and he had sliced on more in another; had sliced on a fee of $500 to Judge Endicott in a matter that the town counsel did not know enough to handle. He thought the slicing on would amount to as much as the slicing off.

He reckoned the people of Peabody were paying nearly $19.00 a thousand tax. The people of West Peabody are farmers. Their farms lie out of doors. God knows where the rich man's farm lies. It is invisible. The farms were taxed 25 per cent. more than they were worth. He was taxed $25.00 on a thousand—taking his property at its market value, and he was paying what a poor man always pays—a disadvantageous interest. All he wanted was to get an honest living.

In thirty years West Peabody had paid into the treasury $180,000. Less than $80,000 had been returned to her. The other $100,000 had been won by honest toil, and as lost to them as if sunk in the bottomless pit. If put in the Savings Bank it would be worth more to-day than every rod of land across the line. The speaker asked again if this was right. Where would this town be in a city government, with all the Town Fathers mayors of the city? The present town government was the greatest burlesque on a town government ever seen in the State. There were more expenses yet to come. Does the town want to burden us with this taxation? They had gone to the Old Commonwealth with justice. They had come here at the invitation of the town. Will the town meet us there to thrust us back into the retreating surges? He did not believe they would.

C. Warren Osborn, who was a member of the Finance Committee last year, gave his remembrance of the work of that Committee. They agreed to report $20 as the pay of the Firemen—and to this Mr. Spaulding agreed,—and signed the report. In Town Meeting he went back on the committee. Whether or not he did it to carry a point he could not say, but it looked like it. He did not blame the Firemen—and he thought our Fire Department the equal of any around—but he wanted the public to understand the matter. Mr. Osborn said in reference to the division of the town that it looked funny to him. There was Mr. Spaulding had lived in town 14 years. He was a citizen and paid a tax in 1873. That was the year they built the engine house. A few years ago they purchased the water works. Then they built the town house, and other improvements. Where was the gentleman all this time? In West Peabody, looking after his farm. The speaker had attended town meeting every year, and he never heard the gentleman open his mouth till last year, with one exception. He was at home and could not attend to it—he had left it to men who had no brains. Here was a man of sagacity, of intellect, of ability—who would not help the town a particle all these years. But this exceptional case, when the gentleman came to town meeting. There was a little curve in front of his house, and he wanted it made straight, and wanted the town to take the gravel from his hill. But in regard to the division, Mr. Osborne was not in favor of dividing up towns. The end must come somewhere. So. Peabody might ask to be set off. We are a manufacturing section. The people of West Peabody are farmers. It was better that both sections should live together. As far as the tax is concerned, it would not amount to much if they lost West Peabody. But they wanted the people in the town. They wanted the reverend gentleman to be here. They wanted him to be at town meetings, to stir up things and keep us straight.

Jonathan King said his sympathy had been somewhat with the petitioners, but if they should succeed what would become of the "Kingdom"? Would we not be on the outskirts? Suppose there should be an attempt to build another building like this, who would there be to help oppose it? So. Peabody would next be petitioning to join Lynn. Let us look and see where we stand. If they succeed, it would be a difficult matter to make a satisfactory division of the towns.

Rufus H. Brown said the principle of the thing was all wrong—this separation of the agricultural interests from the manufacturing. If carried out, there were many other just such cases where the State would be called upon when the farming interests adjoined the manufacturing. In the division of the town of Danvers there was good reason for it; there were two thickly settled villages, each had banks, churches and stores—everything necessary to make up a town in itself. There was no such reason in this case. It was a sparsely settled place—no center, not even a grocery store. There were a number of farms scattered over a wide area. There was not that reason for going to a center, which appeared to be growing. The farms were just the same as they had been for fifty years. There were few new houses. The people all come to Peabody and are identified with its interests. No one ever dreamed of having a town there, except the gentleman from West Peabody (Mr. Spaulding.) He did not believe they were unduly taxed. The amount the town received from that section was $8500. They claim that $4000 of that is expended there. They have two tax payers who pay $3000. If they always remain that $3000 might be of benefit; but if they should leave the taxes very likely would be as high as now—possibly more. They might save something now, but in a few years they would be taxed as much. It is a great advantage to have a conservative element with us. They would have a great influence in checking undue expenditures. We could not afford as a town to lose them. They would be a little small town of one hundred inhabitants, and they would lose their identity. It had been the policy of the town to tax lightly the farming sections.

J. Shedd Needham got the floor long enough to say that the division of the town of Danvers was all owing to the whig and anti-slavery movement; that the people in Peabody of the Republican party were now all anxious to have the West Peabody people remain; that the gentleman who spoke (Mr. C. W. Osborn) had opposed a fire engine a few years ago "for the little houses over there." Having made these few remarks Needham jumped over the seats in front of him and suddenly made himself scarce.

John Linehan wanted to know where the engine house was, referred to by Mr. Needham. He thought Mr. Osborn was right—there was no need of an engine house in West Peabody. He was not in favor of divisions; he was in doubt if the old town of Danvers had gained anything by the division. They had put in two separate water works; whereas if they had kept together one would have done for both. Mr. Linehan thought we, as a town, had something to show for our indebtedness. He paid more taxes than he ought to; but he thought the town now had all they needed, and he was hoping that the taxes would be less. West Peabody was fortunate if they did not have a poor man in town; and as to light, they did not need any; they all went to bed at sundown. The gentleman forgot to mention in the expenditures for West Peabody the item of $800 in front of his own house, to make his way straight, not his own, probably, but the road. The credit of the town was good; West Peabody had two or three big tax payers—jumpers—but they had got a scheme now on foot to levy the taxes in November, and they would then be moving out.

Mr. Spaulding admitted that there were two wealthy men in his part of the town. But were there none in the center? If the town would not take $1500 of the small tax payers we would not think so hardly. Our wealthy men may move away: but do those in the center live forever? If you put up taxes to $20 and $25 they would leave. They could go to any city or town and they would not find a municipality in which they would not be the gainer. There would be no trouble in the division; we should take our part and the town theirs. This is not a new case; there were originally only nine towns in the county; now there were forty. West Peabody had a school house and a depot which might be called a center, a hall, and a grocery. Have no town house like this—no 40 or 50 grog shops, no lawyers or doctors. He did not consider that any of his arguments had been answered. They were going on, and would like to have the town join. We will do the town no harm; it will add but a finger's weight to its tax, but will remove from us a burden that is weighing us down to the dust. He closed with an eloquent appeal to the people of Peabody for justice.

Mr. Farley said the matter of the Post office could be easily remedied, and every citizen would help Mr. Spaulding in that matter. In regard to the payment of taxes, very many men in every town pay taxes where they receive no direct benefit. Twenty per cent. of the tax was the school tax; yet many men pay it who have no children and receive no benefit from it. If the property in West Peabody was not equitably assessed, there was not a man in town but would favor adjusting it. His judgment was in favor of large municipalities, and that it was better for all parties to have varying interests. The division would be a great mistake.

Mr. Brown had moved that the town instruct our representative to oppose the granting the prayer of the petitioners. Mr. Spaulding moved to amend that the matter be indefinitely postponed. This was lost by a vote of 36 to 100. The motion of Mr. Brown was then carried. Mr. Brown further moved that a committee of ten be appointed by the chair, to act with the Selectmen in opposing the division. This was carried and the following committee were named by the chair: Rufus H. Brown, Chas. B. Farley, C. Warren Osborn, B. F. Southwick, Lyman Osborn, Amos Merrill, John Linehan, Geo. H. Poor, Alonzo Raddin, Frank T. Arnold.

PETITION.

To the Honorable the Board of Railroad Commissioners.

Respectfully represents the Eastern Railroad Company a corporation duly established under the laws of this Commonwealth, that it is desirous of building a branch or extension of its road one-fifth of a mile in length or thereabouts from a point in the Town of Peabody southeasterly from the Peabody station, in that part of its road known as the Lawrence Branch, in a northeasterly direction across land of different persons to the junction of Walnut and Upton streets, thence in a northeasterly direction longitudinally through said Upton street to a point at or near the tanning and currying establishment of Thomas E. Proctor, for a more particular description of the route of which proposed branch, of the land to be taken and of the parties owning or claiming to own the same, as well as for an estimate of the cost of constructing said branch the petitioner refers to exhibit "A" and to the plan submitted herewith. And the petitioner further says that it proposes to build said branch without issuing additional capital stock and without increasing its indebtedness; and that public convenience and necessity require the construction of said branch railroad as above described.

Wherefore the petitioner prays that your Honorable Board will take such action in the premises as law and justice may require and will grant to it a certificate that public necessity and convenience require the construction of said branch railroad.

EASTERN RAILROAD COMPANY,
(signed) RICHARD OLNEY, Attorney.

HOME HAPPENINGS.

A very pleasant anniversary of the 80th birthday of Mrs. Paul Hildreth was observed last Friday evening. Her children and grandchildren conceived the idea of giving her a surprise on this occasion and it was successfully carried out. Mrs. Hildreth not having the least suspicion of the affair until she was taken by storm, as it were, at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. William Upton on Main street. There were twenty-one present, but many of her Lynn relatives were prevented from coming on account of the very severe weather. Mrs. Hildreth was the recipient of many useful articles, the presentation being made by Miss Mary W. Ferguson, the oldest of her grandchildren. Refreshments followed and a general good time, the company separating with the best of wishes for "many happy returns" of the day.

Last Thursday evening a man brought a team to Simonds' stable to put up, stating that he was going to Salem and would return later in the evening. The man evidently came from the vicinity of Topsfield and had been selling vegetables around town. He had probably imbibed too much of the ardent and did not return that night, nor had he turned up Monday night, when the owner of the team had put in appearance, a Mr. Kohler living just across the line in Ipswich. He had loaned the team to the man who brought it to the stable—Jas. Harrington of Topsfield. He took the team away, and at last accounts was looking for the man to whom he had lent the team.

On the train the other day one of our business men, who evidently has not quite got over the defeat of his favorite candidates, was joking a Democratic friend and said "You must feel cheap, that Halpin matter will cling to your President during his administrative term." "Don't you deceive yourself" replied the Democrat, "It is a well known fact that the next Postmaster General will cause a new postage stamp to be engraved with the vignette of Maria, thus allowing the highly sensitive Republicans to apply the osculatory process to the reverse side for four years." The laugh was on our business man and he invited the friend to the smoking car, so we hear.

About 30 members of Holten Lodge, I. O. O. F., visited Beverly last Saturday night, to see the degree staff of Howard Lodge of Charlestown exemplify the work of the first and second degree in the lodge room of Bass River Lodge. There were about 600 brothers present and they were well repaid for going over. The Howard Lodge has a membership of 600, and is about the largest one in the state. It has altogether a fund of nearly $35,000, and a prospect of a good amount from a legacy left to it after the death of a lady. Not long since a bequest of $5000 was added to the treasury.

There was a large audience at the skating rink last evening to witness the first game of polo between the Maldens of Malden and the Peabodys. The game was called at 9 o'clock. H. L. Foss of Haverhill acted as referee. The first rush was secured by the Maldens and the goal secured to the Peabodys in 10 seconds by Goulding. The Maldens secured the rush in the second goal but it was captured by Phalen after playing 2 minutes and 40 seconds. The rush in the third goal the Peabodys got and they soon had the goal after a play of 1 minute and 45 seconds Phalen sending the ball home.

It may be of interest to know before whom the hearing on the division of the town will come in the Legislature. The following is the joint committee on towns. They are most all country members: Messrs. Sessions of Hampden, Sanderson of Middlesex, Gove of Suffolk, of the Senate; Messrs. Emery of Cambridge, Savery of Middleboro', Dennis of Lowell, Thayer of Norwood, Manly of Hardwick, Goff of Rehoboth, Litchfield of Scituate, Root of Pittsfield, of the House.

There was a new game in vogue last week Friday and Saturday. It may be classed as a healthful out of door sport, but will never become popular, but the result is very pleasing to pedestrians. It is far ahead of "polo" and is called "shovello." The game is played on the side walk (either wood or iron is used) take either side of the street and remove from the walk all congealed water and throw it over the curb stone. Did you ever play it? It is very exciting.

N. W. Andrews will bring to Mechanic Hall, Salem, Friday evening and Saturday afternoon, the drama of Uncle Tom's Cabin. Miss Daisy Markoe, announced as the premiere Topsy, will appear supported by the "Boston Ideal Company." Popular prices will prevail at both performances and tickets are for sale at G. A. Newhall's 207 Essex street.

Rev. Mr. Chipman, of the Baptist church, writes from Barnwell, S. C., where he has removed to from Clinton. He says, "we have come down here hoping this place will prove more beneficial to Mrs. Chipman's health. It is near Aiken, and on the same sand belt and pine region. Mrs. Chipman has improved somewhat. The weather is delightful, violets are blooming, the farmers are plowing and getting ready for spring planting."

The members of the W. C. T. Union who came out in the storm to the meeting last Friday were abundantly repaid by hearing the admirable papers read by Mrs M. O. Stevens on "Breaking Stones." It was prepared with great care and thought and research, going back to the early ages of Egyptian history, and showing who have been the breakers of stone in each period. It it is a paper well worthy of being heard by a larger audience.

Mrs. Ernest Campbell was visiting friends in Haverhill last week, and while there slipped and fell on the ice, sustaining what was supposed to be a sprain of the wrist. Since her arrival home, her wrist pained her so that a physician was called and it was found that the wrist was broken. The fracture was quickly reduced.

Several Peabody people left for Washington, D. C., last Friday on a Raymond excursion. Among them were Mrs. A. W. Bancroft, Miss Lizzie Bancroft, Mrs. James P. King, Mrs. Thomas E. Wilson, Mr. Jacob Osborn and wife.

The police raided Ellen Hayes, P. Mahoney and the saloon at the corner of Spring and Foster streets Saturday evening; at the latter place they captured both hard and soft liquors. Monday night they captured some ale from Timothy Riordan.

People who always snatch for the first and best of everything, and push themselves forward to satisfy their greedy and arrogant dispositions, never win lasting friends. What friendships they do form are fleeting, soon gone and never to be renewed.

General Manager Furber, President Lord, Master of Transportation Sanborn, and other officers of the Boston & Maine road, made a tour along the line of the Eastern division, Thursday. The train was made up of Boston & Maine rolling stock. Wonder how Mr. Furber liked our fountain.

Mr. Irvin W. Allen, proprietor of the Beverly Citizen, was united in marriage last week to Miss Mabel Griffin of Gloucester, the Rev. William Ryder officiating. We tender our congratulations and wish the young couple a life of happiness.

There is a talk of forming a lodge of the Independent Order of Red Men in town. This is a beneficiary order, which is extending all over the country affording insurance to the amount of $2000 and paying sick and funeral benefits.

All attempts to disguise the facts are useless. We have known it for three days, but thought the least said about it the better, but painful as the statement may be to many of our readers, it becomes our duty as faithful journalists to fearlessly and pointedly say—it is cold.

Two large steam boilers consigned to W. H. Brown, the glue man, arrived in town yesterday from the Cunningham Iron Works Company of Boston. They weighed about eight tons each, and are the largest in town except the Bleachery.

Gov. John D. Long has been requested by the Washington Monument Committee to read Mr. Winthrop's oration at the dedication, and has consented. The request was made at the suggestion of Mr. Winthrop.

Four of the presidents of the United States have been inaugurated on a Wednesday—Thomas Jefferson, Andrew Jackson, Millard Fillmore and James Buchanan. President Cleveland will be the fifth.

We found on our desk this week a "demand cheque" on the Bank of Prosperity for three hundred and sixty-five happy days in 1885, value received in friendship. Will the giver please accept our blessing.

The Boston & Maine furnished free tickets to all employes who attended the telegraph operators' ball at Charlestown last Friday evening.

Rev. W. G. Spaulding has appointed himself as financier of the town, and called into the Salem News office the other day and gave them the following figures for publication. "The income of Peabody from all sources during the year just closed was $109,140; the expenditures, $128,711, leaving a balance of $19,571, which sum is provided for out of the unexpended balance of the previous year. This will make the rate of taxation for the current year $19 on a thousand. The real estate of West Peabody, as tested by three recent sales, is assessed for one-quarter more than its market value, making the actual tax paid by the owners of that property nearly $25 per thousand." Mr. S. is a little previous, as the year does not close till February. There are a few little discrepencies which are characteristic of the Rev. gentleman. There was an item of $21,000 paid out for interest which he didn't give. The Poor department has over drawn $4000 which will be returned by the receipts from the farm of $4500. The interest is paid from the receipts of the Water Department.

There are several improvements that could be made with advantage in our Town Hall. But there are two that would add much to the convenience of the public, and could be made at a small expense. One is a railing in front of the ticket offices. This is almost indispensable at the office where admission tickets are sold, as no officer can prevent the crowd from rushing towards the window from all points. With a railing a line could easily be formed, and it would avoid the crowding and rushing which is always the case at the first opening of the doors. The other improvement would be the substitution of green doors, opening both ways, at the entrance of the hall. The noise and squeaking accompanying the opening of the heavy wooden doors at present in use can be heard in every part of the hall. If the hall is to be used to any extent these improvements would be an accommodation the public would appreciate.

The Warren National Bank has rather an interesting picture of Peabody square as it was forty years ago. It was copied and enlarged from one of their old State Bank bills by Mrs. A. P. Newhall. It shows the location of several buildings which have been demolished or moved away during the intervening time, also the old pump where many a weary wayfarer quenched his thirst, also the old "Hourly" whose route was between Salem and Peabody and which has given place to the horse cars.

The Sam Lucas Jubilee Concert Co., appeared for the second time in the Town Hall last Sunday evening to an audience of about eight hundred people. This time the audience were not disappointed at the non-appearance of Wallace King. He was heartily welcomed and his fine tenor voice rang through the hall with a clearness and volume such as few tenors possess. The programme was otherwise changed from that of the previous Sabbath and gave good satisfaction.

Past Commander George A. Patch will deliver a lecture on the "Battle of Antietam" together with a rambling sketch of his own capture at that battle, his forced journey to Richmond, and his imprisonment at Libby Prison. Mr. Patch is an eloquent speaker, full of enthusiasm, and his experience in the Rebellion and his subsequent researches will qualify him for his task. He has delivered this lecture at many places with marked success. Our readers may look for him, under the direction of Post 50, G. A. R., about the middle of next month.

The readings of Prof. Churchill in the Town Hall, last Thursday evening, were heartily enjoyed by a large audience. Prof. Churchill has favored Peabody with his selections many times—and always with pleasure to his hearers. It is but fair, however, to say that no reader has appeared in Peabody who has given so much satisfaction as Edward K. Hood, of Lynn, who appeared in the Institute Course earlier in the season.

Mrs. George K. Wiggin, living on Washington street, died at her residence last Friday afternoon. She was the wife of George K. Wiggin, well known as an overseer at the Danvers Bleachery. She had been an invalid for several years and a great sufferer, although she has received the tenderest care from relatives and friends.

CONSULTATION FREE.

FROM REV. E. W. WHITNEY,

Formerly Pastor of the Universalist Church, Peabody, Mass.

For several years I have been troubled with Catarrh, which seriously interfered with my public speaking, and which baffled all my attempts to get permanent relief. Experienced surgeons operated upon me, and I was under the care of a Boston physician for two years, but obtained no lasting benefit. I applied various medicines, but failed to get relief. I was lead, by the advice of friends, to consult Dr. Lighthill. My faith was at the lowest ebb, but I am happy to say that after a few months' treatment no trace of my old trouble appears, and I have every reason to believe that the cure is permanent. I cordially recommend Dr. Lighthill to all who may be afflicted in a similar manner.

E W. WHITNEY,

Peabody, Mass., June 27. 1879.

AN INTERESTING CASE.

A statement of Mr. Clement A. Thorndike, of the firm of L. A. May & Co., 127 Union street, Lynn, Mass.

To the Public:—Having been raised almost like one from the dead by the skillful treatment of Dr. Lighthill, and to benefit similar sufferers, I make this public statement of my case. For years I was troubled with Catarrh in my head, seriously affecting and almost destroying my nasal bone; the discharge was very profuse, requiring constant blowing and hawking for relief; gradually the irritation passed into my throat, producing hoarseness and a hacking cough, and finally it affected my bronchial tubes and lungs, leaving me a victim to consumption. The cough now became distressing and almost constant, and debilitating night sweats made their appearance. I lost flesh and became greatly emaciated. I consulted medical men and used various remedies, but all efforts for relief utterly failed. In that condition, and greatly disheartened and discouraged, I applied to Dr. Lighthill, whose able and thorough examination of my case proved to me that I was in the right hands. Convinced that he fully understood my condition, and, inspired with new hope, I placed myself under his care, and very soon experienced the benefit of his treatment. One after another of the symptoms of Catarrh left me. I gained in strength and weight, my cough and night sweats disappeared, and now I am only too thankful and delighted to be able to call myself well again. Hoping that this statement may give new courage and confidence to such as may suffer as I have,

I remain, respectfully,

CLEMENT A. THORNDIKE.

Lynn, June 18, 1881

CATARRH CURED.

FROM REV. E. C. BUTLER,

Beverly, Mass.

I most heartily recommend any one afflicted with that troublesome disease, Catarrh, to Dr. Lighthill. I have full confidence in him. His treatment has had the most gratifying results in my own case, which was severe and of long standing. E. C. BUTLER,

Beverly, Mass., Oct. 29, 1879.

CURE OF DEAFNESS.

FROM RT. REV. T. F. HENDRIKEN,

Bishop of Providence. R. I.

My Dear Dr. Lighthill: Permit me to thank you most heartily for your kindness to the Sisters of our Convent. I had no idea when I consulted you on Sister Demonica's deafness that you could so quickly restore her back to hearing, but she tells me that she hears now better than she did before. For this, and your kind and successful treatment of my own deafness, I thank you. Now I would be glad to have you refer your patients to me. You know I can recommend you as a physician and surgeon, thoroughly accomplished in those departments of medicine in which you practice. I owe you a debt of gratitude, and would be glad to pay it.

Very truly and sincerely yours

Rt. Rev. T. F. HENDRIKEN.

A complete and permanent cure of

ASTHMA.

REPORT FROM MR. C. F. BOYNTON, 31 MILK STREET, BOSTON, ROOM 35.

TO THE PUBLIC.

After having spent large sums of money, and found no relief, I was induced to apply to Dr. Lighthill, at 115 Boylston street, for treatment, having suffered from asthma in the worst form for six years, and I wish to say, for the benefit of others suffering as I did that DR. LIGHTHILL'S TREATMENT HAS MADE ME A WELL MAN, and I now can enjoy life, when before it was a dread to me. This cure was performed on me over a year ago, and I can confidently pronounce it a permanent one. I hope all afflicted with that dreadful disease will avail themselves of Dr. Lighthill's skilful services, for I feel morally sure he can cure them.

PETITION AND ORDER.

To the Honorable the Board of Selectmen of the Town of Peabody.

Respectfully represents the Naumkeag Street Railway Co. of Salem, that it is desirable for the convenience of passengers in the cars of said Company, that the track already laid in Peabody be extended from the present terminus of the track at the square to the junction of Lowell and Endicott Streets.

Wherefore your petitioner prays that their track may be extended and located accordingly.

NAUMKEAG STREET RAILWAY CO.

THE DRAMA.

Mr. L. R. Shewell's "Shadows of a Great City" is to hold the boards at the Boston Theatre this week. All the scenery is new and the cast is a strong one in every respect. It includes Mr. B. R. Graham, formerly of the Boston Museum, Mr. O. H. Barr, Miss Julia Stewart and Annie Ward Tiffany.

The favorite comedian, Mr. Nat Goodwin, will bring his successful engagement at the Park to a close Saturday night. For the farewell performances of the engagement the ever-welcome "Hobbies" is to be revived. Additional interest attaches to these representations, as they will introduce for the only time this season the charming actress, Mrs. N. C. Goodwin, Jr. (Eliza Weathersby.) The comedian is very well supported during this engagement, and the plays in which he appears go with abundant life and dash.

In giving the public new opportunities for witnessing the lyric successes of last summer at the Boston Museum, Mr. Field is likely to find substantial reward. A great many theatre habitues were out of town while "Fantine" ruled the stage, so that to no small number of people the production will be a novelty. Marie Jansen has been specially engaged from London to take the part of Fantine, and Mr. W. H. Fessenden, Wilson and others will make a corps of singers unusually good. There has been a large advance sale for seats.

It will be pleasant news that arrangements have been made for the appearance this week, in the title-role of "Prince Methusalem," of Georgina von Januschowsky. The lady's great success at the Bijou last season is well remembered. The cast is still further to be strengthened by the accession of that excellent singer, Miss Rosalba Beecher, who is to appear as the Princess—a role which she will make very interesting. Mr. Hopper, as Sigismund, and Mr. Maflin, as the aged but still burly Duke, have each made a great hit. "Prince Methusalem" is to continue the Bijou attraction until further notice.

"Fedora," with Fannie Davenport in the title-role (her greatest triumph), and Henry Lee as Loris, will be the attraction at the Park next week, to which time the artiste's engagement is unfortunately limited.

No suffrage lecturer has ever made a more potent and convincing argument for woman's ability to enter as a factor into the affairs of state than is indirectly offered by the strong and logical political lectures of Miss Kate Field discussing the Mormon problem. Here is our most brilliant and able American woman, and the woman who holds the highest place on the lyceum platform to-day, who is demonstrating by her own remarkable work, the insight, sound judgment, and material aid which a woman may bring to the interests of State and nation. Miss Field could not only be a politician, but a statesman. She has a broad comphrehension and a remarkable grasp of her subject, a logic and sagacity rare even among men, and no more convincing proof of the aid women will bring to national affairs when they possess a voice in its councils has ever been presented than that given in the present work of Miss Field. The lady will deliver her lecture on "The Mormon Monster" at Plummer Hall Salem on next Saturday evening January 24.

Two Dangerous Seasons.—Spring and fall are times when so many people get sick. The changes in the weather are severe on feeble persons, and even those naturally strong are apt, as they say, "to be feeling miserable." Then they are just in condition to be struck down with some kind of fever. A bottle or two of Parker's Tonic will invigorate the digestion, put liver, kidneys and blood in perfect order, and prevent more serious attacks. The following is the list of fires and alarms at which the Peabody Fire Department responded during the year from Jan. 1st, 1885 to Jan. 1st, 1884:—

Jan. 23rd, Fire at Richardson Doyle & Co's currying shop, 9.10 P. M.

Jan. 24th, Rekindling of the fire at Richardson Doyle & Co's, 10 o'clock A. M.

Feb.19th, Alarm caused by the breaking of gas burner on street light on Central street, 11.45 P.M.

May 12th, Fire at grease rendering works of George Bancroft, 10.30 A. M.

May 26th, Alarm for the burning of Rubber works in Reading, 3.10 A. M.

June 8, Fire at Winslows & Rogers', Salem, 2.15 A. M.

June 10th, Fire at Pinder & Winchester's, 1.45, A. M.

June 17th, Alarm from Salem, 5.30 P. M.

June 24th, Chas. Brown's outbuilding, 3.45 P. M.

July 28th, Alarm from George W. Pepper's shop, 9 A. M.

Aug. 14th, Alarm by bursting of kerosene lantern at John Linnehan's stable, 12.35 A. M.

Aug 28th, Alarm from Salem, 12.30 P. M.

Sept. 4th, Fire in bark car, 4.40 P. M.

Oct. 12th, False Alarm, 10 A. M.

Nov. 14th, Fire at Upton's Glue Works, 4.45 A. M.

Nov. 16th, Alarm from Salem, 7. P. M.

Dec. 22nd, Alarm from Salem, 12.15 A. M.

Seven of the above alarms were for working fires, at which the whole or a part of the department were called into service.

Shortly after 12 o'clock on Friday morning the firemen were called out by an alarm from the whistle on Jacobs' tannery on Mason street, for a slight fire in the tannery of Dennison W.Osborne in the rear of Foster street, but before the apparatus arrived the blaze had been extinguished with a bucket of water. The fire was caused by putting hot ashes into a barrel which set fire to a door of one of the buildings burning a hole through. Hose 2 laid a line but did not let on the water. Hose 3 did not get the alarm at all and the companies at the Central Station did not turn out half their men. The alarm was not heard in some cases a quarter of a mile away and some living on the square within two minutes' walk of the engine house knew nothing of the alarm until the next day. There were about five men with each piece of apparatus from the brick house. Hose 2 turned out 14 members. Some other bell should be rung, one that is not heard every day.

Two alarms in one week is doing pretty well for a country town.

The Board of Engineers at their monthly meeting last week Tuesday, adopted an order notifying each engine company that it must pay for all gas in excess of 1500 feet monthly, or the supply would be cut off at half-past 9 o'clock P. M. There is some dissatisfaction about it. Last Friday evening the Board of Engineers granted a private hearing to a discharged member of the department, who appealed. The ruling of the company officers was sustained.

J. A. Roome has just finished a new hose pung for Hose Company No. 3, which is a beauty. The body is deeper but not so long as the pung of Hose 1, has a slat bottom which will let the air pass through the hose while in the pung and keep it dry. It has tool boxes under the seat, a rack for coats and hats, rests for axes pipes and lanterns. The body is painted a dark brown trimmed with gold, with the lettering "Torrent 3, P. F. D." in gold. The painting was done by John Lation. The turnout is the handsomest in the department.

Engineer Pierce says that he gave orders, at the time of the alarm last Friday morning for Hose 2 not to lay their hose as the fire was all out and there was no need of spoiling the liquors in the vats in the tannery with water, or of wetting the hose, but his orders were disobeyed as far as the laying the hose was concerned.

Hose 1 put down a new and handsome tapestry carpet on the floor Saturday and have added a large mirror, having now a room to be proud of. Their carpet came from Edwin Ides, in Salem. Z

The Liberal Club will hold its first meeting for the current year at Hamilton Hall on Tuesday evening of next week, Jan 27. The supper will be at 6 o'clock, and the essay will be by President Capen of Tufts College. His subject will be "Law and Order." At this meeting officers are to be chosen for the current year. Tickets may be had of Mr. Jos. H. Webb, at the National Exchange Bank.

Our readers will notice that the Mammoth Bargain Crockery Store, 237 Essex street, Salem, has a new advertisement in this issue in which they give a scale of prices far below anything yet offered in this vicinity.

STREET
AS GLEANED
NOTES
Mulcahy

Dame rumor has it that one of the Selectmen, at least, looks out for his friends. The question of a head usher for the town hall was to come before the board, and a certain young man having the inside track with the rest of the board, was waited upon by the Selectman in question, and told that if he would appoint a certain friend of his an assistant usher, he would support him when his name came before the board. What the result was may be inferred from the fact that the assistant usher was appointed. The Selectman should have better understood "addition, division and silence" and then "Mulcahy" wouldn't have known anything about it.

An indignation meeting was held with Mrs. McSweeney in "Dublin" the other night to protest against their husbands paying a poll tax, agreeable to the summons of our tax collector. Mrs. Murphy said there was no good in paying it at all, that the Republicans voted for big expenses and expected us poor people to pay for them. Mrs. Gilhooley said her "old man" had been out of a job for six weeks and she didn't intend to go out washing and then squander his money, paying poll taxes with a 20 cent summons. Mrs. Annie Magin said she would go over and get a job for her husband to work it out on the road. Dennis McCarthy's wife said she didn't know what it meant. Mr. Bushby paid her husband's poll tax and he was always a voting of the democratic ticket. Several others expressed their opinion and the meeting adjourned after appointing a committee to wait upon the man who had been serving the summons.

One of our good young men who should haye known better, got taken in the other day on a bet with a "sporting man." The conversation commenced about a watch, whose watch was nearest right. To settle it the s. m. bet a sum of money that his watch would be nearer the striking of the town clock at twelve o'clock that day than his friends. At precisely twelve o'clock the friends stood in front of Pickering's store and the y. m. held his watch in his hand and sure enough the hands indicated twelve just as the town clock struck. Turning to his companion he claimed the money. His companion pointed to a man holding up the fence of the South Church and said "that is my watch and he is nearer the striking of the town clock than yours." The cigars settled it.

I haven't seen in any of the papers only a few lines about the testing of the hydrants at Upton's Glue Works by the Selectmen and Engineers, a short time ago, but I did hear at the time that the idea that the hydrant was only partly open at the time of the fire, causing a lack of water, was exploded. At the suggestion of Chairman Southwick, Engineer Peirce shut off the hydrant one-half, and then again two-thirds but it made no impression on the stream. Afterward with one or more streams flowing at the time and through 300 feet of hose, the hydrant that at the fire would scarcely reach the building sent a stream 25 feet over it. There are several of our business men who incline to the opinion that the tank on the hill was not running over at the time.

As I listen to the Rev. Spaulding at the town meeting yesterday and think that he is comparatively a new comer and had but little to do with the building up of our town, I am reminded that the rooster cackles louder than the hen that lays the egg. Spaulding makes so much noise about "what we ought to have" that a stranger might think that he had really done the town some service.

I notice that a daily newspaper in this vicinity makes the slight mistake of saying that the population of New York is 50,000,000. This of course was only a "slip of the pen." We have reason to believe that it estimates its circulation in the same way. Only a slip of the pen, you know.

In these days a prophet is a man of good sense who can foresee effect from cause. The prophet we have in mind is Mr Joseph Peabody whose predictions on the weather I have always found correct. He says for the last of January that a well defined storm period is to mark the days from the 22 to 24th inclusive and with slight exceptions the remainder of the month is likely to be mild and cloudy weather and fogs.

MUSICAL NOTES.

We understand that a Concert is to be given next month under the auspices of the Old Ladies' Home Association, by the Harvard College Glee Club, possibly to be followed by a dance and supper.

The Rehearsals for the Cantata to be given by the Benevolent Society are progressing finely, and the ladies and gentlemen who are assisting in the matter are much interested. At the rehearsal last week nearly forty were present, so that a well balanced chorus is already assured. A few more sopranos are needed, however, and those of our singers who will interest themselves are invited to join the chorus. The soloists are nearly all selected, from local talent, and ample time for preparation is to be taken to bring it out in good style.

A concert by the Salem Cadet Orchestra of fourteen pieces, assisted by a local vocalist, at popular prices, is among the possibilities of the near future.

The next Symphony Concert by the Salem Oratorio Society will be given next Wednesday night. Ticket No. 3 admits. The soloists are to be Mme. Cora Giese, and Mr. M. Loeffler. It is needless to say that these Symphony Concerts are a treat no musical people can afford to lose. We hope there will be a full house.

Miss Mary Beebe is likely to make her Boston re-entrance at the Bijou when Gilbert and Sullivan's "Sorcerer" is revived.

Mr. Arthur Foote is conducting the Schubert Club rehearsals, in the absence of Mr. Winch.

SOUTH PEABODY.

About sixty passengers came up on the last car Sunday night from the sacred concert at the Town Hall.

The usual Wednesday night prayer meeting is postponed until Friday evening on account of the mum supper.

H. N. Batchelder is contemplating a trip to Canada to purchase some horses after he gets his ice harvested.

The ice on Brown and Spring ponds is six inches thick.

Mr. Alerson Galeucia is having repairs made on the house occupied by Mrs. Emily Dakin on Lynn street. Mr. S. G. Southwick is doing the work.

The L. & B. R. commenced running cars with stoves in them last Wednesday morning for the first time. The car was run by Conductor Basford.

The Sunday School concert last Sunday night was attended by a large audience and was very interesting throughout.

Don't forget the mum supper this evening. The evening will be spent in readings by Miss McPherson and songs by local talent. Admission 10 cents. Supper 15 cents.

Mrs. David Putnam is quite sick at her residence on Lynn street.

The house of Perley King is being repaired by David Putnam.

A large number of skaters enjoyed the skating at Bartholemew's pond last Sunday,

OBITUARY.

TO CARRIE E. PIERCE.

At her request some verses have been prepared by two different friends.

Farewell, Carrie dear, thy pain is o'er,
Far happier lot than affliction's fate
Now is thy heart's own, and cheers the more
Than all earth can give, or friends relate.

Frail was thy flesh, falt'ring thy movement;
But stronger—richer—thy mind and heart.
Deeper than thy years, with rare talent—
Thy needle and brush rejoiced in art.

Always home—a care—yet more a joy;
Done well here thy work, silent thy voice—
But thine the glad release—heaven's employ—
Yes, "Rest Forever;" it was thy choice.

Softly now, the loved one's sleeping,
Pillowed on the Savior's breast;
Her brief life made glad his promise,
"I will give the weary—rest."

"Rest Forever"—her last message
Gladly given—cheered the way—
Fearless through the deepening shadows,
Passing on—to "perfect day."

The firm of Edward C. Almy & Co., Clothiers of Salem, are attracting a great deal of attention by their low prices, fair dealing and the superior quality of their work. This firm makes a specialty of fine goods, and at the prices they are just now making to close out their winter's stock, many of their superior garments can be purchased as low as many dealers ask for an inferior and cheaply made article. One of the characteristics of this store is that no misrepresentation is allowed and the firm promises to refund the money if anything purchased at their store does not prove to be just as represented, or satisfactory to the buyer. Their new advertisement this week calls particular attention to bargains in trousers; and we invite our gentlemen friends to call at their store if they desire to get an excellent article at a very low price.

Poet's Corner.

Do You Remember?

Dear, do you remember lingering side by side,
Where in the midnight heavens the daylight never died;

Where the waves' recurrent music kept cadence to our thought,
And the hour and the silence our love to rapture wrought?

Dear, do you remember the fair and foolish dream?
How life grew to enchantment beneath its golden gleam?

While the pulses thrilled together to the clasping of the hand.
And the moon's path lay in silver on the sea and on the sand;

And, like phantoms o'er its radiance, flitted the shadowy ships,
And love and life were meeting at the touching of the lips.

Ah, me! how fast it faded, that glittering heaving path,
The glory of the skies above, as of the earth beneath!

The dream was false and fickle, the hope an idle thing,
The music died upon the notes, and snapped the golden string.

Perhaps it had been wiser if nor heart nor lip had met,
Dear, do you remember?—it were better to forget.

I'm Sitting on the Stile.

She turned the music swiftly over,
Her lovely color came and went.
She tossed her jaunty hat aside,
And sat before the instrument.
The ivory keys her ivory hands
Touched with a master touch, the while
With sweetest voice she sang that sweet
Old song: "I'm sitting on the stile."

He softly stole within the room
To hear her sing; entranced he sat
Upon the most convenient chair,
The chair which held her jaunty hat.
She turned and looked with anguish'd eyes;
He turned and looked with sickly smile;
Beheld the ruin he had wrought,
And said; "I'm sitting on the style!"

Baby's Letter.

BY KATE UPSON CLARK.

"I wis I could wite a letter!"
Said the baby with a sigh,
"But the pencil don't go wight a bit,
'Tisn't any use to twy:
But," thoughtfully, "I know one sing—
I can make one, two, fee.
Would 'at be a letter, mamma?
I should sink 'at it would be."

"I should think so, dear," said mamma,
So he made a "1 ʒ g."
"You see," he said, "I love Aunt Sue,
And I want to write to she."
And Aunt Sue wrote (the baby's eyes Glowed with triumphant glee);
"The nicest letter I ever saw
Was the baby's '1 ʒ g.'"

A bright, thoughtful boy, one summer day,
Planted an acorn and went his way.
Both grew, as boys and acorns can,
Till one was a tree, the other a man.
Now mark the reward; Along comes the man
And the tree shelters him, as an oak-tree can.
But why stays he there in the moonlight dim?
He stole a fine horse and was hung to a limb!

Washed-Out Hair.—There is a sort of pallid, chalky complexion, which the novelists call a "washed-out complexion." It is ghastly enough, and no mistake. Washed-out, faded, discolored, or parti-colored hair is almost as repulsive and melancholy. Parker's Hair Balsam will restore your hair to its original color, whatever it was; brown, auburn or black. Why wear moss on your head, when you may easily have lively, shining hair.

MUSICAL NOTES.

The last week in February has been fixed for the performance of the Cantata of the "Heroes of '76" for the benefit of the Ladies' Benevolent Society. A rehearsal of the chorus is to be held to-morrow evening in the South Church vestry —and it is earnestly desired that there should be a full attendance.

We understand that instead of the Harvard Students, the management of the Old Ladies' Home will give an entertainment with Mme. Recard, the impersonator and reader, who comes with the highest testimonials from New York and the West. Particulars will be announced later.

We are desired to say that there will be no rehearsal of the Salem Oratorio Society this week. The next one will be Feb. 5th.

The musical people of Salem and vicinity have met with a loss in the death of Charles E. Fabens. He was President of the Schubert Club, a prominent member of the Oratorio Society, and a member of the choir of Grace Church. He was thoroughly interested in music, and in the success of everything intended to advance the art. More than this, he was an active worker in bringing about these results. At his funeral last Friday representatives of the different organizations were present, including Grace Church choir, and a beautiful floral emblem was sent by the Schubert Club.

The concert that was to have been given in Plummer Hall, Salem, by Mrs. E. R. Bigelow, assisted by Miss M. E. Stanley, Mrs. C. B. Fowler, Miss Dora Clark, Mr. C. A. Clark, Mr. F. Clayton Record, Jan. 26, will be given Feb. 9. A fine entertainment may be expected.

The next rehearsal of the Salem Schubert Club will take place Friday evening. Mr. Arthur Foote is at present conducting these rehearsals.

Dr. A. M. Dudley, director of Barton Square Church choir, in Salem, has been selected as one of the editors of the Archives of Dentistry, the new dental journal, published by J. H. Chambers & Co., St. Louis, Mo.

At the Symphony Concert this evening in Mechanic Hall, the following programme will be performed. Single tickets, at seventy-five cents each, can be obtained at the door: Mendelssohn's —Overture — (Ruy Blas); Weber —Aria (Freischutz); Bruch—a,' Adagio from the Concerto for Violin, No. 2, in D minor; b, Fantasie Norwegienne; Songs with Piano; Boccherini—Minuet; Beethoven—Symphony in E-flat (Heroic), No. 3, op. 35. Soloists, Mme. Cora Giese and Mr. M. Loeffler.

Miss Bessie Hamlin, who with Miss Emma Rice, is studying in London, made her first appearance in that country in Ealing at a notable concert. Miss Hamlin sang last year for the Salem Oratorio Society, and her friends will be glad to know of her success. The Ealing Times says: The next item on the programme was a most important one, naturally causing some curiosity to be evinced, as the lady about to make her debut before an English audience had come, with high credentials, from Boston, U. S. A. On her appearance she met with a most cordial reception. The selection chosen was Mendelssohn's grand motett "Hear my Prayer" in which she sustained the soprano solo with an amount of ease and gracefulness that at once enlisted the sympathies of her audience. Her voice is one of great compass, full, rounded and flexible, being peculiarly adapted for oratorio rather than concert room music. She sings with much expression and fluency, and her general style is at once pleasing and effective. She is a most gifted lady, and judging from the success attending her efforts before a critical Ealing audience we predict for her a prosperous career. The general effect of this beautiful composition upon the audience was great, the applause with which its rendition was greeted being of a most spontaneous character. Miss Hamlin, for such is the young lady's name, created quite a furore in the second part, when she sang Randegger's "Repose and Peace." Having bowed her acknowledgments, she was again recalled, responding to her encore by repeating the last verse. Miss Hamlin is to sing in Liverpool in "Judas Maccabœus," about the middle of February.

The Keynote, a New York Musical paper, is one of the finest in the country. It is of great interest to all musical people, having correspondence all over the country. The editor, Frederic Archer, is authority in all matters in his line, being himself one of the finest musicians in New York City. His criticisms are fair, courageous, and in sympathy with a high devotion to the art which he loves. Every number contains articles of general musical interest which it would be well if more musical people understood. Send for a sample copy. You will like it.

It may be hard times, but week before last week opera crowded the Boston theatre; and yet it spoils the appearance of a $20 bill every time a young man takes his best dressed girl to the opera, to say nothing of the cost of her new clothes.—Milford Gazette.

DARK DAYS.

the metal must have been, it seemed to burn me like a coal of fire. Impulsively, thoughtlessly, as I ran I hurled the weapon from me, far, far away. Why should it have been in Philippa's hand this night?

I ran madly on, but not for long. My foot caught in a stone, and I fell, half stunned and quite breathless, to the ground. It was some minutes before I recovered myself sufficiently to once more stand erect. Philippa must have obtained a start which, coupled with her frenzied speed, almost precluded the possibility of my overtaking her.

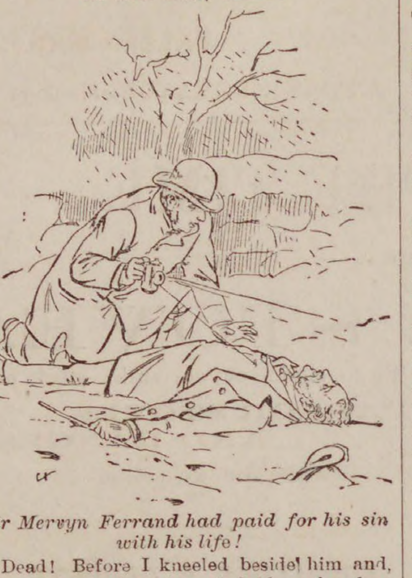
Moreover, a strange, uncontrollable impulse swayed me. The touch of that deadly weapon still burned my hand. Philippa's words still rang in my ears. "On, on, on, up the road yet awhile!" she had cried. What did she mean? What had been done to-night?

I must retrace my steps. I must see! I must know! Philippa is flying through the cold, dark, deadly night; but her frame is but the frame of a woman. She must soon grow exhausted, perhaps sink senseless on the road. Nevertheless, the dreadful fears which are growing in my mind must be set at rest; then I can resume the pursuit. At all cost I must know what has happened!

Once more I turned and faced the storm. Heavens! anything might happen on such a night as this! I went on and on, flashing my lantern as I went on the centre and each side of the road. I went some distance past that spot where I judged that Philippa had swept by me. Then suddenly with a cry of horror I stopped short. At my very feet, in the middle of the highway, illumined by the disk of light cast by my lantern, lay a whitened mass, and as my eye fell upon it I knew only too well the meaning of Philippa's wild exclamation, "The wages of sin! The wages of sin!"

CHAPTER IV.

AT ALL COST, SLEEP!



Sir Mervyn Ferrand had paid for his sin with his life!

Dead! Before I kneeled beside him and, after unbuttoning his coat, laid my hand on his breast, I knew the man was dead. Before I turned the lantern on his white face I knew who the man was. Sir Mervyn Ferrand had paid for his sin with his life! It needed little professional skill to determine the cause of his death. A bullet fired, it seemed to me, at close quarters had passed absolutely through the heart. He must have fallen without a moan. Killed, I knew, by the hand of the woman he had wronged.

A sneering smile yet lingered on his set features. I could even imagine the words which had accompanied it, when swift and sudden, without one moment's grace for repentence or confession, death had been meted out to him. At one moment he stood erect and full of life, mocking, it may be, her who had trusted him and had been betrayed; at the next, before the sentence he was speaking was completed, he lay lifeless at her feet, with the snow-flakes beginning to form his winding-sheet!

Oh, it was vengeance! swift, deadly vengeance! But why, oh, why had she wreaked it? Philippa, my peerless Philippa, a murderess! Oh, it was too fearful, too horrible! I must be dreaming. All my own thoughts of revenge left me. It was for the time pity, sheer pity, I felt for the man, cut off in the prime of his life. While I knew he was alive I could look forward to and picture the minute when we should stand coolly seeking to kill one another. but now that he was dead I hated him no longer. Ah! death is a sacred thing. Dead! Sir Mervyn Ferrand dead, and slain by Philippa!

It could not be true! It should not be true! Yet I shuddered as I remembered the passion she had thrown into those words, "Basil, did you ever hate a man?" I gave a low cry of anguish as I remembered how I had hurled from me the pistol she had let fall—the very weapon which had done the dreadful deed.

Killed by Philippa! Not in a sudden burst of uncontrollable passion, but with deliberate intent. She must have gone armed to meet him. She must have shot him through the heart; must have seen him fall. Then, only then, the horrible deed which she had wrought must have been fully realized! Then she had turned and fled from the spot in a frenzy. Oh, my poor girl! my poor girl!

Utterly bewildered by my anguish I rose from my knees and stood for a while beside the corpse. It was in that moment I learned how much I really loved the woman who had done this thing. Over all my grief and horror this love rose paramount. At all cost I must save her—save her from the hands of justice; save her from the fierce elements which her tender frame was even at this moment braving. And as I recalled how she had sought me yesterday with the tale of her wrong—how she had wildly fled from me a few minutes ago, madly, blindly into the night; as I thought of the injuries she had suffered, and which had led her to shed this man's blood; as I contrasted her in her present position with what she was when first I knew her and loved her, the pity began to fade from my heart; my thoughts toward the lifeless form at my feet grew stern and sombre, and I found myself beginning, by the old code of an eye for an eye, to justify, although I regretted Philippa's fearful act. Right or wrong, she was the woman I loved; and I swore I would save her from the consequences of her crime, even—Heaven help me!—if the accusation, when made, must fall upon my shoulders.

Yet it was not the beginning of any scheme to evade justice which induced me to raise the dead body and bear it to the side of the road, where I placed it under the low bank on which the hedge grew. It was the reverence which one pays to death made me do this. I could not leave the poor wretch lying in the very middle of the highway for the first passersby to stumble against. To-morrow he would, of course, be found. To-morrow the hue and cry would be out! To-morrow Philippa, my Philippa, would ——. Oh, heavens! never, never, never!

So I laid what was left of Sir Mervyn Ferrand reventially by the side of the lonely road. I even tried to close his glassy eyes, and I covered his face with his own handkerchief. Then, with heart holding fear and anguish enough for a lifetime, I turned and went in search of the poor unhappy girl.

Where should I seek her? Who knew what her remorse may have urged her to do!

Who knew whither her horror may have driven her? It needs but to find Philippa lifeless on the road to complete the heaviest tale of grief which can be exacted from one man in one short night! I clinched my teeth and rushed on.

I had the road all the road to myself. No one was abroad in such weather. Indeed, few persons were seen at night in any weather in this lonely part of the country. I made straight for my own house. The dismal thought came to me that unless Philippa kept to the road she was lost to me forever. If she strayed to the right or to the left, how on such a night could I possibly find her? My one hope was that she would go straight to my cottage; so thither I made the best of my way. If she had not arrived, I must get what assistance I could and seek for her in the fields to the right and left of the road. It was a dreary comfort to remember that all the ponds and spaces of water were frozen six inches thick.

I hesitated a moment when I reached her late residence. Should I inquire if she had returned thither? No: when morning revealed the ghastly event of the night, my having done so would awake suspicion. Let me first go home.

Home at last. In a moment I shall know the worst. I opened the slide of my lantern, which was still alight, and threw the rays on the path which led to my door. My heart gave a great bound of thankfulness. There on the snow, not yet obliterated by more recent flakes, were the prints of a small foot. Philippa, as I prayed, but scarcely dared to hope she might, had come straight to my house.

My man opened the door for me. It was well I had seen those footprints, as my knowledge of Philippa's arrival enabled me to assume a natural air.

"My sister has come?" I asked.

"Yes, sir; about a quarter of an hour ago."

"We missed each other on the road. What a night!" I said, throwing off my snow-covered coat. "Where is she now?" I asked.

"In the sitting room, sir." Then, lowering his voice, William added: "She seemed just about in a tantrum when she found you weren't at home. I expect we shall find her a hard lady to please."

William, in spite of his stolidity, occasionally ventured upon some liberty when addressing me.

His words greatly surprised me. I forced myself to make some laughing rejoinder; then I turned the handle of the door and entered the room in which Philippa had taken refuge.

Oh, how my heart throbbed! What would she say to me? What could I, fresh from that dreadful scene, say to her? Would she excuse or palliate, would she simply confess or boldly justify, her crime? Would she plead her wrongs in extenuation? Would she assert that in a moment of ungovernable rage she had done the deed? No matter what she said; she was still Philippa, and even at the cost of my own life and honor I would save her.

Yet as I advanced into the room a shudder ran through me. Fresh to my mind came the remembrance of that white face, that still form, lying as I had left it, with the pure white snow falling thickly around it.

Philippa was sitting in front of the fire. Her hat was removed, her dark hair disheveled and gleaming wet with the snow which had melted in it. She must have heard me enter and close the door, but she took no notice. As I approached her she turned her shoulder upon me in a pettish way, and as one who by the action means to signify displeasure. I came to her side and stood over her, waiting for her to look up and speak first. She must speak first! What can I say, after all that has happened to-night?

But she kept a stony silence—kept her eyes still turned from mine. At last I called her by her name, and, bending down, looked into her face.

Its expression was one of sullen anger, and moreover, anger which seemed to deepen as she heard my voice. She made a kind of contemptuous gesture as if waving me aside.

"Philippa," I said, as sternly as I could, "speak to me!"

I laid my hand upon her arm. She shook it off fiercely, and then started to her feet.

"You ask me to speak to you," she said; "you who have treated me like this! Oh, it is shameful! shameful! I come through storm and snow—come to you, who were to welcome me as a brother! Where are you? Away, your wretched servant tells me. Why are you away? I trusted you! Oh, you are a pretty brother! If you had cared for me or respected me, you would have been here to greet me. No! you are all in a league—all in a league to ruin me! Now I am here, what will you do? Poison me, of course! kill me, and make away with me, even as that other doctor killed and made away with my poor child! He did! I say he did! I saw him do it! 'A child of shame,' he said; so he killed it! All, all, all—even you—you, whom I trusted—leagued against me!"

She was trembling with excitement. Her words ran one into the other. It was as much as I could do to follow them; yet the above is but a brief condensation of what she said. With unchecked volubility she continued to heap reproaches and accusations, many of which were of the most extravagant and frivolous nature, on my head. At last she was silent, and reseated herself in her former attitude; and the sullen, discontented, ill-used look again settled on her face.

And yet, although I, who loved her above all the world, was the object of her fierce reproaches, no words I had yet listened to came more sweetly to my ear than these. A great joy swept through me; a tide of relief bore me to comparative happiness. Whatever dreadful deed the poor girl had that night accomplished she was morally innocent. Philippa was not accountable for her actions!

As a doctor I read the truth at once. The rapid flow of words, the changing moods, the vehement excitement, the sullen air, the groundless suspicions—one and all carried conviction, and told me what was wrong. Mrs. Wilson's words of yesterday, which warned me that Philippa's health should be inquired into, added absolute certainty.

My professional brethren who may happen to read this will understand me when I say that, although it is long since I have practiced as a doctor, I am sorely tempted, as I reach this stage of my story, to give in detail the particulars which induced me to arrive at such a belief. No physician, no surgeon, lives who does not feel it his duty as well as his pleasure to give an accurate account of any out-of-the-common case which has come under his notice. But I am not writing these pages for the benefit of science; and having no wish to make my tale assume the authority of a hospital report, shall restrain myself, and on technical points be as brief as possible.

In short, then, Philippa had fallen a victim to that mania which not uncommonly shows itself after the birth of a child—that dread, mysterious disease which may, at the moment when everything seems going well, turn a house of joy into a house of mourning; a disease the source of which I have no hesitation in saying has not yet been properly traced and investigated. So far as I know, there is no monograph on the subject, or certainly there was none at that time.

Still, it is admitted by all the authorities that this species of insanity is not unfrequently produced by a severe mental shock, especially when that shock is accompanied by an overwhelming sense of shame. Statistics show us that unmarried women who are mothers, and feel the degradation of such a position acutely, are peculiarly liable to be attacked by the mysterious malady. Esquirol was, I believe, the first to notice this fact, and the correctness of his view has subsequently been confirmed by many others.

Such being the case, it is small wonder that Philippa, waking yesterday morning to receive the intelligence that her marriage with Sir Mervyn Ferrand had been a farce, should have been thrown into a state extremely susceptible to the attack of the disease. Her careless exposure of herself to the wintry air, when last night she sought me and claimed my aid, most probably hastened the attack of the foe. Mrs. Wilson had noticed her strange manner. I myself have remarked upon her rapid changes from calmness to excitability. It was clear to me that even when she visited me last night the mischief had begun to develop itself. I blamed my blindness bitterly. I ought to have seen what was wrong. Considering her agitated state, I ought to have been warned, and have taken precautions; but I had attributed those fitful changes, the meaning of which was now only too plain to me, to the natural agitation experienced by a passionate yet pure-minded woman, who found herself betrayed and brought to shame. Oh, had I but guessed the real cause, or rather the way in which her grief had affected her, all the dark work of that night might have been left undone!

Although in many ways it added to the difficulties and dangers which surrounded us, the discovery of the truth was an unspeakable relief to me. No right-minded man could now call the poor girl guilty of crime. The man's blood was indeed on her hands; yet she had shed it, not knowing what she did. Her frenzy must then have been at its height. The idea of his coming that night must in some way have occurred to her. The desire to see him must have driven her to go and meet him. Her wrongs—perhaps the dread she now felt of him—may have induced her to arm herself; perhaps she carried the weapon for self-protection. Any way, she was mad when she started; she was mad when she drew the trigger; she was mad when she broke from my grasp; she was mad now as she sat by my fire, eyeing me with morose, suspicious glances. She was mad—and innocent!

Her manner toward me troubled me but little. It is a well-known peculiarity of the disease that the patient turns with hatred from those who were the nearest and dearest to her. Fits of sullen, stubborn silence, alternating with fierce outbursts of vituperation, are the most common characteristics of the mania. Hideous, startling as it is to see the change wrought in the sufferer, the malady is by no means of such an alarming nature as it seems. In fact the majority of cases are treated with perfect success.

But all this is professional talk. Again I say that the discovery of Philippa's state of mind was an immense relief to me. My conscience was cleared of a weight which was pressing upon it. I felt braced up to use every effort, and thoroughly justified in following whatever course I thought best. Moreover, a new relationship was now established between Philippa and myself. For awhile every feeling save one must be banished. We were now doctor and patient.

After much persuasion I induced her to let me feel her pulse. As I expected, I found it up nearly to one hundred and twenty. This did not alarm me much, as in the course of my practice I had seen several of these cases. The preliminary treatment was simple as A B C; at all cost sleep must be obtained.

Fortunately, I had a well stocked medicine chest. In a few minutes I had prepared the strongest dose of opium which I dared to administer. In such a case as the present I knew that no driblets would avail; so I measured out no less than sixty drops of laudanum. Sleep the girl must have. That poor seething, boiling brain must by artificial means be forced to rest for hours. After that rest I should be able to say what chance there was of saving life and reason.

But preparing a dose of medicine and making a patient like this to take it, are two different things. I tried every art, every persuasion. I implored and commanded. I threatened and insisted. Philippa was obdurate. Poor soul! she knew I meant to poison her. On my part, I knew that unless she swallowed that narcotic to-night her case was all but hopeless.

I rested for awhile; then I sent for lukewarm water. After some resistance she suffered me to bathe her throbbing temples. The refreshing coolness which followed the operation was so grateful to her that she let me repeat the action again and again. A soft and more contented look settled on her beautiful face.

I seized the moment. Once more I pressed the potion upon her. This time successfully. My heart trembled with joy as I saw her swallow the drug. Now she might be saved!

I still continued the comforting laving of her temples, and waited until the drug took its due effect. By and by that moment came. The large dark eyes closed, the weary head sank heavily on my shoulder, and I knew that Philippa had entered upon a term of merciful oblivion.

I waited until her sleep was sound as the sleep of death; then I summoned my man. I had already told him that my sister was very ill. Between us we bore her to her room and laid her on her bed. I loosened her dress, cut the wet boots from her cold feet, did all I could to promote warmth and such comfort as was possible under the circumstances. Then I left her, sleeping that heavy sleep which I prayed might last unbroken for hours, and hours, and hours.

CHAPTER V.

A WHITE TOMB.

From the moment when the true state of Philippa's mind flashed upon me, to the moment when I left her sleeping that heavy sleep, I had little time to think of anything else than the best means of saving her life, and, if possible, her reason. True, throughout the whole of my operations to effect this end, a dim sort of horror pervaded me—a recollection of the ghastly object which lay on the roadside, some three miles from us; but it was not until I turned from my patient's door that the terrible situation in which she was placed presented itself to me in all its dread entirety. Half brokenhearted, I threw myself wearily into my chair, and covered my face with my hands.

What was to be done? What was to be done? To-morrow morning the body would be found. I felt certain that when inquiry was made suspicion would at once point toward Philippa. Mrs. Wilsen knew of her starting from home in the evening, alone and on foot. She knew, moreover, that Sir Mervyn Ferrand was her husband; that he had ill-used her. She would most certainly know to whom Philippa had fled. It did not follow that because I was ignorant as to who were my neighbors they knew nothing about me. At any rate, William, my man, would know the truth. So far as I could see, to-morrow, or by the latest, the next day Philippa would be arrested for the crime. Most probably I should also be included in the arrest. For that I seemed to care nothing; except that it might hinder me from helping my poor girl.

Any hope of removing Philippa—there, put it in plain words—any hope of flight, for days, even weeks, was vain. Let every-

The Brakeman at Church.

BOB BURDETT'S BEST SKETCH—THE CHURCH CREEDS DONE UP IN RAILROAD LINGO.

On the road once more, with Lebanon falling away in the distance, the fat passenger drumming idly on the window pane, the cross passenger sound asleep, and the tall, thin passenger reading 'Gen. Grant's Tour Around the World.' To me comes the brakeman, and seating himself on the arm of the seat, says: 'I went to church yesterday.'

'Yes?' I said, with that interested inflection that asks for more. 'And what church did you attend?'

'Which do you guess?' he asked.

'Some union mission church,' I hazarded.

'No,' he said, 'I don't like to run on these branch roads very much. I don't often go to church, and when I do, I want to run on the main line, where your run is regular and you go on schedule time and don't have to wait on connections. I don't like to run on a branch. Good enough, but I don't like it.'

'Episcopal?' I guessed.

'Limited express,' he said, 'all palace cars and $2 extra for seat, fast time and only stop at big stations. Nice line, but too exhaustive for a brakeman. All train men in uniform, conductor's punch and lantern silver plated, and no train boys allowed. Then the passengers are allowed to talk back to the conductor, and it makes them too free and easy. No, I couldn't stand the palace cars. Rich road, though. Don't often hear of a receiver being appointed for that line. Some mighty nice people travel on it, too.'

'Universalist?' I suggested.

'Broad gauge,' said the brakeman, 'does too much complimentary business. Everybody travels on a pass. Conductor doesn't get a fare once in 50 miles. Stops at flag stations, and won't run into anything but a union depot. No smoking car on the train. Train orders are very vague, though, and the train men don't get along well with the passengers. No, I don't go to the Universalist, but I know some good men who run on that road.'

'Presbyterian?' I asked.

'Narrow gauge, eh?' said the brakeman, 'pretty track, straight as a rule; tunnel right through a mountain rather than go around it; spirit-level grade; passengers have to show their tickets before they get on the train. Mighty strict road, but the cars a little narrow; have to sit one in a seat, and no room in the aisle to dance. Then there are no stop-over tickets allowed; got to go straight through to the station you're ticketed for, or you can't get on at all. When the car is full no extra coaches; cars built at the shop to hold just so many and nobody else allowed on. But you don't often hear of an accident on that road. It's run right up to the rules.'

'Maybe you joined the Freethinkers?' I said.

'Scrub road,' said the brakeman, 'dirt road-bed and no ballast; no time card and no train dispatcher. All trains run wild, and every engineer makes his own time, just as he pleases. Smoke if you want to; kind of go-as-you-please road. Too many side tracks, and every switch wide open all the time, with the switchman sound asleep and the target-lamp dead out. Get on as you please and get off when you want to. Don't have to show your tickets, and the conductor isn't expected to do anything but amuse the passengers. No, sir. I was offered a pass but I don't like the line. I don't like to travel on a road that has no terminus. Do you know, sir, I asked a division superintendent where that road ran to, and he said he hoped to die if he knew. I asked him if the general superintendent could tell me, and he said he didn't believe they had a general superintendent, and if they had he didn't know any more about the road than the passengers. I asked him who he reported to, and he said 'nobody.' I asked a conductor who he got his orders from, and he said he didn't take orders from any living man or dead ghost. And when I asked the engineer who he got his orders from, he said he'd like to see anybody give him orders; he'd run the train to suit himself, or he'd run it into the ditch. Now, you see, sir, I'm a railroad man, and I don't care to run on a road that has no time, makes no connections, runs nowhere, and has no superintendent. It may be all right, but I've railroaded too long to understand it.'

'Maybe you went to the Congregational church?'

'Popular road,' said the brakeman; 'an old road, too—one of the very oldest in the country. Good road-bed and comfortable cars. Well-managed road, too; directors don't interfere with division superintendents and train orders. Road's mighty popular, but it's mighty independent too. Yes, didn't one of the division superintendents down east discontinue one of the oldest stations on this line two or three years ago? But it is a mighty pleasant road to travel on—always has such a pleasant class of passengers.'

'Did you try the Methodist?' I said.

'Now you're shouting!' he said with some enthusiasm. Nice road eh? Fast time and plenty of passengers. Engines carry a power of steam and don't you forget it; steam-gauge shows a hundred and enough all the time. Lively road; when the conductor shouts 'all aboard' you can hear him at the next station. Every train-light shines like a head-light. Stop over checks are given on all through tickets, passenger can drop off the train as often as he likes, do the station two or three days, and hop on the next revival train that comes thundering along. Good whole-souled companionable conductors; ain't a road in the country where a passenger feels more at home. No passes; every passenger pays full traffic rates for his tickets. Wesleyan house air-brakes on all trains, too; pretty safe road, but I didn't ride over it yesterday.'

'Perhaps you tried the Baptist?' I guessed once more.

'Ah, ha!' said the brakeman, 'she's a daisy, isn't she? River road; beautiful curves; sweep around anything to keep close to the river, but it is all steel rail and rock ballast, single track all the way, not a side track from the round house to the terminus. Takes a heap of water to run it, though; double tanks at every station, and there isn't an engine in the shops that can pull a pound or run a mile with less than two guages. But it runs through a lovely country; those river roads always do; river on one side and hills on the other, and it's a steady climb up the grade all the way till the run ends where the fountain-head of the river begins. Yes, sir; I'll take the river road every time for a lovely trip; sure connections and a good time and no prairie dust blowing in at the windows. And yesterday, when the conductor came around for the tickets with a little basket punch, I didn't ask him to pass me but I paid my fare like a little man—25 cents for an hour's run and a little concert by the passengers thrown in. I tell you, pilgrim, you take the river road when you want—

But just here the long whistle from the engine announced a station and the brakeman hurried to the door, shouting: 'Zionsville! This train makes no stops between here and Indianapolis!'

A party of Israelites went out in a small yacht on a pleasure excursion. A gale arose and they were blown off the land. They were several days without food, and, despairing of being rescued, resigned themselves to die. They sank into a state of lethargy and were nearing dissolution, when the captain in charge of the little craft espied a vessel. He sprang to his feet exclaiming;

"A sail! a sail!",

"A sail!" echoed one of the Israelites, feebly.

A Letter from the Far West.

NO. III. MISSOURI RIVER.

Montana is distinguished by being traversed by the longest railroad and the longest river in the world. The Mississippi river was undoubtedly mistaken for the Missouri by the early explorers who gave its name. The Missouri certainly deserves the name of "Father of waters," instead of the Mississippi, and the Jefferson river is entitled to the distinction of the "grandfather" of waters since it is the principal of three rivers whose junction forms the Missouri.

A few months since your correspondent stood at the confluence of the Jefferson, the Madison and the Gallolin rivers—the latter rises in the National Park. These three rivers unite at a point called Gallotin on the northern Pacific railroad and form the Missouri river which thus becomes a considerable stream at its very inception, where it flows for ten or a dozen miles through the picturesque scenery of the Missouri Canyon and along whose tortuous course the northern Pacific runs.

From this spot where the Missouri commences, down to the Gulf of Mexico, its actual terminus, it is 4600 by actual survey, making it unquestionably the longest river in the world. About 800 miles of this river flows through the territory of Montana; and the Jefferson, before it becomes the Missouri, also flows about 150 miles.

The natural falls twenty miles above Fort Benton make that point the head of navigation on the Missouri. Should the contemplated canal around these falls ever be completed, it would make this immense river navigable for its entire length.

The navigable distance of the Mississippi to the falls of Saint Anthony, at Minneapolis, is 1200 miles and its entire length from its junction with the Missouri to its source, is 1700 and the total area of its water-shed is 200,000 square miles.

The navigable distance of the Missouri from Fort Benton to St. Louis is 2900 miles and St. Louis is still 1200 miles from its mouth, in the Gulf of Mexico; and its water-shed is 500,000 square miles of country—two and a half times that of the Mississippi. The sediment from the "Bad Lands" gives it the color which characterizes it as "the muddy Missouri," but for more than 600 miles the upper Missouri is clear and sparkling save in the Spring freshest, which by the way seldom or never overflows its banks—a peculiarity of Montana streams, probably due to the gradual melting of the snows in the mountains, thus giving to the mountain streams an equable flowage.

The scenery through which this mighty river finds its way is always attractive and often unsurpassed in all the world. The National Park, which is pronounced by all tourists as the wonderland of the world, gives rise to the Gallotin, which subsequently becomes the Missouri and to the Yellowstone which is a territory of the Missouri. Thus the great river is born amid grand and majestic scenes of nature which characterizes it during most of its long journey to the sea.

White Rock Canyon, some seventy miles from the source of the Missouri, is perhaps the grandest scene of all and constitutes "the gateway of the mountains" where the river is pressed into the narrow canyon six miles long, with its perpendicular sides rising from 6000 to 10,000 feet high and sometimes overhanging the middle of the stream. The beginning of this mighty gate-way through the Rocky mountains, is twenty miles from Helena and indicated by a peculiarly shaped peak known as "Bear tooth mountain," in plain sight of our home. We have never visited it, but a deer-hunt in the mountains is planned, which in a few days will afford us the coveted opportunity of gazing upon this weird and sublime scenery, and of traversing this majestic gate-way which nature has opened up for herself through the mighty barriers of the Rockys.

WELLMAN OSBORNE, Lynn, Mass.

Dear Sir.—In answer to your request as to the amount of your purchases for this season's trade would state that to this date they foot up sixty-six thousand one hundred and eighty-three dollars and fifty-one cents, ($66,183 51) of which $21,679.50 was purchased during November, and $11,194.74 during the present month. Truly yours,

THE STATEMENT made last week, at the hearing before the Railroad Commissioners, by Mr. Lawrence, of Allen Field & Lawrence, who, it is understood, are interested in the business of Alex. Clark, is of more importance than any opposition thus far developed. Mr. Lawrence explained the advantage it would be to his firm to have the track proposed. He told the reason for it, and frankly stated that if the petition was granted, the firm would very likely double their business in this town.

This is independent of the advantage Mr. Proctor will derive from it. We do not doubt that there will be some inconvenience to Winchester & Blaney from the proposed track. But will it not be a greater inconvenience to Mr. Proctor, to Webster Co., to Mr. Clark, and others to have no track to their factory? And is there any serious objection, outside of this inconvenience to Winchester & Blaney, to the construction of the proposed track?

We can't see any injury to the rights of the public—even in the slightest degree. The freight will be moved but once or twice a week; and it can be done at a time when no one will know anything about it, if in the judgment of our Selectmen, it is proper to so order it before granting full rights to the Railroad. On the contrary we contend that no obstacles should be laid in the way of any and all conveniences that will benefit the manufacturing interest of our town. It is on them that the growth of Peabody depends. It is for the advantage of the laboring man that all the work that can be done in town shall remain here—and that every encouragement should be given to have that work increased. And when a firm doing already a large business here say they can double that business if a certain thing is done, is it the policy of the town to stand in the way of its accomplishment? We don't believe it is—and we think the Board of Selectmen have acted wisely in granting the desired permission, as far as they are concerned, to the construction of the track. By reference to another column it will be seen that the Railroad Commissioners have also granted the certificate to the Eastern Railroad as required by them. They also give their reasons for the same, which we are glad to be able, through their courtesy, to present to our readers in full.

AN INTERESTING decision has just been rendered by the Supreme Court in reference to the sale of liquor on the Lord's day. The Sunday liquor selling has been one of the most difficult things the Law and Order Leagues have had to contend with. The law allows a hotel keeper, who has both a license of the first class and an innholder's license, to furnish liquor on the Lord's day to "guests who have resorted to his house for food or lodging." This has been considered by the hotel men to bear a very liberal interpretation. They have been pleased to consider everyone who patronized their bar as "guests." And it has generally been considered that if a party comes into a hotel, takes a seat at a table, and calls for a glass of liquor, he is a guest within the meaning of the statute. It has also been considered that the government must prove that such a party was not a guest within the meaning of the law, to insure a conviction of the innholder for an illegal sale. The Law and Order League have not so looked at it. In Cambridge they made a test case on this point. The lower court refused to instruct the jury that it devolved upon the government to prove that the parties seen drinking were not guests of the house, and it was carried to the Supreme Court. This Court sustains the decision of the Judge of the lower court, and makes the point so clear that we give the full text of the decision, as it must be interesting to all who are interested in the enforcement of the law:

Devens J. It is the contention of the defendant, the Government having shown that the alleged sale of intoxicating liquors was made on the Lord's day, and the defendant having proved that he had a license to sell intoxicating liquors, and also an innholders' license, that it was an erroneous instruction to the jury that the burden of proof was on the defendant to show that the persons to whom the alleged sales were made were guests of the hotel, who had resorted thereto for food and lodging.

In all criminal prosecutions in which the defendant relies for his justification upon any license, appointment, or authority, he is required to prove the same. P. S. C. 214 S. 12. If the defendant relies upon a license in justification of that which he is shown to have done, the burden of proof is upon him to show one broad enough to authorize the acts complained of. It was so held in Commonwealth vs. Rafferty, 133, Mass., 574, which was a complaint for maintaining a tenement used for the illegal sale of intoxicating liquors.

A license invests its possessor with an authority to do an act which would be otherwise illegal. If he be invested with that authority only in case certain circumstances exist, it is for the party relying on the license to prove the existence of the circumstances.

When this be done, his license is not applicable to the case which has been proved against him. The act done by the defendant was apparently illegal; it was for him, under the statute, to justify by showing a license therefor. He does not do this by exhibiting a license which by its conditions forbids the sale of liquor on the Lord's day, "except that, if the licensee be also licensed as an innholder, he may supply such liquor to guests who have resorted to his house for food or lodgings." In order that his license should be available to protect him in having made the sales on the Lord's day, it was necessary for the defendant to show not merely that he was a licensed innholder, but also that the persons to whom liquor had been supplied were guests who had resorted to his house for food or lodging.

Exceptions overruled.

IN ELECTING town officers for the ensuing year, we think it would be policy for the town to elect a Board of Selectmen and Assessors that shall be two separate and different Boards. The duties of the Selectmen and Assessors, as at present constituted, are of considerable importance, and occupy more time than many citizens could give to it. These duties will be greatly increased in years to come.

There are citizens whom the town, in their wisdom, might select as Selectmen who would be an honor to the town and the Board, but who could not be induced to serve if the duties of Assessor were to be added as at present. It is possible, too, that these are the very citizens whom the town ought to ask to serve them. On the other hand, there may be citizens who are peculiarly qualified to be Assessors; whose knowledge of the value of property would be of great service to the town, especially at the present time. Yet these men might and probably would fail of an election as Selectmen. We have several such in mind.

The town ought to have the best men for each department of service. And if by the election of separate Boards of Selectmen and Assessors, we shall gain anything, it should be done. We believe the town would have better service by such an election. Each Board would have more time to attend to its several duties. And we trust that the suggestion will be favorably received.

Railroad Commissioner's Report.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.

In Board of Railroad Commissioners,
January 27, 1885.

On the petition of the Eastern Railroad Company for a certificate of exigency for the construction of a branch or extension of its road in the town of Peabody.

After due notice and public hearing upon said petition the Board hereby certifies that public convenience and necessity require the construction of a branch or extension of the road of the Eastern Railroad Company in the town of Peabody, from that part of said road known as the Lawrence Branch, as set forth in said petition and shown on the plan therewith submitted.

The Board add to their certificate in this case a minute of their reasons for granting it: (1), because the grant was opposed for reasons honestly entertained and vigorously urged; and (2), because it is convenient to place on record the principles upon which the Board has acted, and may be expected to act in similar cases.

The only question before us is whether there is an exigency for a railroad between the proposed termini. The route and the question of grade crossing cannot now be formally decided. But where only one route is practicable or contemplated, the practical question is, whether there is an exigency for such a road as is proposed.

Unless there is public need of a railroad there exists no right to take for it one inch of any man's property against his will. And this need of showing public necessity is founded on a principle much older than the constitution of Massachusetts.

The principle applies whether the road is fifty miles long or fifty rods. Of course the amount of traffic which would justify a short road would not necessarily justify a longer one. But in either case it must be shown that public good demands construction.

The alleged exigency here is that by giving improved facilities for business the cost of conducting it will be decreased, and its prosperity promoted. The chief party to be directly benefited employs 150 hands and pays every year 80,000 to 100,000 dollars in wages. He will save $6000 in reduced cartage and wastage of material. Other parties employing about as many men will save perhaps $4000. It is said that this is private gain, and that the right of eminent domain cannot properly be exercised to that end. This argument seems to confound the motive which influences the promoters of the enterprise with the result of it. In most cases of railroad construction, whether under charter or general law, the chief motive of the parties is the selfish one of private gain, but if the result is an increase of business, of employment and of wages paid, then the public good is promoted. Anything which builds up and maintains and tends to enlarge an industry has always been held to be a public benefit.

Improved facilities for manufactures are especially desirable in New England. We have many industries whose existence today may be called almost artificial. They are conducted far from the points where their products are consumed, and where the raw material is produced, including fuel, one of the raw materials of almost every industry. Thus they are subjected to great natural disadvantages. For these we must make up by every possible saving. To effect these savings the railroads must allow them every possible facility; and the law and its agents must enable the railroads to do so. Every year competition grows keener, and the margin of profit becomes more narrow. And therefore, every year, it becomes more necessary to supply the place of natural advantages by the use of brains in business. This was the subject of a most eloquent address by Mr. Choate who once lived in Peabody; and his advice has been followed there as well as elsewhere in New England.

No clearer instance can be found of natural disadvantages overcome by mental resources than in the leather business of this immediate vicinity. It exists in spite of the greater cost of coal, of the raw material and the much greater cost of the bulky article of bark. It has flourished with only one natural advantage—the constant supply of remarkably pure water—because it happens to have been established here nearly a century and a half since, and it flourishes now because of the energy, industry and skill with which it is pursued.

But those qualities must be reenforced by the best facilities known at this time. Or rather these qualities are best displayed in seeking such facilities. And among the most important of these is the direct connection by rail of the works and the railroad. This is found in possession of the rivals of the Peabody tanners, both in distant states and nearer home. It must be had here, or the industry will suffer.

It is said that those, who want these facilities, established their works without them, and have done well without them. This argument would prevent any man who is living by his trade from acquiring any new facility or making any improvement. This view, or the want of energy and foresight which is its equivalent, has ruined many a man and many a place. In the close rivalry of competing industry in this country and at this time it is an unsafe and destructive idea.

The Board cannot doubt that there may be a public exigency for a railroad one fifth of a mile in length which removes from works employing nearly 300 men an annual tax of $10,000. The precedents are almost innumerable in which legislatures and courts have recognized the principle upon which this opinion is founded.

The remaining question is whether the public need is counterbalanced by any inconvenience. The chief inconvenience in this case is the proposed grade crossing of Walnut street, which, indeed, we are not asked to grant now, but which seems to be inevitable.

This will not be an ordinary grade crossing. The proposed railroad runs from the yards across this street, into Upton street, where it is to be laid longitudinally. This can only be done by consent of the selectmen, who have also complete power over the time and manner of its use, including the speed of the train, and who thus control the speed at the crossing. They may if they choose order all traffic to be conducted between midnight and sunrise. They may, and probably will, fix the rate of speed as low as 3 or 4 miles an hour, with other precautions to prevent accidents. It may be said that we are authorizing one danger because another is to be created. But the law which gives to the town authorities the exclusive right to allow construction through one street has given them power to enforce such conditions as will prevent danger both in the street that is occupied and in the street that is crossed.

The other objection to this road is that it will incommode the business of a worthy firm that have long done business on this spot. And it is true that their business will be somewhat incommoded. But it will not be seriously affected. And for the obstruction of their right of way they will be entitled to full recompense. As a small portion of their land will be taken, they will also be entitled to receive complete compensation for every other item of damage, including risk of fire and increase of insurance premium. For all damage, present and prospective, they will be made whole; and comparing the gain and the loss to the business of Peabody growing out of the proposed road we find a decided balance in its favor. And the Board has therefore granted the certificate asked. For the Board.

THOMAS RUSSELL, Chairman.

Malden's Experimental Driven Well System.—One of the most difficult problems which the city of Malden has had to solve is how to increase the water supply of the city. The water board, wishing to make an experiment with artesian, or driven wells, consulted B. F. Smith of 266 Washington street, Boston, who, with the president of the water board, Mr. W. A. Wilde, examined the location, on Eastern avenue, near Maplewood station, and decided to make the experiment, and with such good results that there is not a particle of doubt but what double the quantity can be obtained to supply the city of Malden, and of a superior quality. There being considerable talk in this city in reference to these wells, we sent a reporter there, who learns that the water is obtained from eight tubes (or driven wells) driven from 73 to 91 feet into the ground, through layers of sand and clay, 50 to 57 feet; then a solid bed of clay is found and under that, sand and coarse gravel. The principle amount of water is pumped from six 2 1-2 inch pipes, most of these pipes pumping 117 gallons each per minute, the ground occupied by these pipes covering a space only 30 feet wide and 50 feet long, four of these pipes being connected to a 4-inch suction pipe, where it is enlarged to a 6-inch pipe and a sand chamber attached, which causes the water to become free from sand, and the pump to work with less friction. The following will give an idea as to what the wells have done:—The pump was started December 6th, about 4 o'clock P. M., running continually for twenty-seven days and nights. The engineer states to have pumped at least 600,000 gallons of water per day, making a total of 16,200,000 gallons in twenty-seven days. This quantity is equal in weight to 2500 tons for twenty-four hours, or one day, and a total of 67,500 tons pumped in twenty-seven days. This water has been pumped to waste to test the quantity of water and the supply is deemed inexhaustible. The water has been tested and found to be as pure as when first drawn. The vacuum gauge showed from 8 to 10 pounds vacuum. There are but few towns or villages in the New England States but what could be supplied with water by the driven well system, which is very much cheaper than the present method of piping for miles from ponds or rivers.—Ex.

SKATING RINK NOTES.

An audience of 800 or more were present at the rink last evening to see the game of polo between the Peabodys and the new Paris team of East Boston. The Paris team wore a blue uniform with M. R. on the breast. It belonged to the Maveric Rifles and will be worn until the new ones are made. Mr. Chas. O'Malley, of Gloucester, was referee. Previous to the game Mr. O'Malley auctioned off the front row of seats in the gallery for the Peabody's benefit tomorrow night. J. B. Thomas bought two at $2.50; Frank Arnold two at $ 2.00; Franklin Osborn bought four at $1.00; J. B. Thomas 12 at 50 cents each; Fred Thomas 12 at 25 cents each and the five remaining were purchased by different ones at 50 cents each. When the referee blew his whistle for the first goal Felton of the home team secured the rush, but it was hardly out of his reach before the opposite side had it in the corner behind the Peabodys goal. It was followed by the players and work was lively for a few moments when the ball was seen to be rolling the other way and Phalen took it sending it with a splendid drive into the Paris goal. Time one minute and five seconds. The second goal opened by the Peabodys securing the rush and in this goal things were a little more lively, and several times Morrill, the Peabody goal tender, saved the goal by his usual excellent plays. Warren, the goal tender for the Paris, also made a fine stop. In this goal the ball was sent into the Paris cage but on a foul by Murray, Goulding also making a foul and the Paris team had a foul scored against them. Goulding made a quick shot sending the ball into the Paris cage. Time four minutes and 45 seconds. Again Billy Felton secured the rush in the opening of the third goal, and the ball did not leave the players of the home team, Goulding scooped the ball into the goal, after a play of ten seconds while the goal tender looked round in surprise for the ball. This gave the Peabodys three straight and the audience went wild with applause.

On Thursday evening last, the Peabodys met the Wright and Ditsons at the Salem rink in an exhibition game and defeated them in three straight goals. It was a very interesting game and was witnessed by a very large party from here. The Wright and Ditson's team is composed of renowned ball players and previous to the polo game gave a very interesting exhibition of base running and pitching of the past and present style. They will shortly appear here and give the same exhibition.

Below we publish the schedule of games to be played by the Peabodys:

January 28—East Boston, Peabody vs. Paris.

April 7—Peabody, Woburns vs. Peabodys.
April 14—Chelsea, Peabodys vs. Bay States.
April 21—Peabody, Bay States vs. Peabodys.

A well attended and enthusiastic meeting of the Massachusetts Polo League was held at Boston last Monday afternoon. President McCully of Peabody, who was injured a few days ago was not expected to be present but so earnestly did he care for the League's welfare that he came on crutches and presided. The resignation of the Lawrence Club was accepted. The following new rule to take effect immediately was adopted by an unanimous vote:

> If a rusher starts from the spot in the direction of the ball before the starting whistle is blown, it shall be deemed a foul.

To prevent members of the League leaving, it was voted to have each one bind himself in the sum of $500, to be forfeited to the League in case he withdraws before the end of the season. This is a rule that should have been adopted at the beginning of the season and we hope to see it strictly enforced.

Last Thursday afternoon as Manager H. N. McCully was hurrying for the train at East Boston, he fell on the ice and broke the small bone in his left ankle. He was assisted on the train by the conductor and brakeman, and taken to his home on Foster street, and the broken bone was set by Dr. Pike. Mr. McCully had been attending a meeting of the Massachusetts Polo League of which he is President. The accident will probably lay him up for five or six weeks.

COMFORT FOR TENDER FEET.

Hand Made Boots and Slippers for Ladies' wear. These goods, which we are selling for less than Boston prices, made from a superior quality of material, and by skillful workmen, are manufactured for us by S. J. Berry, who has always made our goods, and whose interest in the retail department of our business I have purchased. Ladies Boots, both Hand and Machine Made, from measure and a good fit assured. The best evidence we have that our goods prove satisfactory is the constantly increasing demand for them in our own city and other places. Also a full line of machine-made goods manufactured expressly for us by Mr. Berry. Misses' and Children's Spring-Heel Boots. Mundell's Celebrated Philadelphia Solar-Tip Boots for children. Nothing better.

LADY ATTENDANTS.

The game of polo at the Malden skating rink last Wednesday evening, between the Malden and Peabody teams, was an exciting and stubborn contest. Game was called at 9.25 o'clock and the first goal was won by the Peabodys in 2m. 20s. The second goal was taken by the Maldens in 10 s.; the third by the Peabodys in 3s., and the fourth by the Maldens in 2m. 30s. The fifth goal, after a severe struggle lasting 11 m., was won by the Peabodys.

A. O. Elwell, of the Danvers bicycle club, will probably enter slow and obstacle races which are to form part of an entertainment to be given by the Peabody club at Peabody rink, Feb. 5.—Mirror.

That was a wonderful goal made by the Peabodys at the rink on Wednesday evening, the sphere being sent into the Malden goal in just 3 seconds after the referee gave the signal to start.—Malden Mirror.

Seeley, the noted rusher, was missed from the Paris team last night.

The following are among the Peabody people who took part at the skating carnival at Danvers last week; Henry C. Wilson, jockey; Edward F. Kiley, muldoon; John T. Driscoll, Romeo; John A. Leighton, captain base ball club; Charles R. Newhall, fireman; Byron L. Bullens, regimental; J.A. Shepard, bicycle.

A person visiting Boston to pass away an evening in roller skating should not forget to attend the Boston Roller Skating Rink, under the management of Mr. F. E. Winslow. This is one of the finest rinks in the country.

Quite a number of people from this town will attend the fancy dress carnival in Marblehead to-morrow night.

The rink band is about to introduce several new pieces. This band is highly spoken of by many strangers who have visited the rink. They are to have a skating and dancing carnival at the rink on Thursday evening, Feb. 12.

To-night at the Salem skating rink, Prof. C. C. Martin and Miss Allie Lawry will give a double exhibition of fancy skating. During the present season they have given perfect satisfaction to crowded houses. Prof. Martin is well known as a fancy skater, as he has been before the public for the past three seasons. Manager Reed is trying to please his many patrons by securing some of the finest attractions to be obtained.

We learn that Hallet of Chelsea, who refereed the previous game between the Paris and Peabodys and whose decisions were so rank that he came very near being mobbed by an indignant audience, is still a referee and masquerading under the assumed name of Colingwood.

The Pacific Associates will hold one of their popular assemblies in Upton's Hall, next Wednesday night. Music will be by the Salem Cadet Band, and no pains will be spared to make it the best dance of the season. Tickets are now on sale, and we hope the boys will have a large party and a good time.

HOME HAPPENINGS.

It will be remembered by our readers that an action was brought against the firm of Proctor, Hunt and Haskell, leather dealers in Boston, by the inspector of leather in this State, to prevent them from selling sole leather not first inspected by him. The defendant demurred to the complaint on the ground that it did not set forth any offence under the laws of the Commonwealth, and that the court had no jurisdiction. It was argued in support of the demurrer that the statute was remedial and not penal, and provided simply for a forfeiture, to be recovered by the buyer injured by the sale, and that there was no remedy in any criminal action. The municipal court made a formal ruling in favor of the complainant, and the defendant appealed. The case was argued in the superior court upon appeal on Friday last, and Judge Mason has now given a decision sustaining the defendant's demurrer. The decision is of interest to leather dealers, as it in effect holds that the inspection of leather is not compulsory.

Mr. T. F. Child, of Rowley, was in town last week with a horse without shoes. The horse has not been shod since last March and during the recent slippery travelling he has been on the road and the horse has not slipped any more than when shod. The shoes were taken off last March on account of his being lamed by shoeing. The lameness was cured and the horse has done better than when wearing shoes. He is not troubled with "balling up" as with horses shod.

The Boston Home Journal has the following personal mention of a former resident: Mr. and Mrs. Byron Groce, accompanied by their son, Master Joseph B. Groce, will sail for Europe on the Servia, Feb. 11, and remain abroad until next September. They will, after a day or two at London and Paris, go directly to the South of France, from thence to Rome, Athens, afterward visiting Northern Italy, Germany and the Alps.

Mr. Prescott E. Grant, an old resident of the town, died at his home on Shaw's Court, last Saturday afternoon, after a short illness of Bright's disease, at the age of 61 years. Mr. Grant has spent an industrious life and was respected by neighbors and friends. He has built many houses in this town, probably more than any one man, as he used to do nearly all the work himself. He accumulated quite a property.

The Naumkeag Street Railway are satisfied with their experiment in heating their cars, or rather the four "all day cars." The expense is very little, it only requiring an outlay of about seven cents per day for coal to heat each car, and that small cost renders considerable comfort to the patrons of the road between here and Salem, during such weather as we have had this week.

An exchange says the following is a good mixture for egg producing foods for fowls. The amount taken when ground together and thoroughly mixed will make one bushel, viz: 20 pounds of corn, 15 pounds of oats, 10 pounds of barley and 5 of wheat bran. Feed for morning meal, give them scraps from the table for noon and corn for supper. Try it, eggs are still at a premium.

Thomas Motley of Forest Hill, F. H. Appleton of No. 23 Court street, Boston, and E. F. Bowditch of Framingham, representing the Massachusetts Society for Promoting Agriculture, announce that any farmer in this State having swine sick with any disease can, within 30 days from date, have a veterinary surgeon sent to him, free of expense, upon notifying either of the above named.

The committee appointed to act with the Selectmen and Representative Brown in opposition to the division of the town, organized last Friday night at the town hall, with S. A. Southwick as Chairman. A committee to raise money to defray expenses and procure counsel was appointed. The hearing will take place before the committee on towns, Jan. 29, at 10.30 o'clock.

Mr. James P. King enlightened the members of the West Peabody Farmers Club at their meeting last Friday evening upon "What position the farmers ought to occupy socially in the future of our Republic." After an able address upon the subject it was discussed by members of the Club. The Club hold an entertainment at School House Hall to-morrow evening.

John A. Lord, Jr's. horse attached to a sleigh, started from Wilson's machine shop Monday morning and ran across the square into the railroad station yard and was stopped by Mr. George H. Carr, the expressman. It looked at one time as if the shafts of the sleigh would run into the horse attached to Wilson's coupe.

All will be interested in the recent court decision to the effect that "the reports of commercial agencies to their subscribers are privileged communications and cannot be made the ground for libel prosecutions." This ruling is likely to work untold injury as it enables a commercial agency to ruin any business man it sees fit. The case has been appealed to the Supreme Court.

According to an election law passed last winter all town officers to be chosen this spring will have to be elected on one ticket, except moderator. This will be in conformity to the practice in this town for several years past. The ballots will be of uniform size also, not more than 13 1-2 or less than 12 1-2 in length and 4 1-2 in width.

The sixth annual convention of the Department Massachusetts Woman's Relief Corps, auxiliary to the Grand Army of the Republic, will be held at Friendship Hall, Odd Fellows' building, 515 Tremont street, Boston, on Thursday and Friday, January 29th and 30th. A Relief Corps with the Post in this town could do excellent work.

The business men are not patronizing the "speed and safety" line as yet to any great extent, although they appreciate the privilege. When they change the time and run through, with convenient cars, that will be the popular route to Boston. Years ago trains used to run on this line from Peabody to Boston in thirty-five minutes.

There is considerable anxiety felt by the friends of Mr. Wilbur Wing who formerly lived here, as to his whereabouts. When last heard from he left Mr. George H. Davis at Cleveland, Ohio, for a job in Illinois. His family consisting of a wife and two or three children reside in Cambridge with his mother.

Right amid the Epiphany season or the manifestivities of Christ to the Gentiles, occurs the Church Festival of the Conversion of St. Paul the great Apostle to the Gentiles. Last Sunday, the anniversary of this great event was duly celebrated at the Catholic church with full service and holy Communion.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Marble, who recently moved from Wakefield, were given a "house warming" and donation party by friends from that town last Saturday evening. They brought many tokens of good will and esteem. Music and games followed by a collation made the time pass quickly.

The Salem Gas Light Company has declared a dividend of three dollars per share and will from the first of January charge $2.50 per one thousand feet, making a discount of fifty cents per one thousand feet, when paid on or before the fifteenth day of the month when due.

The success of Kent's Remedy for Coughs and Colds is something remarkable. Mr. Lee is receiving orders every mail for it. It is a remedy that when once tried will be used always—and in that is its success. Try a bottle. Only 25 cents. For sale by all druggists.

The funeral of Patrick Daley took place last Saturday afternoon and was attended by the American Hibernian Benevolent Society, of which he was a member, in a body. There were over one hundred and fifty men in line, following the deceased to his last resting place.

Rev. Mr. Chipman of the Baptist church sent in his resignation last week to take effect on the first of March. At a meeting of the Society held Monday evening it was voted to accept the resignation, to take effect the second Sunday in February. There were 35 o 40 present.

In the window of George Stevens can always be seen a big supply of oranges. And the way they vanish is a caution. George always selects the best brands of oranges, and his customers know it, and that they are sure of getting good fruit.

It is now considered vulgar for a lady to make a lavish display of watch-chain. The watch is now worn in a pocket of the corsage from which depends a single small gold chain, about an eighth of a yard in length, with a ball fastened to the end of it.

We are indebted to the proprietors of the Boston Herald for one of the handsomest calendars of the season. The main figure upon it is that of an attractive looking newsboy, who is on the full jump and supposed to be crying the "Herald" at the top of his voice.

Mr. Fred G. Preston, of this office, has recently invented an ingenious check to be attached to any harness. It is claimed that it will uncheck a horse when he goes to drink and check him again without the driver leaving his seat.

Mr. Humphrey Moynahan was in the police Court Saturday morning, charged with illegally keeping liquor for sale and was fined $100 and costs, and for keeping a liquor nuisance, $100 and costs and three months in the House of Correction.

H. K. Pevear was thrown from his sleigh in Salem, Sunday, but no damage was done.

SPARKS.

Monday evening Hose Company No. 1 inaugurated their entry into the fire department by giving the members of the three other companies in the Central Station a supper, consisting of clam chowder and all the fixings, winding up with cigars all around. About forty sat down to the tables which were well loaded and all pronounced it the best they ever ate. All the companies in the house and the Board of Engineers were represented.

Tickets for the Annual Ball of the Three Ones and a Two are now on sale by the members of the different companies.

Engineer W. W. Reed is mentioned as a candidate for Selectman at the coming election.

The article in last week's PRESS about the doings of the Board of Engineers should have been credited to the Milford Journal, and was not the action of our own Board.

Monthly meetings of the different companies will be held next Monday evening.

The agent for the Harden Hand Grenade is pushing the introduction of his grenades in this town, having already supplied several of the large concerns with them. Would it not be a good idea to carry a few on the hook and ladder truck?

Hose 3 have received their new pung and have it loaded and ready for service.

The hydrants have been looked over pretty thoroughly during the cold spells. Only a few have been found frozen and those have been thawed out as soon as found.

Next Sunday evening there will be a Sacred Concert by the Centennial Jubilee Singers. This company of people were organized in 1876 for the Centennial; and have kept together ever since. Rev. J. W. Hamilton of the People's Church, Boston, was greatly pleased with them, and at his suggestion, they gave a number of concerts for the benefit of his Church. They sang in Danvers last Sunday evening, and with such success that they appeared again Monday evening to a crowded house. They sing songs strictly sacred in their character; the jubilee pieces are rendered by them better than by any singers we have heard. Their voices blend perfectly, and our readers may feel assured that this is the best sacred concert ever given in town. Reserved seats will be on sale at Spaulding's Drug Store this evening at 25 cents. Admission 15 cents.

Mrs. S. P. Wilson, 63 Central street, is about to put on the market a cough syrup which has been tested by a number of our towns people in years past. Mrs. Wilson has made the medicine for the last twenty years, and the demand for it from people who have learned its curing qualities has forced her to set a price on it and offer it to the public. It is warranted to cure coughs, colds and any throat difficulties.

The Essex Agricultural Society will hold an institute at the Town Hall, Beverly, on Friday, February 6th, 1885, at 9.30 o'clock A. M. Subject in the forenoon—"Birds and Insects," their relation to farmers, by Andrew Nichols, Jr., of Danvers. Afternoon—"Silos and Ensilage," by Geo. B. Forristall, of Tewksbury.

Our inside pages will be found very interesting this week. There is the third instalment of "Called Back"; Letter No. 3 from Rev. L. L. Wood; a column of interesting musical notes; Bob Burdetts' best sketch on the Creeds; The World's Prayer, published by request of several of our subscribers, beside other matter.

The American Grocer prints a table showing that sugar, tea, coffee, provisions, etc., are much lower now than in 1870, in some cases the price being less than half what it was then. Allowances should be made, however, for the difference in the rate of gold between 1870 and the present.

A report was received in the House last week, giving the vote on the license question last year. Whole number of votes, yes, 103,293; No 79,414; number of licenses in the state, first class, 3,385; second 335; third 70; fourth 1,985; fifth 409; sixth 482. The amount received in fees from Essex County was 95,844.42. Total in the whole state, $1,837,273.92.

The Peabodys and Paris play again to-night at East Boston.

WHAT IS AGOIL? It can hardly be credited except by those who have tested it. What a vast amount of pain and suffering may be saved by its use. Clean, pure and sure. For internal or external pain. D. P. Grosvenor sells stacks of it and will give a sample bottle free for trial.

From 2 until 9 P. M.,

on all Chronic, Obscure, and Difficult Diseases.

His Specialty embraces the cure of

CATARRH,

Throat Affections, Bronchitis, Asthma, Consumption,

DEAFNESS,

Discharge from the Ear, Eye Diseases, and Affections of the Blood and Nervous System.

CONSULTATION FREE.

[Dr. Lighthill can be found at his office, 115 Boylston street, Boston, from 8 until 12, daily.)

FROM REV. E. W. WHITNEY,

Formerly Pastor of the Universalist Church, Peabody, Mass.

For several years I have been troubled with Catarrh, which seriously interfered with my public speaking, and which baffled all my attempts to get permanent relief. Experienced surgeons operated upon me, and I was under the care of a Boston physician for two years, but obtained no lasting benefit. I applied various medicines, but failed to get relief. I was lead. by the advice of friends, to consult Dr. Lighthill. My faith was at the lowest ebb, but I am happy to say that after a few months' treatment no trace of my old trouble appears, and I have every reason to believe that the cure is permanent. I cordially recommend Dr. Lighthill to all who may be afflicted in a similar manner.

E. W. WHITNEY,

Peabody, Mass., June 27, 1879.

AN INTERESTING CASE.

A statement of Mr. Clement A. Thorndike, of the firm of L. A. May & Co., 127 Union street, Lynn, Mass.

To the Public:—Having been raised almost like one from the dead by the skillful treatment of Dr. Lighthill, and to benefit similar sufferers, I make this public statement of my case. For years I was troubled with Catarrh in my head, seriously affecting and almost destroying my nasal bone; the discharge was very profuse, requiring constant blowing and hawking for relief; gradually the irritation passed into my throat, producing hoarseness and a hacking cough, and finally it affected my bronchial tubes and lungs, leaving me a victim to consumption. The cough now became distressing and almost constant, and debilitating night sweats made their appearance. I lost flesh and became greatly emaciated. I consulted medical men and used various remedies, but all efforts for relief utterly failed. In that condition, and greatly disheartened and discouraged, I applied to Dr. Lighthill, whose able and thorough examination of my case proved to me that I was in the right hands. Convinced that he fully understood my condition, and, inspired with new hope, I placed myself under his care, and very soon experienced the benefit of his treatment. One after another of the symptoms of Catarrh left me. I gained in strength and weight, my cough and night sweats disappeared, and now I am only too thankful and delighted to be able to call myself well again. Hoping that this statement may give new courage and confidence to such as may suffer as I have,

I remain, respectfully,

CLEMENT A. THORNDIKE.

Lynn, June 18, 1881

CATARRH CURED.

FROM REV. E. C. BUTLER,

Beverly, Mass.

I most heartily recommend any one afflicted with that troublesome disease, Catarrh, to Dr. Lighthill. I have full confidence in him. His treatment has had the most gratifying results in my own case, which was severe and of long standing.

E. C. BUTLER,

Beverly, Mass., Oct. 29, 1879.

CURE OF DEAFNESS.

FROM RT. REV. T. F. HENDRIKEN, Bishop of Providence. R. I.

My Dear Dr. Lighthill: Permit me to thank you most heartily for your kindness to the Sisters of our Convent. I had no idea when I consulted you on Sister Demonica's deafness that you could so quickly restore her back to hearing, but she tells me that she hears now better than she did before. For this, and your kind and successful treatment of my own deafness, I thank you. Now I would be glad to have you refer your patients to me. You know I can recommend you as a physician and surgeon, thoroughly accomplished in those departments of medicine in which you practice. I owe you a debt of gratitude, and would be glad to pay it.

Very truly and sincerely yours

Rt. Rev. T. F. HENDRIKEN.

A complete and permanent cure of

ASTHMA.

REPORT FROM MR. C. F. BOYNTON, 31 MILK STREET, BOSTON, ROOM 35.

TO THE PUBLIC.

After having spent large sums of money, and found no relief, I was induced to apply to Dr. Lighthill, at 115 Boylston street, for treatment, having suffered from asthma in the worst form for six years, and I wish to say, for the benefit of others suffering as I did that DR. LIGHTHILL'S TREATMENT HAS MADE ME A WELL MAN, and I now can enjoy life, when before it was a dread to me. This cure was performed on me over a year ago, and I can confidently pronounce it a permanent one. I hope all afflicted with that dreadful disease will avail themselves of Dr. Lighthill's skilful services, for I feel morally sure he can cure them.

TESTIMONIALS.

"I regard Mr. Eddy as one of the most capable and successful practitioners with whom I have had official intercourse."
CHAS. MASON, Commissioner of Patents.

"Inventors cannot employ a person more trustworthy or more capable of securing for them an early and favorable consideration at the Patent Office."
EDMUND BURKE, late Com. of Patents.

BOSTON, Oct. 19, 1870.
R. H. EDDY, Esq.—Dear Sir: you procured for me, in 1870, my first patent. Since then you have acted for and advised me in hundreds of cases, and procured many patents, re-issues and extensions. I have occasionally employed the best agencies in New York, Philadelphia and Washington, but I still give you almost the whole of my business, in your line, and advise others to employ you.
Yours truly, GEORGE DRAPER.

Book Notices.

The Musical Record for January has for music, "Now was I wrong?" words by Chas. Rowe, music by Louis Engel; "L'Americaine," polka, by James H. Sykes; and "Love's Reply," words by Mary Mark-Lemon, music by A. H. Behrend. This excellent magazine of music, art and literature is edited by Dexter Smith and published by Oliver Ditson & Co., Boston, at $1 a year.

The February Century opens with a "Florentine Mosaic," with quaint illustrations. A portrait of Oliver Wendell Holmes adorns an analytical sketch of the witty doctor. The installment of "Huckleberry Finn," leaves the "King" and the "Duke," in something like a predicament. "Canada as a Winter Resort," has some charming illustrations. The paper of most interest is Grant's narrative of the Battle of Shiloh. Albert Sydney Johnson's connection with that battle is related by his son, and a rebel staff officer also furnishes some notes. Three valuable memoranda of the war are given, making this number of especial historic interest. The topics of the time and Bric-a-Brac are good as ever.

Lippincott's Magazine for February opens with the second installment of the amusing international story "On this Side," introducing Sir Robert Heathcote and his party on their arrival in New York and while gaining their first impressions of American manners and customs. Under the title of "Steerage to Liverpool, and Return," Thomas Wharton gives a graphic account of his experiences on board the "Oregon" and the "Alaska," and manages to convey the impression that for real enjoyment and opportunities of seeing life the steerage is to be preferred to the saloon on a transatlantic voyage. The Prussian Civil Service is described by Alfred C. Lee. Miss Brewster has an entertaining article on old Paris and its associations, and two very agreeable papers on "Cats and Poets" and Æsthetic Children," with some excellent short stories, poems and sketches, help to diversify the contents.

Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly for February is one of the most interesting numbers of this attractive magazine ever issued. The opening article is an exceedingly valuable one, on "Fredericksburg the Home of Washington's Boyhood and the Burial-place of his Mother" and accompanying it are seven appropriate illustrations. "Anecdotes of American Lawyers" is a gossipy and interesting contribution, finely illustrated; and Oscar W. Riggs's article on "King Cotton at New York," with its seven truthful views, affords an interesting glance of one of the industrial features of this country while the student of natural history will be specially interested in Ralph S. Tarr's "Animal Life at the Ocean-bottom," beautifully and curiously illustrated. Garrett Walker's thrilling romance, "The Death-mark," reaches its twenty-first chapter. The colored plate, "Household Pets," is a triumph of artistic color printing. The price is 25 cents a number, or $2.50 a year, postpaid. Mrs. Frank Leslie, 53, 55 and 57 Park Place, New York.

FOUND NO POISON.—Dr. Samuel K. Cox, D. D., Practical Analytical Chemist, Washington, D. C., who made thorough and careful analyses, reports that there is neither morphia, opium, emetics nor poisons in the Red Star Cough Cure; that it must prove a boon to those whose systems shrink from the use of such compounds, and especially to mothers, who justly dread the evil, and, at times, fatal effects of these dangerous drugs. He further states it is not only free from all opiates, poisons and emetics, (a thing which not one cough preparation in ten can boast) but it is altogether an original and most happy combination of the best remedial agents, and is as harmless as it is effective.

Sings Lilla N. Cushman, a western poet;

> "Take me within thy arms to-night,
> And give me a resting place."

Much we would like to do it, Lilla, but our arms are not sufficiently elastic—we are afraid they can't reach so far. Some other night. Lilla.—Pretzel's Weekly.

Two Dangerous Seasons.—Spring and fall are times when so many people get sick. The changes in the weather are severe on feeble persons, and even those naturally strong are apt, as they say, "to be feeling miserable." Then they are just in condition to be struck down with some kind of fever. A bottle or two of Parker's Tonic will invigorate the digestion, put liver, kidneys and blood in perfect order, and prevent more serious attacks. Why suffer, and perhaps die, when so simple a medicine will save you? Good for both sexes and all ages.

The Mackey-Bennett ocean cable is now in business and the reduced rate of forty cents a word is a real relief to the business community which has been obliged for years to pay the high prices of the old monopoly. Men with great wealth who spend their money in favor of science and humanity as instanced by the noble public spirit displayed by Jas. G. Bennet in the cable movement, the mission of Harry Stanley and many lesser but still important acts of beneficence are worth millions of petty schemes, for still larger fortunes, like Gould, Vanderbilt & Co.—Chelsea Telegraph.

MAYO'S

Compound Vegetable Anæsthetic.

A safe and pleasant substitute for gas and ether.

Discovered by Dr. N. K. Mayo of Boston, April 1883, subsequently administered by him in nearly two thousand cases, producing perfect slumber, being applicable to the child, the delicate sensitive woman as well as the hardy man. No ill effects have followed its use in any case, it acting rather as a vegetable tonic.

It controls the patient one-fourth longer than gas giving us time to remove from three to twenty teeth. It is with great confidence we have introduced it into our practice, giving very successful results.

To The Public.

Dr. Gray informs the people of Peabody and vicinity that he is now prepared to administer "Dr. Mayo's vegetable anæsthetic," which is giving universal satisfaction in New England. This anæsthetic is purely a vegetable compound and can be administered with perfect safety to children and people in delicate health. It has no after effect as is apt to be the case in Nitrous Oxide Gas and Ether.

THE HARLEM RAILROAD.

Valuable Suggestion of Interest to Men Employed on all Railroads—Read it. If You Would be Benefited.

No man is better known along the line of the Harlem R.R. than Conductor Trowbridge. He writes as follows:

CONDUCTORS' ROOM, HARLEM DEPOT,
NEW YORK, Feb. 1884.

Dear Sir,—I take pleasure in saying a good word for DR. KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY. I have used it for two years for Dyspepsia and derangement of the Liver, and can say with emphasis that it always affords prompt and complete relief. FAVORITE REMEDY is pleasant to the taste, thorough in its effects, never producing the slightest disagreeable or sickening sensation. Yours truly,

B. C. TROWBRIDGE.

But Mr. Trowbridge is not alone in his praise of DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY. Favorite Remedy is a positive cure for Malaria as well as Indigestion. Read the following from R. A. Campbell, Foreman of the sorting room in the Montgomery Paper Mill:

MONTGOMERY, ORANGE CO., N. Y., March 4, '84,
Dr. Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.

Dear Sir: I have used for some time your valuable medicine, FAVORITE REMEDY, for Malaria, and it has proved an effectual cure. After having tried a great many other medicines for a disorder of this kind without avail, I find DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY affords complete satisfaction, and I do heartily recommend it to all who suffer as I did.

R. A. CAMPBELL.

DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY is a positive cure for Malaria, Kidney, and Liver Diseases, and for all those ills peculiar to women.

MATAWAN, N. J., March 3, 1885.
Dr. Kennedy, M. D., Rondout, N. Y.:

Dear Sir: I have used your valuable medicine, FAVORITE REMEDY, in my family for Liver difficulties and find it an excellent preparation, worthy of the recommendation it bears.

THE WORLD'S PRAYER.

O Almighty Dollar! our acknowledged governor, preserver and benefactor we desire to approach thee, on this and every occasion, with that reverence which is due superior excellence, and that regard which should ever be cherished for exalted greatness. Almighty Dollar! without thee in the world we can do nothing, but with thee we can do all things. When sickness lays its palsying hand upon us thou canst provide for us the tenderest of nurses, the most skilful physicians, and when the last struggle of mortality is over, and we are being borne to the resting place of the dead thou canst provide a band of music and a military escort to accompany us thither; and last but not least, erect a magnificent monument over our graves with a lying epitaph to perpetuate our memories.

And while here in the midst of misfortunes and temptations of this life, we perhaps are accused of crime and brought before magistrates; thou Almighty Dollar canst secure to us a feed lawyer, a bribe judge, a packed jury; and we go scot free.

Be with us we pray thee, in all thy decimal parts, for we feel that thou art the one altogether lovely and the chiefest among ten thousands.

We feel there is no true condition in life where thy potent and all powerful charms are not felt. In thy absence how gloomy is the house and how desolate the hearthstone; but when thou, O Almighty Dollar, art with us how gleefully the Beefsteak sings on the gridiron; how genial the warmth of the Anthracite Coal or Hickory Wood diffuses throughout the apartments and what an exuberance of joy continues to swell every bosom.

Thou art the joy of our youth and the solace of old age. Thou canst adorn the gentleman and thou feedest the Jackass. Thou art the favorite of the Philospher, and the idol of the Lunkhead. Where an election is to be carried, O Almighty Dollar thou art the most potent argument of Politicians and Demagogues and the umpire that decides the contest.

Almighty Dollar thou art worshipped the world over. Thou hast no Hypocrites in thy temples or false hearts at thy altars. Kings and Courtiers bow before thee and all nations adore; thou art loved by the civilized and savage alike with unfeigned and unfaltering affections.

O Almighty Dollar in the acquirement and defence of Human Liberty thou hast placed Armies in the field and Navies on the ocean. At the uplifting of thy powerful hands their thunders would break and their lightnings flash. Thou hast bound continents together by the Telegraph Cables, and made the varied products of our country available to all by a perfect net of Railroads. The Forest has been prostrated and the desert made to blossom as the rose.

We continue to regard thee as the Handmaid of Religion, and the twin sister of Charity. When the light of thy shining countenance breaks through the gloom of famine-stricken Ireland, the shamrock wears a greener hue, and the Harp resounds in loftier strains, while weeping mothers and starving children rise above their wails of woe, as their heart and their heels resound to the thrilling strains of 'St. Patrick's Day in the Morning.'

When our Brothers and Sisters of the sunny South are smitten 'hip and thigh' by the climate scourge of Yellow Fever, and destitution prevails in consequence of the cessation of industries, and suffering is increased from lack of nurses, and medical attendants, and they call for the Almighty Dollar of the North, thou goest on the wings of love to their rescue, while the air that was discordant with groans and shrieks, becomes redolent with the exhilarating melodies of Yankee Doodle.

O, Almighty Dollar, be with us we beseech thee, attended by an inexpressible number of thy ministering angels, made in thy own image, even though they be but Silver Quarters, whose gladdening light shall illumine the vale of penury and want with Heavenly radiance, which shall cause the awakened soul to break forth in acclamations of joy.

Almighty Dollar, thou art the awakener of our energies, the guide of our footsteps and the goal of our being. Guided by thy silvery light we hope to reach the 'Golden Gate' triumphantly; enter while angel hands harmoniously sweep their golden harps, and we, on the golden streets, in the highest exhilaration of feeling, and with jubilant emotions, strike the Highland fling.

Almighty Dollar, thy shining face,
Bespeaks thy wondrous power;
In my pocket make thy resting place,
I need thee every hour.

And now, Almighty Dollar, in closing this invocation we realize and acknowledge that thou wert the God of our grandfathers, the two-fold God of their children, and the three-fold God of their grandchildren. Permit us to possess thee in abundance, and of all thy varied excellences, is our constant and unwavering Prayer. Amen.'

WHAT ALARMED THE HUSBAND:—There was one married man got scared the other night. He sent out a note to his wife about 9 o'clock to say he would not be home until late. The messenger boy, when he delivered the note happened to mention that he had gone to the wrong house and had been very wrathfully treated by a man for disturbing him. The wife read the note which was on a scrap of paper. She thought a a minute.

'I'll give you four bits if you'll take this note back and tell that story without saying you came here. Don't say it was the wrong number.'

The boy found the husband.

'Well, why do you bring this back?'

'They won't take it sir. A man came to the door and told me to go to the devil.'

'All right. Get out.'

The husband turned up quite early. He looked at his wife.

'I sent you a note, but the boy must have taken it to the wrong house.'

'I suppose so,' said the wife innocently, 'I haven't got it.'

And that man was dying to find out whether anybody had called, but he was afraid to ask.—The Christian at Work.

Scene: Refreshment room at a German railway station.

Count H.: "Waiter, bring me the bill of fare!" (Waiter does so.) "Is that all?"

Waiter; "Yes, sir."

Count: Horrible! Bring me the wine list." (Waiter brings it.) "Is that all?"

Waiter: "Yes, sir."

A student who had overheard the above now called out:

Student: "Waiter, bring me the bill of fare." (Reads it.) "Is that all?"

Waiter: "Yes, sir."

Student: "Horrible! Bring me the wine list." (After reading it.) "Is that all?"

Waiter: "Yes sir."

Student: "Horrible!"

Here Count H. gets up in a towering rage and approaches the student.

Count H.: "Sir, are you aware who I am? I am Count H.!"

Student: "Is that all? Horrible!" (Tableaux.)—San Francisco Ingleside.

The most abnormally modest girl I ever heard of came to town a few days ago, a graduate from Vassar College. I was in her sleeping room. Some handsome flowers that I had previously seen growing there were gone.

"Did you send them out for fear that, so some say, they might have a bad effect on your health while you slept?"

"Oh no, my dear," she murmured. "Botany was my hobby at school, and I became familiar with the fact that there are actually sexes in plants--males and females in every species, don't you know. Well, I found on examination that the flowers in this room were masculine and that didn't seem quite proper in a lady's chamber. Really I couldn't disrobe comfortably nor sleep in peace."—Clara Belle.

A French wit of a post-office turn of mind evolves the following:

"A married woman is a letter which has reached its address.

"A young girl is a letter not yet addressed.

"An old maid is a letter which has been forgotten and sent to the dead-letter office.

"I wish I was an owl," said the young lawyer as he gently felt the dimensions of her alligator belt.

"Why!" she asked.

"Because I could stay up all night, you know, dear," he replied.

"What would you want to do such a ridiculous thing as that for?" she tittered.

"To wit: To woo."—San Francisco Post.

Hearing of the Railroad Commissioners.

The Railroad Commissioners gave a hearing last Friday in the Selectmen's Room on the petition of the Eastern R. R. to lay the track to the factory of Thomas E. Proctor. Messrs. Russell, Stevens and Kinsley of the Commissioners were present; also General Manager Furber, of the Boston & Maine R. R., Master of Transportation Sanborn, and Supt. of Construction Bissell.

Henry Wardwell, Esq., opened the case for Mr. Proctor, in the absence of Mr. Evans, the attorney for the railroad, and explained the proposed road by the plan which is already familiar to our readers, and gave the advantages which it would be to Mr. Proctor and others.

Chas. A. Putnam, civil engineer who drew the plan, explained the route, and he proposed grades.

Mr. Bissell explained the proposed construction of the road. They would use a common T. rail; at the grade crossing it would be protected by a plank. A flat rail might be better but would cost more. In reply to a question by Mr. Blaney he did not consider that it would render the driving way useless.

Thomas E. Proctor made a similar statement to what he had given at a previous hearing: that it would be a saving to him of about $5000 a year.

A. G. Webster, of Webster & Co., explained the location of his property. He was in favor of the road if it would not injure his property, especially the drying field. If that could be left in as good condition as now he would not object. He thought this could be done by proper grading. It would be an advantage to his firm, particularly in the matter of limed skins, which now had to be teamed from Brighton. They had about nine loads a week, and it would be a saving to him of $1000 a year.

Mr. Lawrence, of Allen, Field & Lawrence, Boston, explained the changes in the morocco business the past few years. The work formerly done in New York is now done here. They bought limed skins; they have to be handled separately and they had to go to the expense of putting them in casks. If they had a track to the factory they could bring them directly from New York in the same car. They also brought them from Brighton. They used 250,000 a year from the latter place alone. If they had the track they should double their business here. Competition was pretty close; in Norwood they had a track where they could get their skins right in. In reply to Mr. Blaney he stated that Mr. Alex. Clark finished skins for his firm, and that he had done so for many years to their mutual benefit. The work which was done here could be done in New York, or elsewhere; the skins could be sent here in a partly finished state and the rest of the work done here.

S. A. Southwick thought it would be to the advantage of every business man here to have a spur track if he was situated so that he could do so. In the consideration of the matter by the Selectmen the advantage to the whole town was taken under advisement. The Board were unanimous in their action—one being absent. He stated that some of the signers to the petition had been to him, and said that it was signed by them under a misapprehension—possibly three of them.

H. P. Reed explained about the petition. Had supposed every man understood it. Mr. Proctor's teams went through Upton street carting bark alone nearly forty times a day, and several times more for leather and hides. He personally drove through many times. Very seldom met or saw any other team on the street.

This closed the case for the petitioners, and S. F. Blaney said that he appeared as a citizen, and was opposed to the road on principle. He had confidence in the Commissioners that the construction of such a road was contrary to their rule or wish. He was comparatively alone at this hearing; at the first one, a large number of citizens appeared in opposition to it. This was only one of a number of plans devised by Mr. Proctor for the advancement of his private interests. The Board should protect the citizen, the householder, in preference to any private individual. It had not been shown that public necessity required it. We know business is dull; but it is in just as fair a condition here as anywhere. He had a little business which he bought and paid for twenty years before Mr. Proctor established his here, and the proposed track would interfere with it. It was a matter of great importance to him. He did not believe the people who traveled the street which they proposed to cross were few in number. In the opinion of good judges it was the second street in town in point of travel. They could not lay the track without laying lives and limbs liable at grade crossing. The opposers to the petition were not granted any rights by the Selectmen except to look out for themselves, but the others appeared by counsel—by the town counsel, retained by the town in all matters except the rights of citizens. If the citizens desire the track he (the speaker) could stand it; but he thought they would regret it. It would be a great personal inconvenience to Winchester & Blaney, going in and out every day. He thought their usage of the 25 feet right of way was about half.

Mr. Proctor was going to get dollars out of the proposed track. He could not see wherein any individual citizen was to be benefited. Mr. P. wants the track at the sacrifice of the rights of others; he was willing to pay the speaker $1500 for a little piece of land, but he was not willing to pay the town for the right granted him. This track would be the entering wedge. We should have lots of other spur tracks—our streets will be full of them.

Several questions were asked Mr. Blaney by Mr. Wardwell with reference to a letter written to Mr. Proctor about selling his entire place, and various other matters. Mr. Blaney declined in most cases to make any direct reply but said he was willing to rely upon the judgment of the Commissioners in the matter. In reply to Mr. Russell, Mr. Blaney said his firm employed 15 or 20 men; business was dull at this time; had employed 55 men. The hearing closed about 2 o'clock, when the Commissioners adjourned to view the premises.

THE DRAMA.

Thatcher, Primrose & West's famous and famously successful troupe, now reputed to be stronger and more efficient than ever, returns to the scene of its triumphs for a brief sojourn. George Thatcher, the inimitable, will have "scope and verge enough" for fun making. Primrose and West will illustrate in their own artistic way the latest "hit" in dancing and a corps of skilful clog performers are to follow their lead. Billy Rice and the other comedians of the company will keep up their end, and the first part singing as well as the mirth-evoking sketches, are certain to win cordial approval. The programme is full of good things for the lovers of minstrelsy at the Boston Theatre.

For one week only, at the Park Theatre, Miss Davenport is to be seen in "Fedora" which was so decided a popular triumph at this house last season. The general cast gives promise of a smooth, effective performance of this most exacting play. The drama is to be staged with care, and elegant and costly costumes will be seen in the course of the enthralling Sardou drama.

The pleasant opera of Fantine enters on the second week of its season at the Museum. "Fantine" went well Monday last, and was received cordially. Every presentation since, however, has shown improvement. Miss Jansen is delightful as Fantine, and Mr. Fessenden sings the music of Francois so well as to make the role one of his foremost successes on the stage. Miss Dagna is certainly deserving of praise for a performance so bright as her Nicolet. "Fantine" is likely to grow in public favor the more it is heard.

Arrangements having been made for a Gilbert and Sullivan season at the Bijou, Strauss harmonies can echo from the stage of this "parlor home of opera" only for two weeks longer. "Prince Methusalem" should, in the meanwhile attract very largely. Janschowsky, who was so popular in "The Beggar Student" last season is acting with abundant spirit and singing with a power and effect that she has never surpassed. Rosalba Beecher is as handsome a Pulcinella as one could wish to see; As for DeWolfe Hopper and Maflin, their drollery would "carry" the opera had it no other claims for favorable consideration. It is very elegantly staged, and the production, in every detail, is completely satisfactory.

A fortnight hence and Margaret Mather comes to the Boston stage for an engagement that bids fair to be brilliant.

It will be observed that Sylvia C. Barry, No. 39 Market street, Lynn, has bought out the retail department of S. J. Berry & Co. This store is well known as the Ladies' Parlor Boot and Shoe Store. Only ladies' and misses boots and shoes are kept, and the goods are all made especially for the retail trade in this store. Lady attendants only are found in the store, and we invite our lady readers to visit this parlor store when next in Lynn.

The windows of Wilmot's Clothing store in Salem are filled with men's trousers, which he is selling this week at prices which can not long hold, even at this store. It will be advisable, therefore, for our readers who wish any of these bargains to be on hand before it is too late.

The announcement of Wellman Osborne, this week, should be read by every one who has boots, shoes or rubbers to buy. Everybody in Essex County knows of Wellman Osborne, of Lynn, and most of them have heard of the wonderful bargains he offers. Yet a glance at his advertisement this week will surprise our readers, and give them an intimation by which they can save money.

ASHTON

A resident on Tremont street is the proud owner of a house and having an eye to business and as his family was small he decided to rent the lower floor to Mrs.—a well known widow of masculine frame, at what he called a fair rental. Everything went along smoothly for several months or until the widow got too bashful about going up stairs and paying her rent. He sent the rent bill in several times by the children, but the widow treated the whole thing with silent contempt. Last Thursday morning he resolved to visit the buxom tenant and see if a personal interview wouldn't induce her to pay her rent. At first she received him kindly, but shortly took umbrage at his language, and seizing a coal shovel she gave her landlord several taps on the head, and a free and easy fight followed resulting in the defeat of the landlord who rushed out leaving the widow in peaceful possession of her apartments. The case will probably be settled in the courts.

The editor tells me there has been some objection to some of the rumors that I have published in this column. Now you musn't expect that I am going to verify every piece of street gossip that I hear, because I haven't the time in the first place and in the second you would know who was writing this. But rest assured that we will make them as correct as possible. Remember there is no smoke without some fire.

Some great paper has said "the twenty cent piece is a delusion and a fraud of the first water." It humiliates our business men twice—first when he receives it as a quarter and second when he planks it down on the counter of a neighbor expecting it is a quarter. He never notices when he takes it it is only equal to two dimes, while the other fellow when he tries to spend it is sure to detect it, and then no amount of explanation will convince him that he wasn't a rascal in a small way—about five cents worth. It is a venial coin going about getting five cents extra on false pretences. It is like Mark Twain's fly never so happy as when it can pass itself off as a currant in a fruit cake. Don't take it in and it won't take you in.

This is an ungrateful world as witness the following which was told me about a week ago. A clerk in a store on Main street had his sympathy so worked upon by a boy whose clothes "had gone to seed" or so short were the pants that they looked as if they had been "pulled too soon" that he went to the closet and taking down an old coat gave it to the urchin. Of course the coat didn't fit him any better than a Mother Hubbard and the sleeves hung over his hands like a scare crow. But this didn't trouble the boy and he went off without thanking the giver. Half an hour later the clerk was seen to rush from the store and looking frantically up and down the street. His companions followed him supposing he had gone suddenly crazy. After he had calmed himself a little he said there were half a dozen letters from his Sunday girl in that coat pocket. A search was made the boy found on Wallis street; he was just in the act of reading the letters, when he saw his benefactor coming and throwing the letters on the ground he was off like a streak. That was a narrow escape for Charlie.

The editor couldn't spare a whole reporter for so old a play as Uncle Tom's Cabin, which was exhibited in Salem last Friday night, so he gave the comps. to the office boy. Even he objected and said he had seen the play 'steen times. But he went and handed in about a column report, which as the editor wouldn't publish, he entreated me to put in this column, giving me permission to boil it down. "The number of people present equalled by four the number on the stage. Topsy was black as a nigger; but awful sassy and lively as a candidate for re-election. The police should fire the kids in the gallery, who guyed the dog when he stopped on the stage and went to chewing an umbrella instead of chasing Eliza. Anyhow Eliza and the bunch of infantile sweetness escaped and wasn't chawed up. The lawyer who said every minute or two his name was Marks, made me think of the feller what collects bills for the "boss", but then it wasn't him either. I seen the "Sparks" reporter on the stage, back behind and I guess he was helping hold the dog, but I ain't sure it was him. That yeller dog didn't look as if he would let a bone stay before him long."

SOUTH PEABODY.

Mr. R. P. Brown commenced cutting ice on Bartholomew's pond last Thursday; the ice on this pond being about ten inches thick. Mr. B. cuts about two thousand tons.

Mr. J. B. Thomas had a large gang of men at work scraping and getting ready to house his ice last Sunday, at Craig's Pond.

Miss Etta Chesley, grand-daughter of Mr. John Tapley, has been united in marriage to a Baptist minister of New York city.

The ice men at Brown's pond commenced harvesting their ice Tuesday morning. If the weather holds fair, they will get their houses full in about six days. Messrs. Newhall, Beede and Batchelder will house nearly six thousand tons at this pond.

The mum supper at the church vestry last Wednesday night was a financial success to the Ladies' Aid Society. The exercises consisted of singing by the choir, and readings by Mr. Winslow and Miss McPherson, also a song by Miss McPherson, Mrs. C. W. Davis and Miss Buxton. After the exercises about one hundred sat down to supper, nearly every one having to pay for it. About twenty-eight dollars was realized from the entertainment.

Rev. J. W. Colwell has been confined to the house the past week with a very bad throat.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles S. Basford have the sympathy of the community in the loss of their infant daughter, who died last Sunday morning with membranous croup. The funeral took place at the residence of Mrs. P. R. Basford's on Washington Street, Tuesday afternoon, a large number of relatives and friends being present. Rev. Mr. Hudson officiated.

Rev. J. W. Colwell has gone for a visit to his parents at Providence, R. I. for a few days.

The service at the Alms House next Sabbath morning, Feb. 1st, will be under charge of the W. C. T. U. Mrs. M. N. Hunt, Pres. of Lynn Union, will speak. It will commence at 10.15.

Mr. W. W. Reed is suggested for Selectman from South Peabody. Mr. Reed is a prominent G. A. R. man and a good worker.

The ladies are now reaping the fruit of their leap year campaign, says an exchange. Let's see, what are the fruits of a leap year campaign?

You need not go to Boston to get Cabinet Photographs at $3 per dozen. F. E. Taggard, of Lynn, is making some excellent ones for some of our Town's people.

Dedication Ode.

[Read at the dedication of the new Hollis Street Church, Boston. Set to music by George W. Chadwick.]

H. BERNARD CARPENTER.

Descend, thrice holy Night,
Giving to mortal sight
Kingdoms of heaven unrevealed of day,
Till fading fold by fold,
No veils of light withhold,
The dark-inhabiting God to whom we pray,
Who hither borne on plumes love stirred—
The nameless Life, the noiseless Word,
Now makes his own this temple built of clay.

CHORUS.

For thou, Lord, holdest higher
Than sun or star-born fire
Whatever springs toward thee from man's desire,
And most of all, what Thought hath planned,
Or Labor wrought in every land,
Begot by human heart and born from human hand.

Not skies, nor ocean sands.
But temples made with hands,
Whereon his children's manual sign is laid,
Have won the God star-crowned
Earthward, and men have found
God's thought inhabits what man's hand hath made,
And a soul breathes from ruined sphinx
More than from seas which sunlight drinks,
Or singing hills with stream and forest-shade.

Make then this dwelling place
Glad with all-influent grace,
Lord of our spirits, to whose swift silent key
Life's iron gates unfold
And death's dim door of gold.
Not for ourselves pour we these prayers to thee,
But for all hearts that love and mourn,
Faint feet, void hands and hopes forlorn,
All who shall seek this place in days to be.

If any enter here
Heart-sore, or faint through fear,
Or fed with bitter fruit of years' increase,
May they 'mid hate and harm
Find round them, like God's arm,
A pure, deep-havened rest where care shall cease;
As behind roar of coral reef
The sailor moors, and all his grief
Sleeps in still tides and shades of perfect peace.

If in dark days to come
Justice and Truth lie dumb,
Caught by brawn-shouldered Wrong and backward hurled,
Let each past prophet's name
Rise here to robe in flame
Our children's hearts, and be a sigh unfurled
To hopes that, laughing ours to scorn,
Shall fill Time's yet unbreathed horn
And shake the high towered falsehoods of the world.

When Wedlock in this house
Shall seal its low-voiced vows
In the first witnessed word and pledge thereof,
May a soul-centered strength
Fulfill the depth and length
Of the twin life, that never from above
Shall draw the avenging Gods to earth,
Those Powers that wait on human birth,
Swift to pursue light faith and lawless love.

When with slow steps, scarce heard,
Pale Grief, that saith no word,
Bends her last look where lies the pulseless heart,
O Death! then may'st thou prove
That man's Lord Saviour, Love,
Is found in all dark places where thou art
That Love grows warm where Death draws nigh;
And that if all things did not die,
Soon Love himself must perish and depart.

From year to new-born year
Stay, thou veiled Presence, here,
For all whose brows shall wear, as we ourselves,
Life's morn, noon's larger light,
And eve's last, heavenliest white—
For toil, that through clear day and darkness delves,
That woos the chisel, brush or pen,
The iron-pathed flight of traveling men,
And the sea's rage round death's loud-foaming shelves,

CHORUS.

For thou, Lord, holdest higher
Than sun or star born fire
Whatever springs toward thee from man's desire,
And most of all, what thought hath planned,
Or Labor wrought in every land,
Begot by human heart and born from human hand.

Peabody people who visit the Electrical Exhibition in Boston, can take at the Boston depot the Columbus-avenue cars to West Newton street, and be left within a few rods of the Association Building, and thus save the trouble and expense of changing horse cars and paying two fares. The Exhibition is well worth visiting, and much valuable information can be obtained there.

THE DRAMA.

Last week of Thatcher, Primrose & West's Minstrels at the Boston Theatre. Standing room only was displayed at the opening performance, and the theatre has been crowded every night since. An entire change of bill is promised this week.

At the Park Theatre, Robson and Crane appears in "Forbidden Fruit." Mr. Stuart Robson impersonates the guileless Cato Dove, who is inveigled into "making a night of it," while Mr. William H. Crane is to be seen as that aggressive and extremely lively old boy, Major Buster. Of course the daughters of Eve, married and unwed, have their part to play(and no unimportant part it is)in the complications and mirth-evoking scenes of "Forbidden Fruit."

Strauss gives place to Arthur Sullivan, and German opera retires at the Bijou, to make room for a revival of "Patience." Miss Mary Beebe, whose career as prima donna of the Ideals made her such a name among lyric artists, is to essay the title-role. She has a multitude of admirers in Boston. Digby V. Bell, who is well established in favor here, is to be the Grosvenor. That capital comedian Mr. J. H. Ryley is assigned the role of Bunthorne. Pretty Irene Perry is to appear as Lady Angela, Miss Rose Leighton as Lady Saphir and Laura Joyce as Lady Jane.

It has caught the public favor unmistakably, this pleasant, graceful opera, "Fantine." Indeed, judging from the excellent attendance at the Boston Museum, the revival of this lyric success is to be more prosperous than the original production last autumn. The company headed by pretty and piquant Marie Jansen and the favorite tenor, Mr. W. H. Fessenden, does justice to score and libretto, and the performances are followed with constant interest and often warmly applauded. "Fantine" enters its third week of success.

"Iolanthe" will succeed "Fantine" at the Museum a fortnight hence. Marie Jansen will be the Phyllis, Miss Dayne the Iolanthe, Mr. Wilson the Lord Chancellor and Mr. Fessenden the Lord Tolloler.

The return of Margaret Mather to the Boston stage, will be effected next week at the Boston Theatre. That the gifted lady will have a cordial reception from a public which was quick to recognize her rare talent cannot be doubted. Miss Mather is to make her reentrance in a role that is the most important in her extended repertory—that of Lady Macbeth. In the course of Miss Mather's engagement of a fortnight at the Boston theatre, she will be seen in "Romeo and Juliet" and other familiar dramas in her repertory, as well as in the "Honeymoon" which she has never presented in this city. Manager J. M. Hill has a strong company for the star, including Milnes Levick, Frederick Paulding and William Davidge.

Messrs. Raymond and Whitcomb announce their fifth annual series of spring excursions to Colorado and California. There will be three dates of departure, viz: April 16, 23 and 30, and the programme provides a magnificent sight-seeing round of 59 days. There will be halts at Chicago, Denver, Manitou, Sante Fe and Los Angeles on the outward trip, a prolonged stop at San Francisco with a five days' visit to Monterey, and a short sojourn at Salt Lake City returning. In addition there will be a detour of over a thousand miles through Colorado with visits to some of the greatest scenic wonders in the Rocky Mountains, including Clear Creek Canon, the Loyal Gorge, Marshall Pass, La Veta Pass and Toltec Gorge. Ample time is allowed for all who desire to visit the Yosemite Valley and Big Tree Groves. These trips are planned on the most liberal scale with first-class accomodations everywhere and are patronized by the best class of travellers. A circular giving full particulars regarding rates, daily movement of the parties, etc., may be had by addressing W. Raymond, 240 Washington street, Boston.

This is the very time when eggs are worth the most, when hens want to lay as much or more than they do at any time, and when they are not allowed to do so by most poultry keepers. Folks think there is a great mystery about making hens lay in winter. There is none; anybody can do it; that is, the hens will lay if you will let them. They bear a good deal of cold in the sunshine, and even freeze their combs and toes, and yet will not stop laying altogether if they can sleep warm. Now do not begin to plan setting up a stove in the hen house, or introducing steam pipes. Artificial heat is not poisonous perhaps but very nearly so to chickens. They are warm themselves and need only to be crowded on their roosts with the roosts on one level. The ceiling of the roosting room should be only a few feet above the fowl's heads and provided with ventilation from the floor if possible. Give them very close quarters, with no drafts of cold air, and clean out under the roosts every morning, not excepting Sundays. The combs will then redden up, and eggs will be plenty on less feed than usual. It must not be corn, however, or only a small percentage of it, for this will make them too fat to lay well if they sleep warm.—American Agriculturist.

DARK DAYS.

thing go as well as can be in such cases, the girl must be kept in seclusion and quiet for at least a fortnight or three weeks. I groaned as I thought of what would happen if Philippa was arrested and carried before the magistrates, accused of the awful crime. From that moment until the day of her death she would be insane.

Yet, what help was there for it? The moment the deed is known—the moment Mrs. Wilson learns that Sir Mervyn Ferrand has been found shot through the heart, she will let it be known that Lady Ferrand is at hand; and Lady Ferrand, who has been passing under the name of Mrs. Farmer, will be sought and found. And then—and then!

Even if she did not die at once—even if she recovered—oh, the shame of the trial! No jury could or would convict her; but for Philippa, my queen, to stand in the dock, to plead for her life. To know that, whether convicted or acquitted, the deed was done by her. To know that all England is talking of her wrongs and her vengeance. Horrible! Horrible! It shall never be. Rather will I give her a draught of opium heavy enough to close her eyes forever. There will be plenty more of the drug left for me!

Fool that I was! Why did I do things by halves? Why, for her sake, did I not hide the dead man where none would find him? Why did I not rifle his pockets, so that suspicion should have pointed to a vulgar murderer—some one who had killed him for mere plunder? Why did I not, at least, destroy any letters or papers which were about him? Identification might then have been rendered difficult, and perhaps been delayed for weeks. In that time I might have saved her.

Why do I not do this now? I started to my feet; then sank back into my chair. No; not even for Phillipa's sake could I go go again to that spot. If I did so, I should return as mad as she is now.

Not being able to bring myself to adopt the grewsome alternative, I could do nothing save wait events—nothing, at least, to avert the consequences of her delirious act.

But for her something must be done. How could she, in her frenzied state, be left here—her only companions two men? Nurses must at once be procured. I summoned William and told him he must go to London by the first train in the morning.

William would have received my instructions to go to the Antipodes with imperturbability. He merely expressed a doubt as to whether any one would be able to get to London to-morrow on account of the snow. I walked to the window and looked out.

The night was still one mad whirl of snow flakes. The window-panes were half covered by such as managed to find a resting place there. As I watched what I could see of the wild white dance, I found myself thinking that by now that dead man on the road must be covered an inch—must have lost shape and outline. I shivered as I turned away.

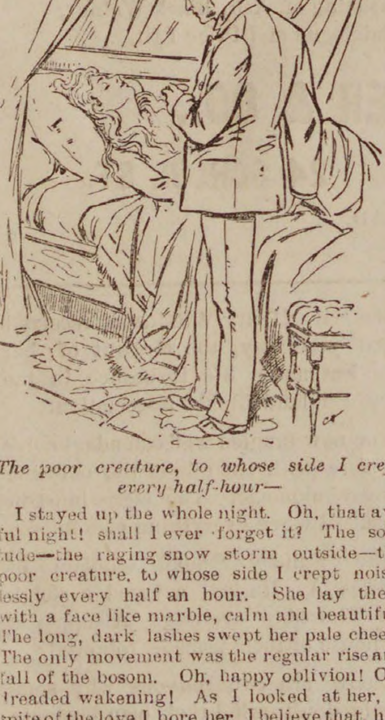
"They are sure to keep the line to town open," I said. "If you can get to Roding, you can get to London."

"Oh, I can get to Roding right enough!" said William.

Then I told him what he was to do. He was to take a letter to one of the Nursing Institutions, and bring back two nurses with him. No matter what the weather was when they reached Roding, they were to come to my houss at once, even if they had to hire twenty horses to drag them there. He was also to get me a few drugs that I might want.

William said no more. He nodded, to show that he understood me; and I knew if it were possible to do my bidding it would be done.

Of his own accord he then brought me food. I ate, for I knew that I should want all my strength to support the anxiety of the next day or two.



The poor creature, to whose side I crept every half-hour—

I stayed up the whole night. Oh, that awful night! shall I ever forget it? The solitude—the raging snow storm outside—the poor creature, to whose side I crept noiselessly every half an hour. She lay there with a face like marble, calm and beautiful. The long, dark lashes swept her pale cheek. The only movement was the regular rise and fall of the bosom. Oh, happy oblivion! Oh, dreaded wakening! As I looked at her, in spite of the love I bore her, I believe that, had I thought such a prayer would be answered, I should for her sake have prayed that those lashes might never again be lifted.

Morning at last broke on my dreary vigil. Philippa still slept. I returned to the sitting room and drew back the curtains from the window. Yes; it was morning—such a morning as leaden, wintry skies can give. It was still snowing as heavily, if not more heavily, than it had snowed last night. For twelve hours the flakes had fallen without intermission.

There was little wind now; it had dropped, I knew, about an hour ago. The world, so far as I could see, was clad in white: but the snow lay unevenly. The wind had blown it into drifts. On my garden path its depth might be counted by inches; against my garden wall by feet.

William now made his appearance. He prepared some breakfast for himself, and then, having done justice to it, started for Roding. It occurred to me that he might be the first to find the object which lay on the roadside.

Except that so doing might delay him and cause him to miss the train, this mattered little. I was now calmly awaiting the inevitable. Some one must make the discovery. However, as I wanted the nurses, I said to him:

"Remember this is life and death. Nothing must stop you." He touched his hat in a reassuring manner, and tramped off through the snow.

I returned to my patient's bedside and sat watching her, and waiting for her to awake. She had now slept for nearly eleven hours, and I knew that return to life might take place at any moment. I longed for, and yet I dreaded, her awakening. When the effects of the opiate were gone, how should I find her? Alas! I knew that the chances were a thousand to one that her brain would still be full of strange delusions; that she would turn from me, as she turned last night, with loathing and anger. But my greatest fear was that she would, upon coming to herself, or rather to her poor insane self, be conscious of the act she had accomplished. It was the fear of this which made me wish that the opium would hold her in its drowsy grasp or hours longer.

This wish was granted. Hour after hour I sat by her motionless form. Now and again I glanced from the beautiful, senseless face, and looking out of the window saw the snow still falling. Would my messenger ever be able to reach town; if he did so, would he be able to return? I was bound to have a woman's aid. The presence of the roughest daughter of the plow would be welcome to me when Philippa awoke. And it was now time she did so.

Although I felt her pulse almost every other minute, and could find no reason for alarm, I am bound to say that her long sleep, protracted far beyond any I had in my experience seen produced by the exhibition of narcotics, rendered me very uneasy. I shall, I am sure, scarcely be credited when I say that Philippa's unconsciousness lasted for 16 hours—from 9.30 at night to 1.30 on the following afternoon. I began then to think the duration abnormal, and determined to take some steps towards arousing her.

But I was spared the responsibility. She stirred on the couch. Her turned languidly on the pillow. Her dark eyes opened, closed, and opened again. She looked at me in a dazed manner, not at first seeming to know me, or to understand why I was near her, or where she was. A prey to the wildest anxiety, I leaned over her and waited until she spoke.

Little by little her bewilderment seemed to leave her. Her eyes rested with curious inquiry upon mine. "Basil," she said faintly, but in a tone of surprise, "you here? Where am I?"

"Under my roof—your brother's roof," I said.

"Ah! I remember," she said, with a deep sigh. Then she closed her eyes, and once more seemed to sleep.

What did she remember? It seemed to me too great a mercy to expect that those hours of oblivion had effected a cure, but my hope was that she did not remember what had happened when she met Sir Mervyn Ferrand on the road. I was almost trembling with excitement. I was longing to really know in what state her mind was. Besides, I thought she had slept as long as was good for her. I took her hands and called her by name.

Once more she opened her eyes. They expressed no fear of me, no dislike to me. They conveyed no reproach. They were calm, sad, weary, but gave no evidence of any mental disorder.

"Have I been ill long, Basil?" she asked.

"Not very long. You are going to get better soon."

"I came to your house, did I not?"

"Yes; and here I mean to keep you. Do you feel weak?"

"Very weak. Basil, I have dreamed such horrible things."

"You have been feverish and delirious. People like that always fancy strange things."

She was, indeed, as weak as a child; but for the time, at least, she was perfectly sane. I could have cried for joy as I heard her faint but collected words. I ventured to hope that I had before me one of those very rare cases—such as I had seen described, but had not as yet met with—where the patient awakes from a long, artificially-produced sleep perfectly free from all maniacal symptoms. If this were so with Philippa, if the return of reason were to be permanent, I knew that a few weeks' careful nursing and judicious treatment might quite restore her to health. Even as this comforting thought came to me, I remembered the peril in which she stood. To-morrow—aye, even to-day—the thing which I dreaded might happen, and sweep away all the good the narcotic had done her.

She was now fully awake, and perfectly quiet. I gave her some refreshment; then seeing she was lying in peaceful silence, I thought it better to leave her. As I quitted her room I drew down the blind, fearing that the whirling snow might bring recollections which it was my one wish to keep from invading her mind.

The long, dreary day wore away. The light faded, and another night began. Philippa still lay calm, silent, and almost apathetic. I did nothing to rouse her. I went to her side as seldom as possible. I feared that her seeing me might recall the events of the last night, and that recollections so awakened might destroy all the good which I felt sure had been accomplished by the long hours of oblivion and quiet. Could I have deputed my task to another, I would not have even shown myself to my patient. Most anxiously, as evening came, I awaited the appearance of my faithful William and the nurses.

Would they be able to reach us in such weather? It was still snowing fiercely. For more than twenty-four hours the mad white revel had continued without intermission. Indeed, that storm which burst upon the world as I turned from Philippa's house on the preceding night is now historical; it was the beginning of the heaviest and longest fall which the record of fifty years can show. For two nights and a day the snow came down in what may almost be called drifting masses. During that dismal day I saw from the window the heaps against the wall grow deeper and deeper, and even in my preoccupied state of mind found myself marvelling at the sustained fury of the storm.

At 11 o'clock at night I sadly gave up all hope of the much needed assistance arriving. After all, it seemed that William had found it impossible to fight against the weather; so I made my preparations for another night of solitary watchfulness. I was all but worn out with fatigue; yet I dared not sleep. If the mania returned, what might happen were I not at hand to restrain Philippa's actions? My hope that the madness had really left my patient, not, if she were properly treated, to return, was a growing one, but not yet strong enough to allow me to leave her for any length of time.

My delight then may be imagined when, looking for the hundredth time up the road, I saw close at hand two flashing lights, and knew that William, the faithful, had done my bidding. In a few minutes two respectable women from one of the best of the London nursing institutions were within my walls.

The train had, of course, been late, very late. At one or two places on the line it had almost given up the battle, and settled down quietly until dug out; but steam and iron had conquered, and at last it did get to Roding. There William, knowing my dire necessity, offered such a magnificent bribe that he soon found an enterprising carriage proprietor who was willing to make the attempt to force two horses and a carriage over six miles of road between Roding and my house. The attempt was successful, although the rate of progression was slow; and William triumphantly ushered his charges into my presence.

After giving them time for rest and refreshment, I explained the nature of the case, set out the treatment I wished to be adopted, and then led them to Philippa. I left the poor girl in their charge for the night, then went to take the sleep of which I stood so much in need.

But before going to bed I saw William. I dreaded to hear him say what gruesome sight he had seen that morning; yet I was bound to learn if the deed had yet been made public.

"Did you manage to get to Roding all right this morning?" I asked with assumed carelessness.

"I managed all right, sir," said William, cheerfully.

"Snow deep on the road?"

"Not so deep as I fancied 'twould be. All drifted and blown up to one side, like. I never seen such a thing. Drift must have been feet deep this morning. What must it be now, I wonder? Something like the Arctic regions, I should think, sir?"

For the first time for hours and hours a ray of hope flashed across me. William had walked that lonely road this morning, and noticed nothing except the drifted snow! I remembered how I placed the dead man in the little hollow at the bottom of the bank. Could it be that the kindly, merciful snow, which I have already described as beginning to form in a winding-sheet, had hidden and buried him? That a pure white, shapeless heap, which told no tales, concealed for a while the dark deed from the world? Oh that Philippa were well enough to leave this place to-morrow! We might fly and leave no trace behind us. She might never know what she had done in her madness. The fearful secret would be mine alone. A burden it would be, but one which I might easily find strength enough to bear. Bear it! I could bear it, and be happy; for something told me that, could I but save her from the peril which menaced her, Philippa and I would part no more in this world until death, the only conqueror of such love as mine, swept us asunder.

Once more I looked out into the night. Still the snow-flakes whirled down. Oh, brave, kind snow! Fall, fall, fall! Pile the masses on the dead wretch. Hide him deep in your bosom. Fall for weeks, for months, forever! Save my love and me!

CHAPTER VI.

THE SECRET KEPT.

It is needless to say that when I awoke the next morning my first thought was of Philippa; but my first action was to go to my window and look at the skies. My heart sank within me as I saw that the snow had ceased falling, and the wintry sun was shining. I threw up the sash; the cold air cut me like a knife. I gathered up a handful of snow from the window-sill. It crumbled in my fingers like tooth-powder. I guessed at once that a hard black frost had succeeded the snow. I ran down stairs and glanced at my thermometer outside my sitting room window. It registered twelve degrees of frost. My spirits rose; I felt that Philippa would be saved. The wind was due east; so long as it stayed there the frost would last, and that white tomb on the roadside hide the secret of the dreadful night.

I found, moreover, that Philippa's condition was all that could, under the circumstances, be hoped for. Since she had awakened from that long sleep into which the opiate had plunged her, there had been no recurrence of the delusions; no symptoms which gave me any alarm. She was, of course, weak in body, but quite quiet and collected. She spoke but little, and the few words which she did speak had no bearing on forbidden or disturbing subjects.

Day after day went by, and still the brave black frost held the world in its iron grip, and kept the secret of the night. Morning after morning I woke to find the wind still blowing from the east, the skies clear and showing every evidence of a long spell of hard weather. A presentiment that we should be saved was now firmly established in my mind. The heavens themselves seemed to be shielding us and working for us.

I have not given the year in which these things occurred; but many who can remember that mighty fall of snow, and the time which the frost kept it on the earth, will be able to fix the date. Since that year there has been no weather like it.

Day by day Philippa grew better and stronger. I spare you, as I promised to, all description which is not absolutely necessary of my treatment of my patient, and all technical summary of the case; but before many days had gone by I knew that, as I hoped, I had to deal with one of those rare instances in which the balance of the mind is restored by forced sleep, and the complete restoration of health is but a matter of time and care.

As soon as it became a certainty that all danger to life or reason was at an end I began to consider what course to adopt. The moment she was well enough to risk the journey, or even, if a thaw set in, before then, Philippa must fly from the scene of the tragedy in which she had played so terrible, yet morally irresponsible, a part. We must put land and seas between ourselves and the fatal spot. But how to persuade her that such a flight was absolutely necessary? Brother and sister as we now termed ourselves, would she ever consent to accompany me abroad? Had I the right to put the woman I loved in such an equivocal position? No! a thousand times no! And yet I knew there was no safety for her in England; and with whom could she leave England save with me?

I dared not urge upon her my true reason for flight. It was my greatest hope that the events of that night had left her mind when the madness left her, never to be recalled. And now time was pressing; ten days had passed by. The glorious frost still kept our counsel, but it could not last forever. The time must come when the white heaps of snow would melt and vanish away, and then Sir Mervyn Ferrand's cold dead face would appear, and tell the tale of his death to the first passer by.

I had scarcely quitted the house since that night. Yet one day a kind of morbid fascination had led me to walk along the road toward Roding, and to halt at what I judged to be the spot where I laid the dead man by the side of the road. I fancied I could single out the very drift under which that awful thing lay, and a dreary temptation to probe the white heap with my stick, and make sure, assailed me. I resisted it, and turned away from the spot.

There was a certain amount of traffic on the road. By now the snow had been beaten down by cart wheels and people's feet, so that it was quite possible to walk from one place to another. As I reached the house from which Philippa fled to seek refuge with me, I encountered Mrs. Wilson. I was going to pass without any sign of recognition, but she stopped me.

"I thought you were going to take your sister away?" she said.

"Lady Ferrand was unfortunately taken very ill when she left you. She is now hardly well enough to be removed."

"Has she heard from Sir Mervyn?" asked Mrs. Wilson, abruptly.

"Not to my knowledge," I replied.

"It is strange. You know, I suppose, that he was expected at my house that night?"

"Certainly I do. It was for that reason my sister left you."

Mrs. Wilson looked at me thoughtfully. "She will not meet him again?"

"Never," I said, thinking as I spoke that my words bore a meaning only known to myself.

"Does she hate him?" she asked, suddenly.

"She has been cruelly wronged," I said, evasively.

She laid her hand on my arm. "Listen," she said. "If I thought she hated him I would see her before she leaves, and tell her something. If I thought he hated her I would tell him. I will wait and see."

She turned away and walked on, leaving me to make the best of her enigmatical words. She was evidently a strange woman, and I felt more sure than ever was in some way mixed up with Sir Mervyn Ferrand's early life. I had a great mind to follow her and

A Letter from the Far West.

NO. IV. ROAD AGENTS.

Since the coming of railroads, good bye to stage coaches with their long journeys and many perils. Good bye to "road agents" and hair breadth escapes. Many a fortune has been taken over the stage lines of these rich mining countries in the treasury box beneath the driver's feet. There have been some thrilling adventures in the early days where gold dust was the only currency and was weighed in the stores on delicate scales in exchange for the necessities of life and watered whiskey. Every coach going out of a mining camp was likely to bear away more or less of the former and on returning to ake in more or less of the latter. The watered and poisoned whiskey made the highway men, known in this country as "road agents," all the more shiftless for work and ferocious for plunder. Often the stage drivers themselves were in league with them and assisted to foil the armed passengers on the inside of the coach or the armed guard on the outside. Many are the interesting adventures listened to while riding on the box with the stage drivers who were here in the early days of twenty years and less ago.

All this is now a thing of the past. There has been but few coaches held up by road agents in the last year or two in this vicinity. Ministers and editors are getting so common that it don't pay. When we were in Peabody the last time, just before the railroad had reached Helena, the outgoing coach to Deer Lodge was boldly held up going over the mountains on Sabbath morning. The eastern papers were full of the bold robbery, but the robbers were captured before our return, under the lead of the Deputy Sheriff, who at that time was a member of our congregation, and whom we found, on our arrival, quietly pursuing his usual occupation in carrying ice about the streets of Helena. He and his companion followed the trail of the robbers from our camping place to another through the mountains until they swung out into the open country and then came up with them as they drove into a village. There were three of them in an immigrant wagon. Two on the seat and one in the rear, carrying cocked rifles. The one with the driver went into a store and our friend, the deputy, rode up and commanded the driver to hold up his hands which he did at once. His companion, meanwhile, had covered the road agent who had gone into the store and who also readily succombed. Looking down a loaded gun barrel is said to have a very constraining effect upon a man. Your correspondent has not yet been able to speak from experience in this matter, though he came quite near it a few days since, when he got down from a coach containing the attorney general, the supreme judge and a whole array of legal lights on their way to court and who were invited by road agents to hold up their hands. We escaped the invitation, probably because we belong to the exempt classes of ministers and editors. Road agents know who look innocent and empty.

Speaking of robbers reminds me of the James Boys, those moral excrescences or developments of border ruffianism produced by the war and the beginning of whose downfall was when they robbed the bank at Northfield, Minnesota. The plucky cashier, A. E. Bunker, dared to run after looking into the cocked revolvers shoved into his face, and as the result of it will carry to his dying day the effects of the unerring aim of Jesse James and also the satisfaction of knowing that his courage gave the first check to those blood thirsty robbers and led to their final capture and downfall. Mr. Bunker is now cashier of the Second National Bank of Helena, and our nearest neighbor—a quiet, courageous young man, as well as a consistent christian and efficient superintendent of the Congregationalist Sunday School. This by the way, suggests the Sacking of Lawrence, Kansas, by Qautrell's band in 1861. We passed through Lawrence a few weeks since and recalled the history of that blood-curdling scene. This is said to have been the first appearance of the James boys in scenes of blood shed. They were specially seeking the lives of General "Jim" Lane and Chaplain Fisher, both of whom were at their homes in Lawrence on that fatal morning and both of whom miraculously escaped, and when they could not discover them and had become thoroughly drunken, they wreaked their vengeance in a wholesale butchery of the inhabitants and sacking and burning of the town. It is said that they shot the man who had guided them through the darkness to the town and that Jesse James was the human fiend who did this deed, though the man begged piteously for his life. General Lane escaped to meet an equally tragic end years afterward. Mr. Fisher started to run from his house in the early dawn, but finding escape impossible, turned back, but not before he had been seen by some of the guerilla band. He hid under the floor in his partially excavated cellar. His pursuers seeing his return and not finding him inside, demanded a light with which to search the basement and which was boldly given them by his wife who thus threw them off their scent and saved her husband's life. They hurriedly searched the cellar, however, but the bank of earth threw a shadow over Mr. Fisher, so that they did not see him, although he saw them distinctly and so near that he could have touched them with his feet. Then not to be foiled they set fire to the house and watched it consume until not a shingle or lath remained. Mrs. Fisher kept pouring water on the floor over her husband's head under pretense of saving her carpet and constantly encouraged him in her loud commands. But when escape seemed no longer possible, she tore up the carpet, and with a neighbor's assistance drew it by the cellar door to which she had called her husband, who, creeping under the carpet and between the two women was taken to a bush in the garden over which the carpet was thrown and upon which rubbish was piled, and thus he escaped his would-be murderers.

Later in the war he was about to ascend the Missouri river in a steamboat, when a strong conviction came to him that he ought to go by land and disembarked, just as the boat was leaving the wharf. Some hours afterward the boat was boarded by guerillas who demanded Chaplain Fisher, not believing the report that he was not on board, as they had the assurance that he had embarked below, and resolved to secure their man, they took out three men in succession and deliberately shot them down in cold blood because of their resemblance to Mr. Fisher who was bearing his charmed life, by rail, many miles away. Afterwards he was shot at through a window in a hall, when preaching, and but for the deflection of the bullet, caused by the glass, his life would have been forfeited. Chaplain Fisher yet lives to preach the gospel and a few days since he sat in our study, in Helena, and recounted these thrilling scenes of the past. Kansas, the battle ground of ideas, and the mining territories of the northwest have been the home of many a desperado.

Crofutt in his "Overland Tourist," has told the story of Jack Slade, of overland fame, before the days of the Union and Northern Pacific Railroads—one of the most daring and blood thirsty desperados that ever infested this or any other region of country and whose exploits were more thrilling than Jack Shepard's ever were.

LETTER FROM BOSTON.

The prophetic soul of Jules Verne has given to this generation a considerable amount of matter which we have heretofore thought it fit to regard as, to say the least, somewhat visionary in its character; but much of which is, at the same time singularly fascinating, if not instructive. Among his productions, there is none which has so lingered in our mind as that description of a submarine voyage in which the supreme agent was electricity.

The cigar-shaped boat Nautilus was a thoroughly water-tight, iron-clad cylinder, ingeniously fitted up for exploring the bottom of the sea. Its propeller was turned by electricity, and all the mechanical appliances and adjustments of its interior were regulated by the same force. The light by which its occupants worked and read; the heat which comforted their bodies and cooked their food; indeed, the very air which they must needs have to breathe, was furnished to them by the electric current. They saw the denizens of the sea in their native abodes; they explored the vast and deeply laid foundations of continents; they inspected the treasures which the ocean had roughly snatched from the unwilling grasp of so many of their fellow-men; they sat at tables in their snug and comfortable cabins, feasting upon delicacies peculiar to those secluded depths; and, in a library furnished with all the luxurious magnificence of the indolent East, they poured over volumes and charts in the interest of science. All this fabulous tale was made possible in the mind of the writer, by his belief in the inexhaustible resources of the subtle and potent electric spark.

In the light of the instructive exhibition which is the subject of this letter, much of the incredulity with which we read this book of Mr. Verne's has given place to a feeling of respect for the cobweb of extravagant notions which may one day attain to the dignity of solidly framed facts. The story serves well as a text for this slight sketch of an exhibit which indicates the wonderful progress that is being made in electrical science.

The American Electric Exhibition falls naturally into three general divisions. It is easily apparent that the great practical uses to which electricity has thus far been applied are as follows: First, its use as a medium of direct communication; second, its application to the production of light; and third, its use as a motive power.

The telegraph has become so familiar to all that it has seemed hardly necessary to give it the prominence in this exhibition which is accorded to newer and less familiar inventions. The telephone is thoroughly represented by the exhibits of the American Bell and the Dolbear. Every variety of telephonic apparatus is displayed. There is the little black walnut case with its bell and black receiver, which has become so familiar to our eye, and beyond which our ideas rarely go when we speak of "the telephone." There are coils of all kinds of wire; and most interesting and mysterious of all to the uninitiated and non-scientific mind is the switch-board used at the telephonic centre, with its metallic keys, its letters and numbers, and its regular arrangement of little holes and little black plugs. The Anglo American Telegraph Co. exhibits an ocean cable in practical operation. The message is communicated not by sound, as in ordinary land telegraphy, but by the working of an instrument called the Galvonometer; by means of which a ray of light is made to move sidewise, backward and forward upon a screen, at intervals corresponding precisely to the deck of the land receiver. These regular and methodical movements of this ray of light represent exactly the same literal value as the ordinary dots and dashes of the Morse system. The Phonograph is on the whole an improvement upon both Punch and Judy and Mr. Barnum's talking-machine. Many a medley is committed to its charge. Here is a sample.

"Hello, hello, Mr. Phonograph! Please listen carefully to me. 'Now is the winter of our discontent made glorious summer by this son of York.' Do you get that Mr. Phonograph! Cock-a-doodle-doo. You have a funny combination of ideas Mr. Phonograph." And the phonograph gives it all back correctly, but with hardly an eloquent and just delivery of the Shakesperian quotation; while the "cock-a-doodle" is singularly accurate. The miniature Bijou theatre claims a large share of attention. An excellent model of the gorgeous horseshoe stage, brilliantly lighted, is surrounded by an auditorium at once unique and delightful. Upon a narrow counter which bears about the same relation to the miniature as the balcony rail in the theatre does to the real and original stage, are placed about a dozen telephone receivers. At eight o'clock an eager crowd of would-be listeners to the distant opera press closely about the railing, holding the receivers to their ears. "I can't hear nothin'," says one. "Oh, 'tain't time" reassuringly replies a companion. "Mamma, why don't it go?" cries a child. At last the sounds of the orchestra can be faintly, but clearly and distinctly heard; and the lover of music, together with the person whose bump of curiosity is abnormally developed, who have shown no signs of tiring of the novelty, are by and by admonished by the official on guard that it is time to give somebody else a chance. A thoroughly pratical and instructive display of electric bells, burglar alarms, watchmen's indications, and electric clocks, practically completes the exhibit of electric force applied to direct communication.

The most striking example of electric lighting, is the Edison Microphone Cottage. Its transparent walls set in a frame work of white paint, suffer the diffusion of a flood of electric light from numerous lamps and bulbs. The interior of this cottage is elegantly furnished, and contains an exhibit of the various mechanical arrangements for producing, regulating and measuring electric light. Here are patterns of lamps, lanterns, safety valves, metres, switches, and a model of a screw propeller, all the result of Mr. Edison's genius. Other displays of electric lighting are necessarily similar. The exhibition as a whole is one grand vindication of this mode of lighting.

Perhaps the most novel and significant example of the progress and promise of electricity as a motive power is seen in its successful application to a passenger railway. Close to the overhanging edge of the spacious gallery and describing a complete eclipse, runs what seems to be an ordinary light railroad track. Two elegantly fitted canopy cars, coupled together, and lacking any visible propelling machinery, trundle swiftly around the gallery as if by magic. Closer inspection however, reveals the fact that in the foremost car there sits a man who controls some unseen lever, which establishes a current between a copper wire or rod directly beneath a wooden sheath, both passing entirely around the course and parallel with the track. This copper wire or rod is continuously in such contact with or in such close proximity to some portion of the sub-structure of the car, that an electric current is produced which imparts motion to whatever simple machinery is contained in the small space allotted to it in the floor of the foremost car. This machinery works easily and noiselessly, the power is ample, the control of the car complete. The great difficulty in making the railway practically serviceable seems to be the unavoidable liability to the clogging or submerging of the current produced by the contact of the car with the rod, which latter must be along the rail. There is also exhibited a model of an elevator run by electricity.

There are several miscellaneous applications of electricity which are attractive. A few fine coils of platinum wire intensely heated by the electric current will pop your corn to perfection. Three or four incubators, heated by the force in question, turn out scores of sorry looking chicks, almost too tired to peep. Two small magnets fitted to the ends of a curtain stick and attracted at all points of a small steel moulding fitted to each side of the casement seems an excellent practical invention.

The management of the exhibition has been of the best. Explanation has been readily and intelligently given, and we are sure that a real impulse to scientific study must have been produced upon many a mind which had hitherto been inert.

WELLMAN OSBORNE, Lynn, Mass.

Dear Sir.—In answer to your request as to the amount of your purchases for this season's trade would state that to this date they foot up sixty-six thousand one hundred and eighty-three dollars and fifty-one cents, ($66,183 51) of which $21,679.50 was purchased during November, and $11,194.74 during the present month. Truly yours,

WOONSOCKET RUBBER CO.

IS IT POSSIBLE that the little dealers, taxed by the profits which they are obliged to pay to the Jobbers from whom they buy their goods, and encumbered by exorbitant rents, (one of them on the principal business street of the city and only doing business enough to employ one clerk, being reputed as paying one of the highest shoe rents in the city) we repeat, is it possible that they can compete with a wholesaler whose wholesale and retail business combined amounts to upwards of three hundred thousand dollars ($300,000) a year, and who buys direct from the rubber companies in the enormous quantities indicated above, and who, with four stores, has to pay rent only on one, the other three being on his own premises? No person of common sense can for a moment believe it. And now for a

We learn that attempts have been made by parties unknown to us to collect bills, both in Salem and this town, claiming to come from this office. In some cases such bills have been presented to parties having no dealings with us, and consequently never owed us. We desire to warn our customers and friends against this imposter or imposters. No person has authority to collect money on our account without a written order from us.

ANOTHER INSTANCE of Rev. Mr. Spaulding's shrewdness was the account he gave to the Committee of the late special town meeting. He wanted to know where the rest of the voters were, with a view probably of convincing the Committee that the voters were not represented at the Town Meeting. But it is well known that the meeting was in the afternoon, in the first place, when the laboring men could not attend. Again, the meeting was a large one for a special town meeting. There was a good representation from all classes of our citizens.

He informed the Committee, also, that on a proposition to lay the matter on the table there were only one hundred voted against it, out of 2400 polls in town. This is true, in a strict sense. But it is not stated correctly. He did not inform the Committee how many voted on the other side. He was very careful to omit that. The vote was 100 to 34. And while this vote showed a goodly majority against the gentleman, it was not a full vote. There were over 300 voters in the hall, but they did not all vote. Allowing for the gentleman that the remainder, if they had voted, would have given the same proportion, the result would have brought about a different statement of the case. But this is not likely. West Peabody was well represented at the meeting. That every one admits save Mr. Spaulding. And good judges who watched the voting claim that not ten votes were cast for the West Peabody division by people living in the center of our town. In fact it was noticeable that the sentiment of the meeting, and the result of the vote, although not a full one, showed it, was largely against the division. Mr. Spaulding stated to one of our citizens, not a half hour after the meeting, that he was surprised at the vote. It makes very little difference to our people, who understand it, but Mr. Spaulding's version of the town meeting is liable unless corrected to give the Committee a wrong impression, and we hope Mr. Wardwell in his cross-examination of the gentleman will bring the true state of the case to their attention.

IT WAS interesting, to say the least, to hear Rev. Mr. Spaulding, in his plea before the Committee on Towns, last week, enlarge upon the ability of the town of Peabody to govern itself. He claimed that the people of West Peabody were not needed in town affairs as a balance wheel, and spoke very eloquently of the capability and judgment of the people of the town. In short there was nothing too good to be said. This will be remembered as in striking contrast to the attacks made by the gentleman upon every department of the town government the past year, and his characterization of its Board of Officials as a farce upon a Town government. This is only another illustration of the fact that this gentleman cares nothing for the consistency of his statements, if he can only carry his point.

IT WILL be noticed that the opposition, at the hearing Friday afternoon, to the proposed extension of the Naumkeag street railroad up Lowell street, came from citizens residing above Endicott street. They were desirous that the track should be laid to the "Kingdom"—or to the pump, and unless the Road were willing to do this, they were opposed to the track being located a portion of the way, or to Endicott street, as proposed by the officers of the road.

The effort of the opposers of the track was directed to convince the management that the road to the Kingdom would pay. Mr. Odell, the president of the road, on the other hand was as firmly convinced that it would not pay. And he explained very plainly why it would not. To run further than Endicott street would necessitate an extra car. And unless this were put on, even for a limited number of trips, the entire running time of the cars would be disarranged. And it was the expense of this car which the company objected to, failing to see, from the families living above Endicott street, any revenue at all proportionate to the outlay which would be required. Some of the speakers would be willing to pay extra, but it is plain enough that the majority of the residents there would not relish any such extra fare, were the road disposed to make it.

There are two points about the proposed extension, which, in our judgment, were not brought out plainly enough at the hearing. The Naumkeag R. R., do not propose to run to Endicott street as a paying investment but simply and only for the accommodation of the residents on the line. They don't expect to make anything by it. They don't expect any local travel by the extension. They don't purpose charging any increase of fare. But instead of having the cars wait some six minutes or so on the Square they can run to Endicott street, return, and make their time, and so many more people can be accommodated. And it seems to us that this spirit on the part of the road, is to be commended, and the location should be granted.

Again, no one can blame the residents above Endicott street for desiring the track to be laid further up Lowell street. If they can convince the management that it will be for the interest of the road to do so, no one can complain. But such effort is one thing and the opposition of the extension only to Endicott street is another. And the point to be decided is just this; are the residents this side of Endicott street to be denied the accommodation, because those living above that street cannot convince the Road that it will pay them to go any farther? And is the liberal spirit of the Naumkeag road, as at present manifested, to be met by a refusal to locate the track to Endicott street, simply because the residents above Endicott street desire to have the road go farther? It is evident, from the remarks of Mr. Odell, although he did not put it as plainly as we shall, that the Road are not at all particular whether or not they lay the track to Endicott street. They are willing to do it, to accommodate the people. But if the people don't want to be accommodated, or if the residents of one portion of the street don't wish the residents of the other portion to be accommodated, it is entirely immaterial to them. The patronage of the road will doubtless be just as large, and they will save the expense of laying the track. We think it would be wisdom on the part of the Selectmen to grant the location as desired by the road, and trust that future developments will ensure the further extension as far and speedily as the interests of the road and the public will require.

THE QUESTIONS asked Mr. Hackett of West Peabody in regard to the assessed value of real estate there, together with the alleged assessment of the entire property in that part of the town for more than its value, calls attention to the publication of a Valuation Book by the assessors of our town. This is done in many towns, and always to the advantage not only of the town in its corporate capacity, but the tax payers as well. The knowledge conveyed to all our citizens of the exact value put upon each piece of property assessed leads to a more equitable adjustment of the taxes. Our assessors are but human; and no one can claim that mistakes are never made by them in setting the value upon property. It is true they are to fix the value according to their best judgment. But that judgment may be aided in many cases, by the assistance of citizens who are interested. That every citizen has the right to visit the Town Clerk's office, and look at the books at any time, is no answer to the argument in favor of a valuation book. It is well known that many voters would not do this, and possibly could not withstand the accusation of being chronic growlers. At any time, but just at this time particularly, we are in favor of a valuation book.

Legislative Hearing.

The Committee on Towns, of the Massachusetts Legislature, gave a hearing last Thursday on the petition of the West Peabody people for a division of the town of Peabody. The petitioners were represented by W. P. Upham, Esq., and Henry Wardwell, Esq., appeared for the respondents. The petition was read by Mr. Upham—signed Dec. 6. Mr. Wardwell called the attention of the committee to the fact that legal notice had not been given within the meaning of the statute. This was admitted by Mr. Upham, but Mr. Wardwell did not consider it in the power of any one, if so disposed, to waive the informality. The petitioners were ready and willing to be heard on the merits of the case, but the statutes required certain things to be done which had not been done. The Committee decided to hear the case, and ask for instructions of the Legislature as to what they should do further in the matter. Mr. Needham had plans drawn of the proposed division, in the shape of a map, and distributed them freely among the auditors present.

Mr. Upham then briefly stated the case for the petitioners. The town of Peabody contained 14 square miles—about 9000 acres. They proposed in the division to take 4000 acres. They were two entirely distinct communities; one a prosperous business section, the other an agricultural district separated by an area of territory, which prevents the possibility of their ever being merged together. The center of the town has in prospect large improvements, has a water service, fire department and other things, which, while they are needed there, are not necessary in West Peabody, and from which its people derive no benefit. The character of the soil is only moderately productive. It is of no more value than forty or fifty years ago, and with no prospect of an increase in value. They required every possible advantage they could get to earn a living. It was a large district—six miles from Salem, seven from Lynnfield. It was of great importance to them not to be unduly taxed; and the petitioners asked to be relieved from the responsibility and liability of a further increase of burdens.

Rev. Mr. Spaulding then addressed the Committee at length. The substance of his remarks was similar to the speech made at the town meeting by this gentleman. He gave the same figures, claiming that all but twelve in his section of the town had signed the petition. He admitted that they called for the incorporation of a small number of people, but claimed that it was as large as many of the larger towns when first incorporated, and that there were now thirty or more towns in the Commonwealth with a corresponding number of polls, and as far as he knew, they were governed wisely and well. The population were farmers, mostly descendants of the first settlers. They had no floating population; they were fixtures there. They had a large school house, a hall capable of seating three times their population, and a post-office. They were at a junction of railroads—where there was communication with all sections of the country. The speaker thought they might safely be entrusted with municipal power.

The distance from the center of the town was then enlarged upon; the sparseness of the population and poor quality of the soil. There had been but one house built on an average in forty years. The Post Office facilities were then explained—including the difficulty of West Peabody people getting their mail matter. He then referred to the claimed burden of taxation; that the water works, fire department, etc., were not needed in West Peabody, however much they were required at the center of the town. The speaker then took up the matter of the different departments, giving the same figures as at town meeting, with the showing of the increased amount of taxes paid, above what benefit they receive.

Mr. Spaulding then alluded to prospective expenses in Peabody—that the town had no sewerage, and were living on a dung heap. The town will be called upon to unite with Salem in a sewerage system. This system will cost Salem 3-4 of a million of dollars. One for Peabody will cost half a million of dollars. This expense must surely come, unless the people mean to live as they are until the cholera carries them off, when there would be no need of any expense. He further stated that the petition was filed four weeks before there was a ripple on the surface of the town. He had asked several citizens what would be done about it, and they replied, "Nothing; the Legislature will treat it as a joke." A town meeting, however, was called by the Selectmen. There were no names signed to any petition for such a meeting. At this meeting about one out of every six of the voters was present; only ten or fifteen of the West Peabody people were there. Where were the other 1600 voters? After the matter was discussed, and a vote taken, on a proposition to lay the matter on the table there were only one hundred who did not vote for it. The speaker claimed that the hearts of the people of the town were with him. In reference to the stock argument that West Peabody was needed as a balance wheel, he thought 150 out of 2400 was a poor balance wheel.

At the close of Mr. Spaulding's remarks, he was asked by one of the Committee if he desired all that he had said to be considered as evidence in the matter. To which Mr. Spaulding replied affirmatively. Mr. Wardwell desired to say that he wished to ask the gentleman some questions, but as the other side had probably witnesses who would not occupy much time, he would defer it until the next hearing, to save trouble. This was agreed to by all, and Mr. Upham called other witnesses.

Mr. John Hackett stated that real estate was assessed, in his judgment, 25 per cent. more than its real value. He judged this by sales. For instance the estate of Joseph Henderson, which he understood was appraised at $8000. It sold for $6000—or a portion of it for $3300, and the rest bid in. The Wyoma mills property was advertised for sale; a part of it was sold—a part unsold. Could not tell the assesed value. There was Mr. Spaulding's place. It would not sell in his judgment for $6000- it was assessed for $8000. The real value of land in this portion of the town is not as much as it was twenty-five years ago. The wood and timber was all cut off.

On cross examination by Wardwell, the witness stated that Mr. Henderson's property consisted of two houses, two barns, and about 60 acres of land. It was partly woodland, about thirty acres was sold—leaving sixty acres. Some of this was field and pasture land. About eleven acres could be mowed. He knew that $8000 was the assessed value, from information obtained from Mr. Henderson. He did not know when that value was put on the property by the Assessors. He did not know whether any abatement had been asked for, or whether it had been brought to the notice of the Assessors, that wood had been cut from the land. He was aware that it was the custom of the owner to do that. He knew of a sale of one acre of land to the town for $1000—but considered it to be $900 more than it was worth. He did not know how many acres Mr. Spaulding's estate contained; thought it was over 200. When he bought it it was covered with wood and timber. There was some land in West Peabody that he would consider a poor investment at ten dollars an acre. He thought fifteen dollars a fair average price for land after the wood was cut down. If it should appear that Mr. Spaulding's property was assessed for $13 an acre, he should not consider that it was overvalued. Knew that Mr. Spaulding bought a piece of land at the Wyoma mills property. Understood the price to have been $600. Did not know whether he bought it on speculation or not. Knew the property of Bowman Viles. Did not know of a bargain being made for that place, and that the party gave up the trade after consulting the assessor's books and finding that the valuation was very much lower than the price he had purposed paying. He had heard of a movement for division five or six years ago. Mr. Upham had talked about it. He was a non-resident.

To the committee—he had bought and sold real estate for himself. He had no special means of ascertaing the value of property more than any other citizen.

To Mr. Wardwell,—The matter of division was spoken about five years ago. The first movement was within a year. Considered $16.40 a big tax. F. H. Appleton and Mr. Saltonstall lived in Boston. If it could be shown that the rest of the people of West Peabody, leaving out these two men, received as much as they paid, he did not know as he should consider that they had a serious grievance.

Harrison Taylor said that real estate in West Peabody had decreased in value. A portion of it had run over to wood wax. The soil was under the average in cultivation, and needed hard labor.

To Mr. Wardwell—Considerable business was done in strawberries and garden vegetables. There was no real movement for division till within a year. Of course Mr. Spaulding could talk better than the rest of us—but we all agreed with him. The witness had lived in town forty-four years. His own property contained twenty-five acres. The assessed valuation was $1900. When he bought it seventeen years ago he paid $2200. It would sell to-day possibly for $2000. He got a living from the place.

J. S. Needham said that there was a tract of land (here he ran across the room to a big map on the wall to point it out) of about forty acres that sold for $35 an acre when he was nine years old, which would not bring to-day $7.00. The bills were high and ledgy. The Quakers came there and settled. His ancestry had lived there since 1630. His father was town clerk 110 years ago. It was poor land; a mountainous region. As to the productiveness of the soil, there were small pockets, and here the land was good. But there was a space running across of thirty-five acres in width which he would not take as a gift and pay the taxes on it. He was one of the lineal descendants of the old Quakers. (At this point the chairman of the Committee said they didn't care much about that.) Mr. Needham then told about the sales of property. He only remembered three. The farms in West Peabody were all heirlooms. There was no necessity of sales. The division of the town was the wish of nearly all the citizens.

At this point, after some discussion as to the amount of time further it would be necessary to consume, it was agreed by Mr. Wardwell to accept as cumulative testimony the fact that ten or more citizens would testify similarly to Mr. Taylor and Mr. Needham. The Committee stated that they should report "leave to withdraw" to the Legislature, and ask permission to continue the investigation, and see if that Body would waive the informality of notice. The hearing was then adjourned until Friday, Feb. 6th, at 10 A. M.

MUSICAL NOTES.

The second Symphony Concert was given in the Oratorio Course in Mechanic Hall, Salem, last Wednesday evening. The Concert could hardly fail to be enjoyable to those who love good music. The wonder is that the hall is not filled on each occasion. If Boston can support the Boston Symphony Orchestra for twenty-four successive weeks, surely Salem and its vicinity should support three at intervals of a month. The Orchestra play with a nicety and care which commands admiration at once; there is nothing to find fault with and one needs only to sit back and listen. And further than this the concerts are instructive to the musician. The Conductor is acknowledged authority in the performance of the numbers given, and in any differences in the rendition of the pieces, we must bow to his superior judgment.

The soloist was Mme. Cora Giese, the wife of one of the performers of the Symphony Orchestra. She appeared in the Aria and prayer from Freischutz, and in two songs with piano. Her voice is light and of fair quality, and her execution is particularly good. In fact she was heard to better advantage in the Aria than in the less difficult songs that she rendered later. There was the impression upon the listener, however, of something that might be better in her voice, which she did not give out. The charming ballad "Thine eyes so blue and tender" was sung in anything but a tender manner. In fact we were surprised at the rendering. For we had anticipated after hearing the Aria, that her voice in the ballads would be heard to peculiar advantage. The next concert will be given Feb. 26th when we hope to see a fuller house.

The date of Feb. 25th has been fixed for the performance of the Cantata of the "Heroes of '76" for the benefit of the Ladies' Benevolent Society. Checks are being sold for tickets by the ladies of the Society and we hope they will be freely taken. They will be exchangeable later for numbered seats, probably at Spaulding's drug store.

The Handel & Haydn Society of Boston will observe the 200th anniversary of the birth of Handel in Music Hall, Boston, Feb. 22d. The performance will consist entirely of selections from Handel's Oratorios, including some never before heard in Boston. The solos will be sung by Miss Medora Henson, Miss Emily Winant, Mr. W. J. Winch and Mr. Myron W. Whitney. The three latter need no other notice here than that on this occasion they make their first appearance in Boston in oratorio. Miss Henson, who takes the place of Mme. Fursch-Madi, previously announced, and who has cancelled her engagement to go with Mapleson, is remembered by many persons as a favorite pupil of Mr. Henschel. She has resided lately in Chicago, where she has been very successful in oratorio; also in Milwaukee and other Western cities, and in Brooklynn, Providence, Newark and Philadelphia. She has sung in the "Messiah" twice recently under Dr. Damrosch, and in company with Mme. Brandt and Herr Standigl of the German opera company, and has, on each occasion, won high praise from the critics.

The Musical Record for February has the usual quantity of interesting miscellany, and the following music: "Forever and forever," soprano solo, words by Violot Fane, music by F. Paola Tosti; "Bid me Good-bye," words by F. E. Weatherly, music by Tosti; "Easter Eggs," march, by Louis Meyer; and "Whirlwind Waltz," by M. Alexander, revised by F. J. The Record is edited by Dexter Smith and published by Oliver Ditson & Co., Boston, at $1 a year.

In some of the skating rinks screens are put up to prevent damage to the audience by the ball. We think an audience at our rink had rather take their chances of being hit than have to watch the game through a screen.

The best evidence we have that our goods prove satisfactory is the constantly increasing demand for them in our own city and other places. Also a full line of machine-made goods manufactured expressly for us by Mr. Berry. Misses' and Children's Spring-Heel Boots. Mundell's Celebrated Philadelphia Solar-Tip Boots for children. Nothing better.

LADY ATTENDANTS.

S. C. Barry, 39 Market Street, Lynn.

The next regular session of the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts of the I. O. O. F. will open February 5, at 9 o'clock, A. M., and Peabody will be well represented. Among other business to come up is the following: Petitions for Rebekah lodges to be located at West Medway and New Bedford; report of special committees on petitions from degree lodges of the Daughters of Rebekah, asking for a representation in the Grand lodge or for a separate grand lodge, to amend article 11, section 1, of the constitution of subordinates so it shall read: "Any member of this lodge on making application for a visiting card, either personally or in writing, shall be entitled to the same, if no legal disqualifications exist at the time of the application, upon paying his dues up to the time for which it is granted, including such fee for the card as may be specified by the by-laws." Also to amend articles about appeals and withdrawal cards.

The following amendment to the constitution of the Grand lodge will be in order for action: Amend article 2, section 2, so that it will read: "That each lodge in this jurisdiction of less than fifty members shall be entitled to one representative; that each lodge with more than fifty members shall be entitled to one representative for every fifty members or fractional part of such number. Representatives to the Grand lodge to be elected by a majority vote of subordinate lodges at the last meeting in June. Representatives regularly elected unable to attend the Grand lodge session may transfer their certificate to any other past grand of their lodge."

A large number of counterfeit $10 treasury notes bearing the head of Daniel Webster have lately been put into circulation. The counterfeit is generally well executed, but may be detected by the poorly-engraved head of Webster.

HOME HAPPENINGS.

The following is the letter of Rev. Mr. Chipman tendering his resignation as pastor of the Baptist Church of this place:

Barnwell, S. C.,
Jan. 12, 1885.

To the Baptist Church and Society in Peabody, Mass.

DEAR BRETHREN: When I left you a little more than two months ago, it was with the hope that I might soon return to you. I find however now that while the health of Mrs. Chipman has improved somewhat, it is not sufficiently recovered to warrant my leaving her. Indeed it is the opinion of every physician with whom I have consulted that to secure the best results from this climatic change, it is wiser for me to remain with her until fully recovered. My own judgment sustains this opinion. There will be therefore no prospect of my returning north, before summer. It is not right for me longer to keep you in suspense or under expense on my account. Therefore permit me to tender to you my resignation as your pastor to take effect Feb. 15. And also permit me here to express my sincere thanks for the uniform kindness, the Christian sympathy, and the hearty co-operation I have everywhere and always received from you. In very truth can I say that my work and residence among you will ever be a bright and loving remembrance to me, and that myself and family have only received kindness, yea, repeated kindnesses, at your hands. May God abundantly bless you and lead you is my prayer. With sincere regret, but in deepest love,

Your pastor,
WILLIAM P. CHIPMAN.

Considerable interest was manifest here Monday on hearing the report of the arrest of Mrs. George K. Proctor, in Salem, for the murder of her husband. Mr. Proctor was well known by many in town, and the interest in this case has been, all the time, little less than in Salem. Mrs. Proctor was brought to Peabody by Marshal Hart in a hack and taken to the station to await the arrival of the Lawrence train. On account of the accident she had some time to wait, but her arrest at that time was known only to a few people.

The Grand Army boys of Union Post 50 will give an entertainment consisting of singing by the Waverly Quartette, and a lecture by Hon. George H. Patch, Military editor of the Boston Globe, subject, "Battle of Antietam", at the Peabody Institute, Thursday evening, February 19. The people of the town should feel as if they could patronize an entertainment of this kind particularly; the object is to help replenish the charity fund of the Post.

We have been handed a cigar by Mr. Ezra Shannon the popular manager of Mrs. Collins' cigar store, which is made of the best stock and covered with a Havana wrapper of a peculiar kind of stock which Mr. Shannon informs us is very difficult to obtain. We have no hesitancy in pronouncing the cigar a first rate one in every respect, and we recommend our readers to call and see Mr. Shannon when they want a good smoke.

It is claimed by Rev. Mr. Spaulding that he has discovered by the books of the town, that the expenditures of the Alms House have been $1100 more this year than last, with 300 less out-door poor, and provisions 20 per cent cheaper. Well, we presume if West Peabody don't get set off we shall hear all about it at town meeting.

Attention is called to the new provision store of J. N. Ames on Walnut street. The store has been refitted and Mr. Ames intends to keep a line of meats and provisions which he offers at the very lowest prices for cash. In these hard times every dollar counts, and we advise our readers to look in at Mr. Ames.

There will be two more lectures in the Peabody Institute Course. Tomorrow evening Lieutenant Scwatka will lecture. His lecture was announced to take place earlier in the course. The lecture was delivered last evening in the Salem Course.

The Eastern Railroad Trainmen's Mutual Benefit Association now numbers 75 members. It pays $6 per week sick benefit, and $1 assessment from each member in case of a death. At the last meeting, it was votad to ask for incorporation, and to admit all railroad men to membership.

This is the year for taking the State census and application for the taking of this town has already been filed by Mr. James H. Thomas. We do not think of another man in town who could do it as well as Mr. Thomas and trust he will receive the appointment.

About half the bills the husband has had to pay during January was that for goods presented him by his wife as a Christmas present. It sends a thrill of joy through a man to pay such a bill, especially if it is for something he really has no use for.

A child of Timothy Mahoney fell against a stove Friday and burned its head. The family reside on English street.

SKATING RINK NOTES.

Probably there was a thousand people present at the rink last Thursday evening, it being a complimentary benefit to the Peabody Polo Team. The team were given the whole of the receipts by the proprietors of the rink. At 9 o'clock the floor was cleared and Master George Crowell, of Lynn, gave a pleasant exhibition of trick and fancy skating. The interest of the evening centered in the exhibition game of polo between the Peabodys and Salems and at 9.15 the clubs appeared upon the floor. At this point Mr. O'Malley called Captain Sullivan of the Peabodys to the centre of the rink and in behalf of the North End Boat Club presented him with an elegant basket of flowers, which was gratefully accepted. The referee then announced that the Salem club would play under the New England rules and the Peabodys under the Massachusetts rules. Goulding took Felton's place as rusher for the Peabodys and his place was filled by Fawcett of the old Prospects. Hill of the Salems secured the rush every time and the first goal was taken by the Salems in one minute and ten seconds. The second goal by the Salems in 5 minutes and 30 seconds and the third also by the Salems in five seconds giving Salem three straight. To satisfy a demand from the audience an exhibition goal was played and after some very pretty playing the Peabodys won in 10 minutes and 13 seconds. At the close of the game Mr. H. A. Spaulding stepped forward and presented the Peabody Club with a purse of $82.50 which had been raised by their friends. The Peabodys then played the Reserves and defeated them. The first goal was won by the Peabodys in 3 minutes and 50 seconds, the second by the Reserves in 18 seconds and the next three by the Peabodys in one minute 30 seconds, 2 minutes 13 seconds and 30 seconds respectively. A turkey supper was enjoyed at Hotel Baldwin after the games and was attended by both teams and a large number of invited guests.

A fair sized audience was present at the rink last evening to witness the game of polo between the Peabodys and the Stars of Haverhill. Shortly after nine o'clock, referee Chas. O'Malley of Boston blew his whistle and the game was started. The stars got in on the rush as they did in every subsequent attempt, but the ball was quickly sent to the vicinity of the Stars' goal and they played a defensive game most of the time. The first part of the goal the Peabodys seemed to fail to pull together and a little timid, but soon they began to gather courage, and at one time the ball flew from one side to the other with hot haste, and some fine stops were made by the goal tender of the Stars and a few by Morrill, who had but little opportunity to spread himself. The goal was full of fouls and two of them were scored against the Peabodys. After a play of ten minutes and thirty-five seconds of actual playing time, and twenty-seven minutes in all, Waterhouse, the rusher for the Peabodys, put the sphere squarely inside the Stars' goal. The Stars started in on the second goal by taking the rush, but the ball was taken from them by the Peabodys, carried by the center and through the Stars ranks to Goulding, who caged it, the goal being played in ten seconds. The third goal was settled about as quickly as the second, the Stars secured the rush and the battle had hardly begun when Waterhouse captured the ball sending it into the Stars cage. Time one minute and fifteen seconds. This gave the Peabodys three straight and they were heartily cheered by their friends.

Last Wednesday night Prof. C. C. Martin and Miss Allie Lawry gave the finest double exhibition of fancy skating ever given in Salem. Owing to the many other attractions that evening and the severe weather there was not a very large audience present. Manager Reed has secured them for some future date. We hope to see them here before the season closes.

The total receipts of the benefit to the Peabody polo team amounted to $397, and were divided on the ratio of so much per game played. Phalen and Sullivan received the largest share, $62.44 each. Murray and Felton, $56.20 each; Morrill, $52, and the others in proportion, the lowest receiving $6.24. The games were averaged at $3.12 per game.

The entertainment of the Bicycle Club to-morrow evening must not be forgotten. The following are the entries to the race: Albert Elwell of Danvers, Slow and Obstacle; B. F. Thistle of Beverly, Slow and Obstacle; Oliver Galeucia of Peabody, Slow and Obstacle; Ross Hardy of Salem, Obstacle; A. L. Poor of Peabody, Slow; W. H. Marshall of Beverly, Slow and Obstacle; Unknown of Beverly, Slow and Obstacle; Unknown of Lynn, Slow and Obstacle.

Referee O'Malley detected a young hoodlum blowing a whistle last night, and suppressed him. It would be well to make an example of some of these fellows.

Mr. Waterhouse, of the old Bostons, played with the Peabodys as rusher last night in place of Felton who was disabled.

During the game last night a chandelier was struck by a ball, and the glass reflector broken.

At one time during the game the players lost sight of the ball altogether. There don't seem to be hardly light enough in the rink for the polo games.

The Stars had a very neat uniform, consisting of blue stockings and waists, with the word "Stars" on the breast in white, with flesh colored tights.

The Peabodys defeated the Paris team last Wednesday night after an exciting contest of over an hour. The first and third goals were won by the Paris and the second, fourth and fifth by the Peabodys. During the third goal "Billy Felton" of the Peabodys was disabled by a blow in the knee and Prince Thomas took his place.

Felton was missed at the polo game last Thursday and all expressed a sympathy for the unfortunate fellow.

A Miss Dryden fell at the rink last Thursday night and injured her wrist.

The Lyceum and Library Committee of the Peabody Institute held a meeting Saturday evening, at which the reports of the different sub-committees, including the report of the librarian, were read and accepted. Monday night the Trustees held a meeting at which these reports were presented. It was also voted to have the oil paintings in the hall and committee rooms touched up—a proposition to do so having been made by a Boston artist at a small expense.

Our item of a week or two ago about the silver half dollar of 1826 sent those who had hoarded up "their pile" to looking them over, and we have been kept busy answering telephone calls and letters by mail for the past week. The piece was one that is quoted by coin dealers and advertisements calling for the issue are quite frequently seen in the papers. We believe there were two different issues of that year but we are unable to state which is the valuable one.

At a Grand Army benefit entertainment in Worcester last week a comedy "Our Regiment" was performed in which Miss Ada M. Hill, well known in this town, took a leading and prominent part. In fact Miss Hill in "Jerusha Spriggins" made, as one of the Worcester papers expresses it, the "hit of the piece." Miss Hill has the congratulations of the PRESS on her success, which we know is well deserved.

Dr. H. A. Reynolds has been laboring the last month in Michigan. At his first meeting recently in one of the cities where he had formerly labored, forty-five of the original sixty-five who had signed the pledge on his visit eight years ago, reported themselves; and their wives told him with joy, what temperance had done for their homes and children during these years.

Whose business is it to call the caucus for nominating town officers? The citizen's caucus last year neglected to appoint a committee and there seems to be no one to call it. We think that it should be called by the Selectmen every year, and as the town pays the bills there should be some official way of calling the caucuses without depending on a committee from year to year.

There was a larger number of ladies than usual from Peabody in Boston Monday—probably on account of the big bargains advertised in the Sunday papers. Most of them returned on the train that met with an accident in Salem and all got badly shaken up. Moral: do your trading with home dealers.

The mail was delayed nearly an hour Monday evening by the accident to the Lawrence train. There were a goodly number of Peabody people on the train but none were injured. Crawford, Munroe & Arnold's messenger, was thrown down, being in the baggage car. It was a narrow escape for all.

The spring election is only a few weeks hence, and new slates are being made up—here is the latest we have heard for Selectmen: Nathan H. Poor, Levi Preston, T. J. Relihan, S. F. Blaney, W. S. Osborne. Trot 'um out gentlemen.

Last Thursday while a man named Leighton was helping the ice harvesters at Brown's pond, he thought he would sound the pond and accordingly slipped in, but immediately called for help and was pulled out by the other employes.

The religious meetings at the Methodist church will be continued this week, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday evening, to be conducted by several young men from Lynn. Last evening six young men went forward for prayers.

The following is the report of the Chief of police for January: The number arrests was 9, of which 4 were for drunkenness; keeping liquor with intent to sell, 2; maintaining liquor nuisance, 1; assault, 1; vagrancy, 1; lodgers, 92.

FROM REV. E. W. WHITNEY,

Formerly Pastor of the Universalist Church, Peabody, Mass.

For several years I have been troubled with Catarrh, which seriously interfered with my public speaking, and which baffled all my attempts to get permanent relief. Experienced surgeons operated upon me, and I was under the care of a Boston physician for two years, but obtained no lasting benefit. I applied various medicines, but failed to get relief. I was lead, by the advice of friends, to consult Dr. Lighthill. My faith was at the lowest ebb, but I am happy to say that after a few months' treatment no trace of my old trouble appears, and I have every reason to believe that the cure is permanent. I cordially recommend Dr. Lighthill to all who may be afflicted in a similar manner.

E. W. WHITNEY,
Peabody, Mass., June 27, 1879.

AN INTERESTING CASE.

A statement of Mr. Clement A. Thorndike, of the firm of L. A. May & Co., 127 Union street, Lynn, Mass.

To the Public:—Having been raised almost like one from the dead by the skillful treatment of Dr. Lighthill, and to benefit similar sufferers, I make this public statement of my case. For years I was troubled with Catarrh in my head, seriously affecting and almost destroying my nasal bone; the discharge was very profuse, requiring constant blowing and hawking for relief; gradually the irritation passed into my throat, producing hoarseness and a hacking cough, and finally it affected my bronchial tubes and lungs, leaving me a victim to consumption. The cough now became distressing and almost constant, and debilitating night sweats made their appearance. I lost flesh and became greatly emaciated. I consulted medical men and used various remedies, but all efforts for relief utterly failed. In that condition, and greatly disheartened and discouraged, I applied to Dr. Lighthill, whose able and thorough examination of my case proved to me that I was in the right hands. Convinced that he fully understood my condition, and, inspired with new hope, I placed myself under his care, and very soon experienced the benefit of his treatment. One after another of the symptoms of Catarrh left me. I gained in strength and weight, my cough and night sweats disappeared, and now I am only too thankful and delighted to be able to call myself well again. Hoping that this statement may give new courage and confidence to such as may suffer as I have,

I remain, respectfully,
CLEMENT A. THORNDIKE.
Lynn, June 18, 1881

CATARRH CURED.

FROM REV. E. C. BUTLER,

Beverly, Mass.

I most heartily recommend any one afflicted with that troublesome disease, Catarrh, to Dr. Lighthill. I have full confidence in him. His treatment has had the most gratifying results in my own case, which was severe and of long standing.

E. C. BUTLER,
Beverly, Mass., Oct. 29, 1879.

CURE OF DEAFNESS.

FROM RT. REV. T. F. HENDRIKEN,
Bishop of Providence. R. I.

My Dear Dr. Lighthill: Permit me to thank you most heartily for your kindness to the Sisters of our Convent. I had no idea when I consulted you on Sister Demonica's deafness that you could so quickly restore her back to hearing, but she tells me that she hears now better than she did before. For this, and your kind and successful treatment of my own deafness, I thank you. Now I would be glad to have you refer your patients to me. You know I can recommend you as a physician and surgeon, thoroughly accomplished in those departments of medicine in which you practice. I owe you a debt of gratitude, and would be glad to pay it.

Very truly and sincerely yours
Rt. Rev. T. F. HENDRIKEN.

A complete and permanent cure of

ASTHMA.

REPORT FROM MR. C. F. BOYNTON, 31 MILK STREET, BOSTON, ROOM 35.
TO THE PUBLIC.

After having spent large sums of money, and found no relief, I was induced to apply to Dr. Lighthill, at 115 Boylston street, for treatment, having suffered from asthma in the worst form for six years, and I wish to say, for the benefit of others suffering as I did that DR. LIGHTHILL'S TREATMENT HAS MADE ME A WELL MAN, and I now can enjoy life, when before it was a dread to me. This cure was performed on me over a year ago, and I can confidently pronounce it a permanent one. I hope all afflicted with that dreadful disease will avail themselves of Dr. Lighthill's skilful services, for I feel morally sure he can cure them.

No. 76 State St., oopposite Kilby, Boston.

Secures patents in the United States; also in Great Britain, France and other foreign countries. Copies of the claims of any patents furnished by remitting one dollar. Assignments recorded at Washington. No Agency in the United States possesses superior facilities for obtaining Patents or ascertaining the patentability of inventions. R. H. EDDY, Solicitor of patents.

TESTIMONIALS.

"I regard Mr. Eddy as one of the most capable and successful practitioners with whom I have had official intercourse."
CHAS. MASON, Commissioner of Patents.

"Inventors cannot employ a person more trustworthy or more capable of securing for them an early and favorable consideration at the Patent Office."
EDMUND BURKE, late Com. of Patents.

BOSTON, Oct. 19, 1870.

R. H. EDDY, Esq.—Dear Sir: you procured for me, in 1870, my first patent. Since then you have acted for and advised me in hundreds of cases, and procured many patents, re-issues and extensions. I have occasionally employed the best agencies in New York, Philadelphia and Washington, but I still give you almost the whole of my business, in your line, and advise othehr o employ you.
Yours truly, GEORGE DRAPER.

Book Notices.

One of the most attractive articles in the February Magazine of American History is Rev. Dr. Vermilye's sketch of the "Early New York Post Office," accompanied with several admirable illustrations Alfred Frederick's sketch of the primitive "locked box," and "Letter Carrier of the Olden Time," is his best. The second illustrated article, by the eminent scholar Horatio Hale, describes the great Mohawk Chief, George H. M. Johnson, with a graphic and fascinating account of his life and work among the Six Nations. Col. William Howard Mills contributes new and interesting material concerning "Benedict Arnold's March through Maine to Canada." Prof. Wilson settles the question as to "Andre's Landing Place at Haverstraw," illustrating his position with an original and valuable map. The third installment of Col. Norton's "Political Americanisms," Notes, Queries, Replies, Societies, and Book Notices, conclude an exceptionally good number. Price, $5.00 a year in advance. Published at 30 Lafayette Place, New York City.

St. Nicholas for February opens with the first chapters of a new serial by E. P. Roe. It tells how a family in moderate circumstances was driven from the confinement of a city "flat" to the freedom of a country farm. Another prominent and valuable feature of the midwinter St. Nicholas is Gail Hamilton's English Kings in the Nutshell. Nora Perry is the first author to contribute to the Garden of Girls series. The story is entitled Tyrant Tacy. Ralph's Winter Carnival tells of a boy's visit to the winter Carnival at Montreal; and W. T. Peters and Margaret Johnson are contributors of bright valentine verses. His One Fault causes Mr. Trowbridge's hero to fall into more trouble,—Mr. Stockton takes his Personally Conducted party to the queer burial ground of Genoa,—Edmunds Alton imparts some more of what he absorbed Among the Law makers,—and we learn about Murillo in Mrs. Clement's Stories of Art and Artists.

GRACE GREENWOOD'S NEW BOOK.—"Stories for Home Eolks, Young and Old," is the attractive title of a pretty volume by this famous author, just published. It starts out with "A True Story of President Lincoln," which with other war reminiscences that follow will waken a patriotic glow in the hearts of readers both old and young; there are stories of travel in this and other lands, stories of famous people, of "My First Love-Letter" "Almost a Ghost Story"—in all twenty-nine stories, which being written by Grace Greenwood, who is so well known as one of the most graceful and captivating writers, will find joyful listeners everywhere. The volume is equivalent in size and appearance to the authors other works heretofore sold at $1.25, but being published by the "Literary Revolution" John B. Alden, 393 Pearl Street, New York, it is sold for 50 cents. Mr. Alden sends a 100 page catalogue, descriptive of his immense list of standard and popular works free to any applicant.

The Art Interchange of January 15, 1885, contains a set of the most beautiful fan designs ever published for painting upon satin or silk. They are six in number. One shows a butterfly design for gauze fan, an exquisite composition. Another a design of birds and dogwood blossoms. A third fan has a charming design of clematis for the front and a graceful spray of blackberries for the back. The most brilliant fan of all when painted will be a design of roses with a cobweb background. These six designs are in black and white ready for tracing on a sheet 36x48 inches. Nothing at all equal to them was ever offered for fan decoration. Full directions for carrying out the designs are also given. Price 15 cents. Published by William Whitlock, 140 Nassau St., New York.

ARE YOU TIRED OF BEING SICK?—We want to say a word to the men, women and girls who work in stores, offices and factories. There are hundreds of thousands of you in the country. Very few of you are well. You are shut up too much and exercise too little. In this way you get sick. Your blood is bad, your digestion poor, your head often aches, you don't feel like work. Your liver, stomach and kidneys are out of order. Parker's Tonic has cured hundreds of such cases. It is pure, sure and pleasant.

Here is a point in tariff reduction: The duty on imported cloaks was reduced in 1883. As a result, the importation in that line has been increased, and now 25,000 American workers are out of employment. The trouble arises from the fact that the labor in making a cloak costs $1.80 in the United States, whereas it only costs twenty-five cents in Europe. Of course a reduction in wages to the free trade standard would meet the difficulty. However enticing free trade may be in other respects, that is a feature of the system that the wage-earner is likely to despise.—Toledo Blade.

NEW ZEALAND SONGSTRESS.—Madame Marie Carandini, Musical Artist, Wellington, N. Z., writes to the Christchurch, New Zealand Telegraph: "I have used St. Jacobs Oil, and find much relief in case of rheumatism, and for all neuralgic pain."

MAYO'S

Compound Vegetable Anæsthetic.

A safe and pleasant substitute for gas and ether.

Discovered by Dr. N. K. Mayo of Boston, April 1883, subsequently administered by him in nearly two thousand cases, producing perfect slumber, being applicable to the child, the delicate sentitive woman as well as the hardy man. No ill effects have followed its use in any case, it acting rather as a vegetable tonic.

It controls the patient one-fourth longer than gas giving us time to remove from three to twenty teeth. It is with great confidence we have introduced it into our practice, giving very successful results.

To The Public.

Dr. Gray informs the people of Peabody and vicinity that he is now prepared to administer "Dr, Mayo's vegetable anæsthetic," which is giving universal satisfaction in New England. This anæsthetic is purely a vegetable compound and can be administered with perfect safety to children and people in delicate health. It has no after effect as is apt to be the case in Nitrous Oxide Gas and Ether.

DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY

For the Cure of Kidney and Liver Complaints, Constipation, and all disorders arising from an impure state of the BLOOD.

To women who suffer from any of the ills peculiar to their sex it is an unfailing friend. All Druggists. One Dollar a bottle, or address Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.

A THRILLING STORY.

As Told by a Merchant in Troy, N. Y.—A Surgical Operation Avoided.—How a Father, Wife and Daughter Escaped an Awful Doom.

Of the hundreds of accounts of remarkable cures wrought by DR. KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY, none have appeared so purely astenishing as the following: The persons mentioned are among the most highly respected in the city of Troy, and the story as told by the father will prove interesting to our readers,—ED.

TROY, N. Y.

DR. KENNEDY, RONDOUT, N. Y.:—

Dear Sir: My daughter was afflicted with a severe growth of Fungus. To remove it we had resorted to almost every remedy and consulted the most prominent surgeons and physicians. Dr.—— of Troy, said that a surgical operation would be necessary, but fearing fatal results I hesitated. Some of the physicians claimed that it was caused by one thing and some by another. The Fungus was prominent and disfigured her looks. Having heard of Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE working so thoroughly on the blood I determined to try it, to see if this medicine could do what doctors had failed to do and surgeons had hardly dared to undertake. I can say in truth that the result of this trial was the complete cure of my daughter of this dreadful malady. Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY alone effected it. We used nothing else, for other things had completely failed. My daughter to-day enjoys vigorous health and to Favorite Remedy alone is the credit due. My wife also was very poor in health, due to some liver difficulty with which she had suffered a long time until she became very much reduced in flesh. A trial of Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy has resulted in the complete restoration of her health, which she had not enjoyed for years. She had gained in flesh and strength, and thus secured perfect health, and this is due entirely to DR. KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY. As for myself, being engaged in the grocery and commission business, which makes it necessary for me to test the quality of different articles, like butter, etc., my sense of taste and my stomach were seriously injured. Everything seemed to nauseate me, and fearful of dyspepsia in its most severe form, I tried DR. KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY. The first bottle afforded immediate relief, and from that day to this I can say that Favorite Remedy has restored me to perfect health. These are facts which I claim prove that Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy is the best medicine in the world for those afflicted with the above difficulties. If any one in the city of Troy doubts the truth of these statements let him come to me and I will prove them. I have recommended Favorite Remedy to hundreds and with the same good results. Yours, etc.,

A Red Nose.

'Have a drink?' said a saloon rounder to a blonde man with a red nose who came in to sample the free lunch.

'No, thanks, I do not drink,' said the red-nosed man.

'Well, then, I would take in the sign,' and the saloon rounder and all his friends laughed. The blonde man sat down with the fellows who laughed at him, and after feeling of his nose, said:

'Gentlemen, that red nose and face of mine is more trouble to me than all my wealth. I am a temperate man, and never drink intoxicating liquors at all, and yet every time I go out fishing I get sunburned so that I carry a red nose for a month, and it would be hard to convince anybody that I was not a regular old toper. To-day I met some ladies in a carriage, ladies that I know very well, and only one of them, a kind-hearted lady, who wouldn't go back on anybody, spoke to me. The others looked the other way, and the one who spoke to me acted as though she pitied me from the bottom of her heart. It was all on account of my nose. If I owe a man he wants his money right away, because he thinks I am drinking hard, and will ruin myself. My intimate friends are constantly being asked if I do not 'steam it' pretty bad, and it takes a good deal of their time to stand up for me and deny that I am a drunkard. People are sorry for my wife and children, and boys look upon me as a frightful evidence of what strong drink will do for a man, and fathers tell children to beware of the wine cup when I go by, and point to my nose. I tell you, boys, it is pretty tough for a man who has not drank a drop in years and don't want to drink to be looked upon as a drunkard. My wife is one of those sarcastic women who never spoil a good story for relation's sake. One night I attended a Scotch banquet where they had hot Scotch whiskey. You know how it smells. Well, some of it got on the table, and I brushed my sleeve in it, but I did not drink a drop. When I got home, a little after midnight, my key wouldn't work in the door, the first time it ever failed to work, and I had to ring the bell. My wife came down in her ascension robe and opened the door, and she insisted that I had not had the key in the keyhole at all. To show her that the key would not work, I held the door open and tried the key, and I hope to die if it did not work all right. Of course I blushed and my nose was redder than ever, and my wife said, in her peculiar tone, 'Banquets often work that way on men. Some of our best citizens can't find a keyhole, when they come home from a banquet.' I tried to argue with my wife, there in the hall, and explain to her that she did me an injustice, but she got a smell of that Scotch whiskey on my sleeve, and while she knew that I would cut my arm off before I would drink, she said if it was not whiskey she smelled, then she never smelled whiskey. I was so disgusted that I went up stairs to retire, but when I went to pull my boots off I swow I could not get them off. It was a pair of new tight boots that I only wear to weddings and banquets, and as I tugged and pulled, my face got redder than ever, and my wife looked at me with that calm look, as though she actually thought I was drunk, when she knew better. She told me I could lay a newspaper on the bed to put my feet on, and sleep with my boots on.

To cap the climax, I was taken sick at the stomach, from something I had eaten at the banquet, some sort of Scotch pudding that I was not acquainted with, but which a Scotch friend who sat next to me induced me to eat. That settled it, and my wife held up her hands in horror and said, 'Mercy on us, what will come next?' She added that she hoped it would be my boots that came next, so I could retire. O, I was mad, then. It was aggravating, but I woke up the coachman to pull my boots off, and when I explained to thim that it was a pair of new boot that I wore to the banquet, he laughed and said that was allright. He said the last man he worked for he had to pull his boots off every other night, and he didn't think anything of it, because he knew how it was when a man went out to have a whoop up with the boys. Dear me, I could have murdered the coachman, but I suppose I should not blame him. And do you know, my wife heard the conversation with the coachman, and she just rolled and laughed, and when I came to bed she said, 'Touch not, taste not, handle not, look not upon the Scotch whiskey when it is not hot, for at last you can't find the keyhole, and you can't get your boots off.' And then she asked me if I hadn't just as soon hang up my plug hat on the floor because it would get all mussed up if I slept with it on. Bless me if I hadn't forgot to take my hat off, the first time I ever cut such a caper in my life. Then I tried to laugh and you know how silly a man looks when he tries to laugh a forced laugh and he feels more like crying? Well my wife kept poking fun at me till I got to sleep, and dreamed I was one of those distillery worms that they rectify spirits through, and in the morning I found that I had my vest on. I think my wife put that vest on me just to have fun. I asked her if she actually thought I drank, and while she knows I did not, she said she only judged from appearances. I was going to go and hang myself, but I thought if I did the papers would say I had committed suicide after a long debauch, from remorse at my conduct, so I didn't. Boys, I would give all I am worth if my face could be as pale as some of you drunkards who are full all the time. What would you advise me to do? and the poor red-faced blonde sighed and drank a glass of mineral water. One of the boys advised him to use face powder, another suggested joining a temperance lodge, and the others were about giving advice when the temperance man rushed out of the saloon suddenly, ran over a woman who was passing and was arrested by a policeman for being drunk and disorderly.—Peck's Sun.

STOP MY PAPER.—Every publisher of a newspaper has heard this tremendous order from offended subscribers, imagined by the offended to be as dangerous as a stroke of lightning, but in reality more harmless than a mosquito bite. A good story is told by the Philadelphia Post of Mr. Swaim, the former proprietor of the Daily Ledger. By his course on some public question, on which different persons had different opinion Mr. Swaim had offended a number of readers, one of whom met him on Chestnut street and thus accosted him:

'Mr. Swaim, I've stopped the Ledger.'

'What is that, sir.'

'I've stopped the Ledger,' was the stern reply.

'Is it possible!' said Mr. Swaim.

'My dear sir, what do you mean? Come with me to the office.'

And taking the man with him he entered the office at Third and Chestnut streets. There they found the clerks busy at their desks; then they ascended to the editorial and composing rooms. Everything was going on as usual; finally they descended to the press rooms, where the engines were at work.

'I thought you told me you had stopped the Ledger,' said Mr. Swaim.

'So I have,' said the offended subscriber.

'I don't see the stoppage. The Ledger seems to be going on.'

'Oh! I mean to say—that is, that I—ah—had stopped taking it.'

'Is that all?' exclaimed Mr. Swaim.

'Why, my dear sir, you don't know how you alarmed me.'—Cambridge Tribune.

OIL FROM NATURE'S WELLS.—The skin on the head is kept soft and flexible by a secretion from the oil glands. When these are clogged the hair dries and falls off. Parker's Hair Balsam renews their action, restores the original color to the hair and makes it soft and glossy. It also eradicates dandruff. Not greasy, not a dye, deliciously perfumed. Delightful for a lady's toilet table. The best of dressings. Preferable to all similar articles because of its superior cleanliness and purity.

A circle of rubies forms the newest engagement ring. The rubies represent the wealth of a man before marriage. The circle represents the amount of money he has left afterward.—Phila. Call.

The past year the Church and Society at South Peabody have dedicated their new church edifice and paid back bills on the same.

The Church and Society at West Peabody have begun and are now making efforts to secure funds for a chapel. The First Congregational Church of Lynn sent last week a contribution of $40.75 towards this object.

There are about 200 families in the two parishes that come under the watch and care of these two churches, scattered over a wide area. The extremes of the two parishes are over six miles apart; the churches are four miles apart. The two churches together have a membership of 87. The two Sunday Schools have enrolled the names of 200 persons, with an average attendance of about 110. Mr. Fred Wiggin is Superintendent of the South Peabody Sunday School, and Dea. Arthur W. Fel is Superintendent of the West Peabody Sunday School.

Another entertainment will be given in the vestry, particulars of which will be given later.

Mr. Sylvester Williams lost a horse last week valued at one hundred dollars.

The condition of Mr. John Brown is not improved any from last reports, and there are no hopes entertained for his recovery.

The overseers of the Poor of Peabody and Danvers officially visited our Alms House last Thursday.

The Chapel at the Alms House was well filled Sunday, by the inmates, a company from Lynnfield, and those who went from Peabody—ten in number. Miss Grace Stevens presided at the new organ—a very pretty instrument and of good sound. Mrs. M. N. Hunt, of Lynn, spoke from the words "Jesus saith unto him, I am the way." Mrs. Hunt is President of one of the Lynn Unions. The Peabody W. C. T. U. will take charge of the service again April 5th.

Mr. Joseph Wiggin has been suffering from a boil in the inside of the nose the past week.

Mr. H. N. Batchelder cut and housed the ice for J. B. Thomas, at Craig's pond.

Batchelder, Davis, Newhall and the Salem company have their ice houses filled at Brown's pond.

Mr. I. H. Beede will house about 3500 tons of ice at Spring pond this season. Mr. B. has the best planned ice house and runs in Essex county.

Two large foxes were seen at the upper end of Brown's pond, last Sunday morning.

Mr. and Mrs. Warren Shaw started for Washington and New Orleans today, to be gone about a month.

The ninety-fourth birthday of Mrs. Wm. H. Richardson occurs next Friday; the occasion will be celebrated by a party of relatives and friends.

The L. & B. R. R. have had a gang of men removing snow from the track the past week.

A party of forty relatives and friends of Mrs. Annie P. Newhall called upon her at her residence on Essex street, Lynn, last Friday night, the occasion being her 33d birthday. After the usual congratulations, the party were invited to sit down to an oyster supper, which was served in excellent style. After the inner man was satisfied, the company were entertained by Mr. Winslow, and singing by Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Oliver and Miss McPherson, all of Peabody. The party broke up about midnight, taking a special car for South Peabody.

We regret to learn of the death of Mrs. Harriet, wife of John Tapley, which occurred very suddenly Monday, the 2d inst., in New York City, of bronchial pneumonia, at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. H. A. Chesley. Mrs. Tapley went to New York to attend the wedding of her granddaughter, Miss Etta Chesley, and while there contracted the cold which resulted in her death. The body arrived in town to-day and her funeral will take place from her late residence in South Peabody, to-morrow (Thursday) at 1 P. M. Her age was 67 years 9 mos.

Horse Railroad Hearing.

The Selectmen gave a hearing last Friday afternoon on the petition of the Naumkeag Street Railway to extend their tracks to Endicott street. Chas. Odell, the President of the road, stated briefly the purport of the petition. They would be glad to run the track further if they could see any money in it. But they could run to Endicott street on their present time table and without any extra car. If they run further they would have to run an extra car from the stables at a cost of $12 a day. They had no plan. If the Selectmen gave them the location they would have the road surveyed and plans drawn.

Mr. Ferguson stated that in his judgment it would be better to run the track on the side of the road. He had found it preferable in laying the road to Danvers. If in the center, it breaks up the street. It was better for the road surveyor to put the track on the side. In regard to running to the pump, it would require an extra car. To Endicott street none would be required. It would cost $12 a day to run an additional car, and he did not feel that the road could be assured $5, and it would be an extra day, at that.

The question was asked by W. P. Clark if a petition had been presented. Mr. Ferguson said there had been such a few years ago. Mr. Woodbury confirmed this statement, and that it had been signed by nearly every one on the street. In reply to the chairman of the Selectmen, Mr. Odell said the road would be built at once.

Jonathan King said a horse railroad had been talked over several years ago by the citizens on Lowell street. But he never had heard any mention of a road to Endicott stroet. He should object to its being laid only to Endicott street. It never should be laid there unless it goes beyond. The people above would have to harness up their teams just the same and come to town. It would be no convenience to them. In reply to Mr. Southwick, Mr. King did not think there would be much travel to the Square alone.

W. P. Clark well knew that a petition had been signed, but he never had heard it talked about except to the pump. A petition was gotten up last summer, and an effort made, especially by the ladies. The petition was presented to the Lynn road, and Mr. Breed consulted, and there never was any talk about anything except running to the pump. At that time there was some objection made to presenting it to the Naumkeag Railroad. It was said by some parties that it would be useless. The authorities would not grant it to that road for some reason that he knew nothing about. So they consulted Mr. Breed, who said he had the Marblehead branch to look after, but next Spring he would look into it, and if he thought favorable of it, he would lay it,—not to Endicott street but to the pump. Mr. Clark was in favor of the Naumkeag road having the location. Thought the people would patronize it sufficiently to pay them to lay it to the pump. Why does the Naumkeag road come in just at this time? If the location is granted them to Endicott street it would prevent the Lynn road from laying the track further. He thought there was something that we did not see. It looks as if the Naumkeag road intended to make a circuit to Central street. He was opposed to it, unless it could be laid to the pump.

S. F. Blaney thought it would be better to wait and ascertain if the Lynn road would build the track to the pump. Until he was sure of that fact he was opposed to the proposed location. If the other road would do no better and this was the best that could be done, he might be in favor for it. He hoped the road would run further. If the people were left at Endicott street, those living further up would not be accommodated. If the track was laid it would be better to locate it on the south side of the road on account of the water works. There would be no necessity of running all the trips up Lowell street. He thought the road would get considerable travel, not only to the Square but to Salem, that they do not now get. The speaker would be willing to take a good slice of tickets to start the gentlemen off.

Mr. Ferguson said he would be glad to have the Lynn road build the track. If they would do so, it would be policy for the Naumkeag road to wait. It would be easier. They could run their cars over the track, and if they run to Endicott street it would not inconvenience the other road in running further up. He did not expect any local travel. He was willing to go to the expense of putting the track to Endicott street, to accommodate the people. They could do it and not run any more cars. In running further it was not the exponse or laying the track, but of the extra car that would be required. No gentleman would be willing to put out $1 in business and feel sure that he would only get 50 cents back. The road would get very nearly the same patronage if they did not run to Endicott street, but they were willing to run there. He was willing the Lynn road should build the track. It was a large corporation running a large number of cars, and they might not feel it as much. The Naumkeag road wished to accommodate, but in running further up than Endicott street, it would break up the time-table.

Mr. Blaney said there were people up his way who rode to the Square in teams—young ladies who went to the Normal School and others—and took the steam cars to Salem. He thought if the cars ran up to the pump these people would ride the entire distance to Salem in them. The road had a short line in Peabody—they got a good patronage, and could afford to take an even chance at a little sacrifice.

Mr. Clark would be willing to pay more fare if the road would run further up. Mr. Odell said this would not be practical. There was no dividing line. They could not charge any extra fare.

Mr. Albert H. Merrill said that all the opposition to the line came from those who lived above Endicott street. He thought something ought to be said by those who lived this side of Endicott. In regard to the petition about running up Lowell street, that might be construed to mean up to West Peabody, which he believed was Lowell street. He would like to have the road run to the pump, but if it would not, he was in favor of running to Endicott street. The people who live above Endicott street would have no further to walk to the cars than he did now to the Square. He thought it would be a benefit to run to Endicott street. It would benefit real estate. Since the matter of running up to Endicott street had been talked of, he knew a young man who was contemplating building a house on the street, on the strength of the road running up. He would favor the road, and he would favor running up further, but if the road could not see their way clear to do so, he would like the people accommodated as far as Endicott street. He did not think the people would be willing to pay extra to ride up Lowell street.

James P. King was in favor of the road going up. He thought the officers of the road had only seen the front doors of the proposed location. There was more than double the people within a few rods of Lowell street. He thought it would pay the road to construct the track to the pump. They should build for the future. If they should build the track every inch of land on Lowell street would be sold within four years. It would be covered over with dwellings beyond the Kingdom. He was in a position to know Lowell street was the street of all streets. All could buy lots and live there. He believed it would pay the road. It would be part and parcel of the whole road.

Mr. Winchester thought it was hardly fair the way the road put it. It might not pay at first to run the track up Lowell street, but the entire road paid.

Mr. Odell was perfectly willing to let the petition rest until they ascertained whether the Lynn road would lay the track. He would willingly step aside and run his cars over the track. He knew Mr. Breed's ideas on the matter, and they would never get him to build the track to the pump.

Jonathan King called the attention of the Selectmen that if the road ran up the entire way it would enhance the value of real estate. Mr. Ferguson said if it only ran to Endicott street it would do the same within 3-4 of a mile of the terminus of the road. This closed the hearing.

SPARKS.

Last Saturday Chief Engineer Calvin Claflin of the Southbridge Fire Department, was in town, and called at the Central station. He had been attending the G. A. R. state convention as a delegate, in Boston, and while in this vicinity was looking around to see which was the best fire hose in use in the different fire departments. His department had been trying some patent treated hose and it did not work satisfactorily.

Mr. Dow, manager of the American Jacket fire hose company, was in town Monday.

Regular meeting of the Board of Engineers will be held this evening.

The different companies in the department, held their meetings Monday evening. No important business was transacted.

The tickets for the annual ball of the Three Ones and a Two, are now on sale by the members of the four companies in the brick house. The printing for the ball this year is about as neat and handsome as was ever turned out. It comes from the office of Fernald & Vittum.

During the bad travelling the two steamer teams are to run double on steamer No. 1.

Austin D. Haskell was approbated a member of Hose Company No. 2, at the meeting of the Engineers held last Wednesday night. The business of the financial year of the department was closed up at that meeting.

George H. Carr, clerk of Steamer One has been confined to his house with erysipelas. He is now better and hopes soon to be about again.

I will give your readers this week "Joe's" predicted weather for February. Cut it out and see how near correct it is. "Cold and inclement weather is predicted for the first of the month. A milder temperature and pleasant weather about the 11th and 12th which will be followed by rain (perhaps thunder). From then till after the 19th, seasonable weather with increasing cold and north and northwest winds. The remainder of the month will be stormy and unsettled, especially about the 23d and 24th.

I heard a good story about a well known Democrat, who when Cleveland was first elected had a larboard eye on the post office, and who went into training for it. The story goes that this aspirant for a position under Uncle Sam, had utilized his wood shed, fitted it up with pigeon holes and every day took an hours practice of assorting and distributing mail. While he was thus employed his wife entered the place and enquired "Is there any mail for me here?" The would be postmaster puts on a lot of dignity and with a gracious smile said, "Nothing this morning madam." Since he read Cleveland's civil service reform letter he has gone out of practice but the impromptu post office still remains.

The craze for roller skating does not seem to diminish. Old and young seem to become sooner or later victims to its fascinating charms. I am glad that our rink is under such excellent management, where the lads and lassies irrespective of age, sex or previous condition can throw themselves on the rolly bolley skates and spend as many evenings in the week as they choose in the fascinating round of pleasure.

There is a prospect of the courts settling the estate of one of our citizens who died some time ago. Report says that his near relatives will claim the estate although he left a wife and children. The ground for the contest will be that the deceased was never legally married, as the lady had a husband living at the time.

I learn that at the morning service last Sunday, Rev. Father Masterson gave the young ladies of his society some advice about attending the skating rink, and cautioned them against forming associations which would not be approved of by their parents.

Mr. Driscoll of this town secured the gold watch chain and charm for the handsomest costume among the gentlemen at the skating carnival at Marblehead last week.

W. P. B. Brooks & Co., 151 Hanover street, Boston, are having great success in their furniture sales, owing to their low prices and accommodating terms.

Peabody has more than seventy-five young, handsome, intelligent girls of a marriageable age, and still some of our young men will go out of town for a wife.

People living on the principal streets are of the opinion that nearly every sleighride that starts out from the neighboring towns passes through Peabody.

Dr. F. A. Gardner, formerly of this town, has been appointed medical examiner of the New York Homœopathic Mutual Life Insurance Co., for Salem and vicinity.

Mr. Lewis D. Nevers of this town represented a Southern planter at the masquerade party given at Rechabite Hall, Marblehead, by the Unitarian society recently.

One of our sportsmen shot a fine specimen of the snowy owl, near Rockport recently. This is a bird that frequents the Arctic coast and is seldom seen so far south.

Every trip over the N. Y. and N. E. road convinces the traveller of the improved facilities and comforts. Remarkably luxurious coaches are run over the main line.

A report comes from Russia that a town of over 500 inhabitants has been found in Siberia, the existence of which has not been known for three centuries. They didn't advertise.

Remember that this is the month of bargains in the clothing trade, and that at no place can there be found any better goods for a little money than at the store of Edward C. Almy & Co., Salem.

Michael McGrath, who stole a watch from a young man named Sanford, while riding with the latter from Peabody to Danvers, some time ago, was sentenced to three year's imprisonment at Lawrence, Wednesday.—Danvers Mirror.

A runner drove up to the town hall in a hack the other day supposing it was a hotel. When he learned his mistake, he said, " we had a good hall and needed a hotel." Amen.

The shipments of leather from Peabody and Salem for the past week were 5502 rolls, 895 sides, 184 bundles 12 bags, 20 barrels, 1 bale of leather and 26 rolls of skins.

Last Saturday night the police raided Patrick McGlone on Harris street and secured a barrel of beer. They also called on Michael Donovan and found a small quantity of beer.

Yesterday morning a flock of wild geese passed over the town going north. They were seen by quite a number of early risers. It is a sure sign that those geese had "gone crazy."

A small boy was playing truant the other day. When asked if he would not get a whipping when he reached home, he replied: " What is five minutes licking to five hours of fun."

Genial Ed. Sands has been appointed travelling passenger agent of the Boston and Lowell road. White Mountain passengers will find him on the ground as usual to courteously cater to their wants.

Messrs. Potter of the Ipswich Chronicle have purchased an interest in the Lynn Bee, and Mr. I. J. Potter will assume Mr. Bye's position as manager. Brother Potter has our best wishes for his success and that of the Bee.

Lieut. Schwatka lectured in the free course at the town hall last Thursday evening on the "Search for Sir John Franklin in 1878 and 1880." It was largely attended and was extremely interesting. The illustrations were fine and highly appreciated.

Those who drive vehicles on runners through our streets, without bells, are probably not aware that they are violating one of the statutes and liable to a fine. This law, like the lottery law, is rather obsolete, but a person making a complaint would no doubt carry his point. We believe the law requires, at least, three bells.

The most successful dance this season was given at Upton's Hall, last Wednesday evening, by the Pacific Associates. Over one hundred couples were present and music was furnished by the Salem Cadet Orchestra.

A man never thinks of economizing in tobacco or similar indulgences, but when money is a little close he forthwith cuts his newspaper and deprives his family of the cheapest and most beneficial pleasure he can give them.

Mr. Joseph L. Tivnan, who was recently appointed to the Salem police force, has been presented with a silver badge by his companions at Frank Tyler's shop in this town.

Mr. Edward Eagan of the firm of Eagan & Kelley is sick and confined to the house.

Mr. Peter Sim has failed and made assignments to Charles Harrington and Matthew Robson. Liabilities $35,000. Assets supposed to be sufficient to cover liabilties.

Last Sunday Mr. George F. Haskell had a family row with a Miss Hattie Haskell and she was ordered from his house, and as she refused to comply she was helped out rather forcibly. The case came up in the police court this morning and was dismissed by Judge Merrill.

The Morning Star Mission Circle of the South Church, will hold a Valentine party on Saturday P. M. Feb. 14 at the ladies' parlor of the church. There will be a postal department to receive and deliver valentines which will be for sale. Admission five cents.

The School Committee held a meeting Monday evening and arrangements for inserting an article in the warrant recommending the town to build another school house were made. The location would probably be " Dublin" and for the lower grades, as it is the small children that seem to be the most numerous.

The advertisement of Bushby & Macurdy, photographers of Boston, will be noticed. Mr. Bushby has many friends in town—and he is known to all of them as a first class artist—and we think they will need only this reminder to visit his studio when they sit for their pictures. His work cannot be surpassed.

One would think that M. S. Clark had a corner in glass the way they are breaking it in Sutton's Block. Jacobs was the first one Sunday night. Monday, Anthony Garvey threw a stone through Spofford's meat market window and this morning the transom over Teague's door blew out and broke the glass.

Henry M. Manning, a well known and respected citizen of our town, died last evening at the residence of his son, Geo. H. Manning, on Franklin street, of paralysis. Mr. Manning has been in feeble health for years. He had a slight stroke of paralysis some time ago since which time he has been confined to the house a large portion of the time. His age was 66 years.

Last Sunday morning as several young men were helping home their companion Dan'l Shannahan, he stopped in front of the store of Mr. George H. Jacobs and in his drunken frenzy struck the large show window with his fist, smashing it and at the same time badly cutting his wrist. Shannahan was arrested and taken to Dr. Osborne who dressed his wounds. Shannahan appeared in the police court Monday and was fined $5.83 for being drunk and $10 and costs for breaking glass. He was taken to the House of Correction This is the fifth light of glass that has been broken since Mr. Jacobs took the store.

Poet's Corner.

Johnny's Valentine.

MARY A. P. STANSBURY.

I ran to the door this morning
When the postman rang the bell,
And O such a wonderful letter
He gave me for sister Nell!
There were rose buds all around it,
And in one corner—so sly!—
A boy with a bow and arrow,
And a wicked look in his eye.

I held it fast in my fingers,
And it smelled so very sweet
That I thought of meadows in summer,
With violets under feet;
Till the postman—Joe—you know him?
Laughed, and laid his hand on mine,
Saying, "Run, my boy, to your sister,
And show her the Valentine!"

Now Nellie, up in the parlor,
Was singing "Auld Lang Syne,"
When I called her, "See what I've brought you,"
And oh! what is a Valentine?
Now papa calls Nellie "Our snow drop,"
With his hand so soft on her head,
But, some how, when I gave her the letter,
Her cheeks grew all rosy red.

"O Nellie! please—won't you tell me?"
For she did not seem to hear,
Then she smiled—she is such a darling!
And said while she pinched my ear,
"St. Valentine's Day, my Johnny,
Is chosen from all the rest,
When each one may write a letter
To the one he loves the best."

I wonder who wrote to Nellie,
For the letter did not tell,
But her eyes were so bright and shining,
I am sure she guessed it well,
And now I'll tell you a secret!—
I have learned to print this year,
And I'm going to write a letter,
To the very dearest dear!

Is it Bessie, or Susie Mason,
Or Minnie Gray? did you say?
Why! I can't help laughing to hear you
Talk in so stupid a way!
Did you think that anybody
One quarter so sweet could be,
As just the darlingest mother
Ever owned by a boy like me?

So I'll say: "My precious mother,
I had a dream last night,
When the moon light on my pillow
Was shining clear and bright,
And I saw a lovely angel
Close by my bedside stand,
With hair like gold in the sunshine,
And two bright stars in her hand.

"Her snow-white wings waved softly,
I felt the air on my cheek,—
O the questions I longed to ask her!
And yet I dared not speak:—
Such as, 'How many miles to Heaven?
And, how had she flown so far?
And, if I were to go up yonder,
Would they let me pluck a star?'

"Then I felt a kiss on my forehead,
As soft as a drop of dew,
My eyes opened wide in a moment,
And, there it was only you!
But I was so glad, sweet mother!
And I have been glad all day,
For if you had wings like the angel,
Like her you might fly away!

"To tell how I love you, darling,
I have never half begun!
You know how the morning-glory
We planted loves the sun,—
How, down in the cup of the lily,
The dew-drops cuddle and shine,
But not how precious you are, dear,
To your own little Valentine."

"Write Them a Letter To-Night."

Don't go to the theatre, lecture, or ball,
But stay in your room to-night?
Deny yourself to the friends that call,
And a good long letter write—
Write to the sad old folks at home,
Who sit when the day is done,
With folded hands and downcast eyes,
And think of the absent one.

Don't selfishly scribble: "Excuse my haste,
I've scarcely time to write,"
Lest their brooding thoughts go wandering back,
To many a by-gone night,
When they lost their needed sleep and rest,
And every breath was a prayer
That God would leave their delicate babe
To their tender love and care.

Don't let them feel that you've no more need
Of their love and counsel wise;
For the heart grows strangely sensitive,
When age has dimmed the eyes.
It might be well to let them believe
You never forgot them quite—
That you deemed it a pleasure when far away,
Long letters home to write.

Don't think that the young and giddy friends,
Who make your pastime gay,
Have half the anxious thoughts for you
That the old folks have to-day.
The duty of writing do not put off;
Let sleep or pleasure wait,
Lest the letter for which they looked and longed,
Be a day or an hour too late.

For the sad old folks at home,
With hair fast turning white,
Are longing to hear of the absent one
Write them a letter to-night.

MUSICAL NOTES.

Two rehearsals a week are being held, under W. P. Clark, Esq., of the chorus who are to sing the Cantata of "Heroes of '76". It will be given Wednesday evening, Feb. 25, at the Town Hall. The ladies of the Benevolent Society have checks for sale, and we trust large numbers of them will be sold. The solo portions of the Cantata will mostly be taken by local talent and both organ and piano will be used for accompaniment. Miss Nellie M. Bartlett will be the pianist, and Mrs. Foote the organist.

Last Monday evening the Salem Schubert Club gave their second concert of the season. They had the assistance of the Campanari string quartette and the concert was miscellaneous in its character. Mr. Arthur W. Foote was conductor, and in addition to this duty he gave several piano selections. Had not the selections of the evening been so varied, the length of the programme would have been burdensome to the audience. As it was, by considerable haste in the closing portion, the Campanari quartette and the conductor were barely enabled to catch the last train for Boston.

The Club itself appeared to excellent advantage. The selections were sufficently numerous to test the powers of the Club in many ways. Some of them had been given by the Club at previous concerts, but they were none the less pleasing on that account. The concert Monday evening was exceedingly creditable to Mr. Foote, the new conductor. It showed that he is a thorough and careful musician, with a power to conduct the singers at his will. The effect of his training was apparent. Every movement of his baton had a meaning, and it was evident that the Club knew it. Not every quartette of mixed voices can sing intelligently and with delicate shading without instrumental accompaniment. Yet this is what the entire Club did in several instances. There were also rendered several selections for female voices alone. These were given without instrumental accompaniments with solos in two of them by Miss Grace Dalton. In the heavier numbers where the club sung to the accompaniment of the String Quartette in addition to piano and organ, they did themselves equal credit. The parts were well balanced, and the tones full and clear. With all due respect for the vocal qualifications of Mr. Winch, we think the Club are to be congratulated in the change in conductor.

The numbers assigned to the Campanari Quartette as well as two solos for violin by Signor Campanari, left nothing to be desired. They were attentively listened to, and heartily encored in each instance. Mr. Foote contributed some piano solos from Henschel, Rubenstein and Dvorak, in a masterly manner. That they were appreciated his reception by the audience abundantly demonstrated. The entire concert, was, in our judgment, one of the best ever given by the Club.

To-morrow evening the Second Annual Concert by pupils of W. J. Lefavour will be given at Kinsman's Hall, Salem. Mr. Lefavour is a very good teacher and a good musician.

The Musical Herald for the current month is a bright and interesting number. The new music it contains is worth more than its subscription price, besides which it offers a fine table of literary contents, news, etc. The Herald is published by the Musical Herald Co., Boston.

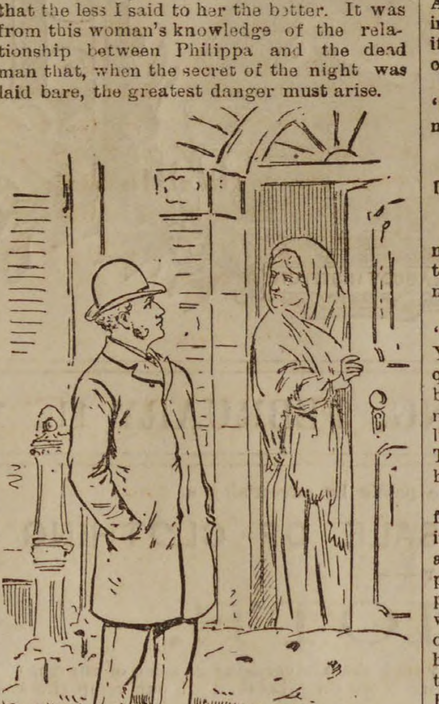
Fred Cate is at present filling the place formerly occupied by the late C. E. Fabens, in the choir of Grace Church, Salem.

Miss May C. Barrell, of Lynn, is a sister of Dr. George Barrell, who is remembered well in town, having been clerk for Grosvenor many years. She is a fine Contralto singer, holding a good position in one of the Lynn churches. She recently sang in Pinafore at Montpelier, Vermont, and the Vermont Watchman thus refers to her in the role of Buttercup: "Miss Barrell, as Little Buttercup, from her first appearance on deck with her basket of "snuff and tobaccy," to the final act, won applause and admiration for the simplicity and naturalness of her acting and the sweetness of her singing. She was always delightful and interesting in her peculiar role, but her rendering of the "Lullaby," introduced into the night scene of the second act, brought the enthusiam for her to a climax, and the repetition of the charming song was demanded and gracefully given.

ARE YOU TIRED OF BEING SICK?—We want to say a word to the men, women and girls who work in stores, offices and factories. There are hundreds of thousands of you in the country. Very few of you are well. You are shut up too much and exercise too little. In this way you get sick. Your blood is bad, your digestion poor, your head often aches, you don't feel like work. Your liver, stomach and kidneys are out of order. Parker's Tonic has cured hundreds of such cases. It is pure, sure and pleasant.

DARK DAYS.

demand an explanation, but caution told me that the less I said to her the better. It was from this woman's knowledge of the relationship between Philippa and the dead man that, when the secret of the night was laid bare, the greatest danger must arise.



"Has she heard from Sir Mervyn?" asked Mrs. Wilson.

After walking a few paces Mrs. Wilson turned and came back to me. "Give me an address," she said, "I may want to write to you."

I hesitated; then I told her that any letters sent to my bankers in London would reach me sooner or later. It was too soon to excite suspicion by concealment of one's movements.

It was after I had gazed at that white tomb by the roadside that my impatience to remove Philippa grew fiercer and fiercer. Moreover, I had at last made up my mind what to do with my precious charge. As soon as she would be well enough to bear the journey, I resolved to take her to London and place her in the hands of one of the truest, noblest, tenderest women in the world—my mother.

She was in London, waiting for me to join her. I had written, telling her that the serious illness of a friend prevented me from leaving my home for some days. Now I resolved to go to her, and tell her all Philippa's sad tale—all save the one dark chapter of which she herself, I hoped, knew nothing. I would take her to my mother. I would tell my mother how I loved her; I would appeal to her love for me, and ask her to take my poor stricken girl to her heart, even as she would take a daughter; and I dared to hope that, if only for my sake, my prayer would be granted.

Philippa was now thoroughly convalescent. As I lay down my pen for a moment and think of that time, with its fears and troubles, it is a marvel to me that I could have dared to wait so long before removing her from the neighborhood. I can only attribute my lingering to the sense of fatality that all would go right, or to the professional instinct which forbade me urging a patient to do anything which might retard recovery; but the time had at last come.

Save for her quiet and subdued manner, my love was almost her old self again. Her words and manner to me were tender, affectionate and sisterly. I need hardly say that during that time no word crossed my lips which I would have recalled. Love, if not the thought of it, I had laid aside until happier days dawned; for—I say it advisedly, and at risk of censure—Philippa was to me pure and innocent as on the day when first we met. If her hands were stained with the blood of Sir Mervyn Ferrand, she knew it not. Her wrongs had goaded her to madness, and her madness was responsible for the act, not she herself.

The man's name never crossed her lips. For all she spoke of him he might never have existed, or, at the most, been but a part of a forgotten dream. As soon as she was well enough to rise from her bed, and I could for hours enjoy her society, we talked of many things; but never of Sir Mervyn Ferrand and the immediate past.

But, nevertheless, there were times when her look distressed me. Now and again I found her gazing at me with anxious, troubled eyes, as if trying to read something which I was hiding from her. Once she asked me how she came to my house that night.

"Out of the whirling snow," I said as lightly as I could. "You came in a high state of fever and delirium."

"Where had I been? What had I been doing?"

"You came straight from Mrs. Wilson's, I suppose. I know no more."

Then she sighed and turned her head away; but I soon found her troubled dark eyes again fixed on my own. I could do nothing but meet their gaze bravely, and pray that my poor love might never, never be able to fill those hours which were at present a blank to her.

At last, exactly a fortnight from the fatal day, we left my home. I was now what is legally termed an accessory after the act, and was making every effort to save the poor girl from justice. In order to avert suspicion, I decided it was better not to shut up my house; so I left the faithful William to take care of it, and await my instructions. At present it was advisable that any inquirers should learn that I had gone to London with my sister, and that the time of our return was uncertain. By and by, if all went well, I could get rid of my cottage in an ordinary way. I, for one, should never wish to visit the place again.

Philippa acquiesced in all my arrangements. She was quite willing to accompany me to town. She trusted me with childish simplicity. "But, Basil, afterward—what afterward?" she asked.

Even in the midst of the menacing peril it was all I could do to refrain from kneeling at her feet and telling her that my love would solve the question of the future.

"I have a surprise for you in London," I said, as cheerfully as I could. "Trust yourself to me; you will not regret it."

She took my hand. "Whom else have I to trust?" she said simply. "Basil, you have been very good to me. I have made your life miserable: it is too late to atone; but I shall never forget these days."

Her eyes were full of tears. I kissed her hand reverently, and told her that when I saw the old smile back upon her lips, all I had done would be a thousand times repaid; but as I spoke I trembled at the thought of what might be in store for both of us.

We drove to Roding, and were perforce obliged to take the road which passed by Mrs. Wilson's house. Philippa half rose from her seat, and seemed to be on the point of asking me some question; but she changed her mind, and relapsed into silence. I felt a horrible dread lest the roadside objects and landmarks should awaken recollection, and my heart beat violently as we neared the white heap by the hedge, that heap which I believed held our secret. I felt that I grew deadly pale. I was forced to turn my head away and look out of the opposite window. My state of mind was not made easier by knowing that Philippa was gazing at me with that troubled look in her eyes. Altogether I felt that the strain was becoming too much for me, and I began to wonder if my life would ever again know a happy or secure moment.

After a long silence Philippa spoke. "Tell me, Basil, have you heard from that man?"

I shook my head.

"Where is he? He was coming that night. Did he come?"

"I suppose not. Why do you ask?"

"Basil, a kind of horrible dream haunts me. There was something I dreamed of that fearful night, something I dream of now. Tell me what it was."

The perspiration rose to my brow. "Dearest," I said, "no wonder you dream. You are well now, but that night you were quite out of your senses. Your fancies are but the remains of that delirium. Think no more of that wretch; he is probably living in Paris, after the manner of his kind. Think only that life is going to be calm and happy."

Anything to keep the knowledge of her fatal act from her! I forced myself to talk in a light, cheerful manner. I jested at the appearance of the few muffled-up country people whom we passed on the road. I pointed out the beauty of the trees on the wayside, each branch of which bore foliage of glistening snow. I did all I could to turn her thoughts into other channels—to drive that strange questioning look from her eyes. Right glad I felt when we were at last in the train, and the first stage of our flight an accomplished fact.

Upon reaching London I drove straight to the hotel at which my mother was staying. It was one of those high-priced respectable private hotels in Jermyn street. I engaged rooms for my sister and myself. I sent Philippa to her room to rest, and then went to find my mother. In another minute I was in her arms, and ere half an hour was over I had told her Philippa's story, and my love for the woman on whose behalf I besought her protection.

Yes, I had done right to trust her. I knew her noble nature; her utter freedom from the petty trammels of society. I knew the love she bore her son. Let me here thank her once more for what she did for me that day.

She heard all my outpourings in silence. I told her all, save two things—the name of the man who had wronged my love and the fate which had overtaken him. I told her, as I have told you, how I had loved—how I loved Philippa; how I now dared to hope that in time to come my love would be rewarded. I prayed her to take my poor girl to her heart, and by treating her as a daughter restore, if it were possible, her self-respect.

My mother heard me. Her sweet face grew a shade paler. Her lips quivered, and the tears stood in her eyes. I knew all that was passing through her mind. I knew how proud she was of me, and what great things she had hoped I should do in the world. She was a woman, and, woman-like, had counted upon her son's bettering himself by marriage; but, in spite of all this, I knew I was right in counting upon her aid. Once again, my sweet mother, I thank you.

She rose. "Let me see the woman you love. Where is she? I will go to her."

"She is here in this house. Ah, mother, I knew you would do this for me."

She kissed my forehead. "Bring her to me," she said.

I went out, and sent word to Philippa that I wanted her. She soon came to me. She had removed the stains of travel, and, although pale, looked the perfection of graceful beauty. I led her to my mother's room. She stopped short as she saw it tenanted by a lady. A quick blush crossed her cheek.

"Philippa, dearest," I said, "this is my mother. I have told her all, and she is waiting to welcome you."

Still she stood motionless, save that her head bent down and her form heaved. My mother came to her side, and, placing her kind arms around her, whispered some words which I neither heard nor tried to hear. Philippa broke into a storm of sobs, and for some moments wept on my mother's shoulder.

Then she raised her head and looked at me, and my heart leaped at the expression in her tearful eyes. "Basil, my brother, you are too good to me!" she ejaculated.

My mother led her to the sofa, and, with her arms still round her, sat down by her side. I left them, knowing that my love had now the truest, noblest heart to sob against; the quickest, most sympathetic ear to listen to the tale of her wrongs; and the softest, kindest voice to soothe and console her.

Ah! how happy I should have felt could that one night's dark work have been undone—could that white tomb forever hold its ghastly secret!

CHAPTER VII.

THE MELTING OF THE SNOW.

The first stage of our flight towards safety accomplished, I sat down to once more review the situation, and to take such counsel as I could give myself. I endeavored to foreshadow the consequences of the inevitable discovery of Sir Mervyn Ferrand's death. I tried calmly to ascertain in what quarter the danger of discovery was situated, and how best to guard against or turn aside the peril.

Undoubtedly the chief person to fear was Mrs. Wilson. She alone knew that the man intended to reach Roding that night. She alone knew in what relation, or supposed relation, he stood to Philippa. The very night of his death would be fixed by the snow storm; and I felt sure that as soon as the dead man was identified Mrs. Wilson could not fail to associate her guest's sudden departure and subsequent illness with the terrible event. The moment she revealed what she knew or suspected, suspicion must point to the right person, and pursuit must at once follow. My heart grew sick, as, think how I would, I could see no loophole by which to escape from this danger.

About secondary things I troubled but little. Upon calm reconsideration, I did not believe that my stolid William would for a moment jump at the right conclusion. If he were led to suspect either of us, it would be me, not Philippa; and I well knew that he was so much attached to me that, although he felt certain I had done the deed, he would feel equally certain that I had good and proper reasons for doing it, and no word to my detriment would pass his reticent lips. No, there was little to fear from William.

I had blamed myself deeply for the impulse which had urged me to hurl the fatal weapon away. Why did I not keep it and bury it fathoms deep? If that pistol were found it would possibly furnish a clew which might be followed up, and undo everything. My only hope was that I had thrown it in some spot where it might lie for years undiscovered, until all association between it and the murder had disappeared.

To sum up briefly, I was bound to decide that the damning circumstantial evidence which could be furnished by Mrs. Wilson drove me back to my original idea. There was no chance of my poor Philippa's remaining unaccused or unsuspected of the deed she had unwittingly done; so her only hope of safety—indeed, considering all, I may also say my only hope of safety—was rapid flight. We must gain some land in which we could dwell without fear of being arrested. What land was there?

Many a one. The date of my story is before 1873, when nearly all the extradition treaties were made. At that time such treaties existed with only two foreign countries, France and the United States; so that our choice of a resting-place was not so limited as those who are flying from the clutches of the law find it to-day. However, in order to make certain, I paid a visit to a legal friend of mine; and, by quoting a suppositious case, managed to acquire a good deal of information respecting the dealings of one nation with another, so far as fugitives were concerned.

I found that although, with the two exceptions above named, there was no settled international law on the subject, there was a kind of unwritten substitute, which was known by the name of the Comity of Nations. Under this code of courtesy a notorious criminal, who had sought refuge in the arms of another country, was not uncommonly, although there was no law under which he could be arrested, given up to his pursuers, by being simply driven across the frontier of the country in which he had hoped to find security. However, I gathered that this so-called comity was scarcely expected to be exercised by the most friendly state, unless the fugitive had fled almost red-handed, and so placed his guilt beyond doubt. No one exactly knew how far this obliging expulsion might be counted upon. It was generally supposed to be decided by the amount of influence or persuasion which one government exercised on the other.

This information rather upset my preconceived idea as to the ease with which safety might be obtained; but reflection told me I had little to fear. The case against Philippa could be nothing more than one of suspicion. No one, not even I myself, had seen the deed done. A warrant would, no doubt, be issued for her arrest; but if our flight precluded its execution I did not believe that any government would put itself out of the way to aid the English law. There was no one, save myself, who could positively swear that Sir Mervyn Ferrand had been killed by Philippa.

I learned that Spain was then, even as it is now, the land safest against English law. Perhaps the reason is that the grave yet at times hot-blooded Spaniard reckons human life at a lower value than more northerly nations. Any way, it was to Spain that I turned my eyes; Spain that I resolved to reach without an hour's unenforced delay.

The very next day I broached the subject of foreign travel to my mother. Although so short a time had passed since they first met I was overjoyed to see the terms upon which she and Philippa stood. The girl seemed to cling to her as to a natural protector—seemed ready to install her in the place of the mother she had lost. After all, the love of her own sex is indispensable to a woman's happiness. It did my heart good to see the two together. Philippa talked to my mother as she had never talked to me; and I knew that when the day came upon which I should ask for the only reward I wanted, my mother's kindness to the forsaken and shame-stricken girl would be an advocate that pleaded strongly in favor of my suit.

But could it ever be? Could we know happiness in the face of that dark night's work? Ah me! my heart sank as I thought that any day might bring the crushing blow. Let there be no delay. Let me not blame myself hereafter for any negligence or false security. Let us away from the peril.

"Mother," I said, "will you come abroad with Philippa and me?"

"Abroad, Basil! I have only just come home."

"No matter; come with us at once. Let us go to some place where there is warmth and bright sunshine. Let us go to Spain."

"Spain! why Spain? Besides, surely Philippa is not fit for a long journey!"

"It will do her good. Her recollections of this country are but sad ones."

"Well, in a week or two I will see about it."

"No, at once. Let us start to-morrow or the next day. Mother, I ask it as a favor.'

"Give me some good reason, Basil, and I will do as you wish."

"Look at me, and you will see the reason. Cannot you see that I am ill, worn out, nervous? I must have a change, and at once."

She gazed at me with solicitude. "Yes, I know you are not well; but why Spain?"

"A whim—a sick man's fancy. Perhaps because it is Philippa's father's country put it into my head. Mother, tell me, how do you like her?"

"She is the woman you love; she is very beautiful; she has been cruelly treated; she is blameless; to say more after so short an acquaintance would be exaggeration."

"You will come to Spain with me—with her?"

She kissed me and gave into my whim. Then I sought Philippa.

"My mother is going to take us abroad," I said, with a smile which was forced, as all my smiles now were. "She will see to everything for you."

"She is kind—she is sweet," said Philippa, clasping her hands. "Basil, I am beginning to worship your mother. But why are we going abroad?"

"To get away from sad thoughts, for one thing; for another, because I feel ill."

She gave me a quick look of apprehension which brought the flush to my cheek. "Oh, let us go at once!" she cried. "Let us leave this land of ice and I will nurse you and make you well. Where are we going? When are we going?"

"To Spain—to-morrow or the next day."

She looked at me with the troubled gaze which I had so often noticed. "Basil," she said, "you are doing this for my sake."

"And my own, I fear."

"I threw away your love—I spoiled your life. I came to you a shamed woman. You saved me! You did not scorn me. You brought me to your mother's arms. Basil, may God requite you; I never can."

She burst into tears, and left the room hastily.

It was well I settled the matter of the foreign journey then. That afternoon the wind changed and a thaw set in—a thaw that slowly but surely drew away the thick white veil which covered the whole of England.

That night I had little sleep. I could do nothing but lie awake and picture that white tomb slowly melting away, until the white face beneath peered out of it and made the dread secret known to all. Who would be the first to discover it? Doubtless some country man or woman passing that way in the gray of the morning. I drew pictures of the discoverer's horror—the shriek of terror he or she would give. I scarcely dared to close my eyes; for I knew that if I dreamed my dreams would take me to stand over the snowdrift, and force me to watch it melting away! It seemed to me that until Philippa was out of the range of pursuit I should not sleep again.

Faster and faster, now it had once begun, the thaw went on. Warm wind, heavy rain the next day, helped it. That tremendous fall of snow had, indeed, been the last effort of the winter. I dreaded what I might see in the morning's papers.

For it was the third day from that on which I spoke about going abroad; yet we were still in London. When it really came to making preparations for the projected trip there were a thousand and one things to be done. There was the needful passport to be obtained; my mother had many purchases to make for both Philippa and herself. She was now fully contented with the prospect of a long sojourn on the continent; but she liked traveling in comfort, and ob-

A Day of Terror.

THE COLD FRIDAY OF JANUARY 19, 1810—EVENTS OF THE DAY—A TERRIBLE BLIZZARD.

Mr. George E. Emery of Lynn contributes the following interesting account of the cold day of this century to a Lynn paper:

Many people sneer at history. Reflective men, however, understand that even our daily newspapers are only histories of yesterday's affairs. Events that transpired many yesterdays ago are not more unworthy of notice now than the incidents of the current period. A few men are still living who remember 'the days of old,' and among them the never-to-be-forgotten 'cold Friday.' That the young among your hosts of readers may carry an impression of that historic day to coming times allow me to note briefly one of the days whose incidents furnished some of our grandfathers and grandmothers with topics of fireside interest down to their latest age.

The 19th of January, 1810, was, in central part of New Hampshire, at least, a day of terror; one never to be forgotten in the annals of the hill-towns of that beautiful State. The afternoon of the 18th was unusually mild and warm. The thermometer indicated 43 degrees, or eleven degrees above freezing. Before light the next morning a winter hurricane was sweeping over the mountains, hills, plains and valleys, snapping off good sized pine trees in its extended path as if they were but fragile reeds. Great oaks were twisted by the force of the wind like withes in the hands of a giant. Barns were swept to ruin and sheds of lighter construction were carried away by the storm of wind like chaff.

The horrible blizzard continued during nearly a whole day. Nearly all the while the air was filled with fine hail-like particles of snow caught up by the gale so that it was impossible to see more than a few rods away. To add to the gloom of the time and its deathly danger the mercury of the thermometer sank in the sixteen hours following the previous day's thaw, to twenty-five degrees below zero! Altogether the like was never seen or known before or since by mortal man in New England. Thousands of fowls were blown away and never seen by their owners again. Rabbits, partridges and crows were frozen in the thickest woods. Young cattle were frozen solid as they huddled together in half-open barnyard sheds, some of which withstood the force of the wind. Many cattle perished where they were tied in their stalls. My grandfather had a flock of sheep whirled and rolled before the wind until they fell behind a stone wall that gave them shelter, though many had broken legs when found the next day. Fence boards and pole fences went into the upper air and were lost to sight in the whirl of ruin.

The heavens roared like a sea in a cyclone. Tree tops, hay from demolished barns and loose shingles and clapboards from such houses as had great oaken frames and immense chimneys to hold the structures in place, rose into the heavens and mingled together in uproarious confusion. The loss of live stock and buildings in New Hampshire aggregated scores of thousands of dollars.

Of the fearful incidents of that dread day, one single case must here suffice to illustrate how awful the 'cold Friday' was. They who lived on the hills and other wind exposed localities in the mid regions of New Hampshire suffered most. One unfortunate farmer named Jeremiah Elsworth who lived in the northerly part of Sanbornton, not very far from the Salmon Brook Mountains, was an especial sufferer with his family, and a neighbor of his proved a hero the same fateful day. After the northwestern blast struck Mr. Elsworth's house in the night, he awoke and found the building shuddering as if about to burst and fly into fragments. The walls creaked, the doors were wrenched and the air whirled so strongly in the big-throated chimney that both ashes and coal went up the huge flue together and away into the darkness and tumult above. Before time for sunrise, the windows gave way, and bursting in with a crash of glass, left the furious wind and frost sleet to accomplish their work. The inner and outer doors gave way; ruin seemed almost accomplished, but not quite. It did not long stay in its course, however Mr. Elsworth's family consisted of a wife and three children. All three of the latter were young, the youngest a toddling, prattling baby. To remain in the house was death, to leave it seemed nearly hopeless.

A neighbor had a house in a more sheltered spot. That house could possibly be reached. Help to save his family might be had could Elsworth, through unimaginable dangers reach that help. In spite of the blinding, whirling rush of the wind and the cold that seemed to threaten immediate destruction outside his wrecked home, Mr. Elsworth determined to try and reach the house of David Brown, who lived only about one hundred rods away. There he hoped he could get aid to remove his loved ones to a place of safety, if indeed such a spot could be found. Mrs. Elsworth with her youngest child succeeded in getting into the cellar of her house, where she pressed closely in a corner for protection while the father was endeavoring to procure assistance. He meanwhile heaped all the available quilts and blankets over the other and more exposed ones who clung to their bed in the corner of the room. Not until sunrise did poor Elsworth, more dead than alive, reach Brown's door. Admitted within he sank upon the floor exclaiming, 'Help me save them!' His face was frozen white and his feet and hands were frozen so that he barely escaped their loss by amputation a few days later. Mr. Brown succeeded in getting his horse hitched to a sleigh, and by the most strenuous endeavor reached the Elsworth house. The wind had torn the covering from the bed and no time was to be lost. Mrs Elsworth and the trembling children were placed in a sleigh and covered as well as possible with bed clothing. Brown endeavored to lead his horse by the head as the bewildered creature could not be driven. The wind blew in fiercer rage than it had done before, and when but a short distance on the way to safety the sleigh was overturned by the hurricane on the level road and the bedding was almost instantly whirled from sight, while the mother and children were separated by the whelming blast. At Mr. Brown's urgent request, and upon his declaration that he believed he could get the children through, Mrs. Elsworth started to reach her neighbor's house. She succeeded in her effort only by creeping upon her hands and knees a good part of the way. She could not stand on account of the impetuous force of the wind. She was in a terribly frozen condition when she got to Brown's door. Meanwhile Mr. Brown got his sleigh righted and again placed the children therein. They clung to the bottom of the sleigh and once more the effort was made to advance. Only a few rods had been gained when the demoniac wind, seemingly roused to redoubled fury, lifted the sleigh and dashed it down again so violently as to break it in pieces. The children were separated and swept far apart along the side of a stone wall. Leaving his horse to care for himself as his instinct might lead, Mr. Brown succeeded in placing the youngest child, already past suffering, in a shawl, held to the ground by a log. He then got the two elder children together and clasping their wrists struggled as best he could towards his house. The cries and moans of the perishing ones he led stimulated him to an almost superhuman effort. When the strength of the children were finally exhausted, after nearly an hour of endeavor from the time of setting forth, Mr. Brown gathered each around the waist with his strong arms and so with one on either side he at last reached the shelter of his house. Both childen were frozen stiff and died a few minutes later. Neighbors soon found the babe by the log where it lay wrapped in the great shawl, but frozen solid. A smile of serene peace was on the young face that was to know no more of frost or tempest. Mr. and Mrs. Elsworth long after were great sufferers from the freezing of that day, and never found time sufficient to ameliorate the pangs from the loss of their three and only children. Mr. Brown's feet, hands and features were terribly frozen. His eyes were so frostbitten that he became blind in a short time and remained so during life. If no monument marks the grave of David Brown the Sanborton hero of the 'Cold Friday,' it is not because a noble hearted man does not rest therein.—Haverkill Bulletin.

'Now, I don't want anybody to worry me all the week,' said the exchange editor last Tuesday morning, as he tottered in, with a heap of account books in his arms. 'I have been elected secretary of the Ancient Order of Fantail Knights, and it will take me several days to fix up my books.'

'That's rather rough on you,' said the office boy, with a smirk of sympathy. 'You'll have to do without your beer for awhile.'

'Why?' asked the exchange editor, as his fingers slyly moved in the direction of a paper weight.

'How many books have you got to trim off?' asked the boy, changing the subject so suddenly that it made the windows rattle.

'Well, let me see,' said the exchange editor, reflectively, as he tried to rub some of the red off the end of his nose. 'There's the minute book, and the membership book, and the quarterly dues book, and the officers' roll book, and the black book and the blue book, and—oh, a lot more books that I can't remember just now.'

'Yes,' said the boy, with a cynical smile, 'I know all about the work of a secretary. You'll have to write five hundred letters a week, and notify members to attend meetings and pay up their dues, and you'll get sassy letters from McKeesport, Baltimore, Chicago, and other foreign ports, and you'll have votes of censure passed upon you, and be bullied by every one in the lodge that wants to make a speech, and you'll have to hire a boy to carry your books to the lodge meeting, or else get a crick in your back, and when at last you get out of the secretaryship, you'll feel meaner than a horse thief, and wonder why someone don't put you in jail.'

The boy had unconsciously worked himself up into such a heated state that his throbbing brain singed the roots of his hair while the words followed each other thick and fast from his childish lips with untutered eloquence that made the old man thirsty.

'How do you know so much about it?' he asked.

'Never mind; you go on with your books, and I'll stand around and watch the fun.'

The exchange editor commenced. He opened four or five of the volumes, and he copied notes from little bits of paper into big books, and he made the record of the superior commander agree with the report of the August national secretary, and he couldn't find out how much the chaplain owed the State Legion, and he spilled a bottle of ink into the book containing the bi-centennial financial statement of the delegate to Lake Huron, and then he took a rest from his labors.

'I'll be dummed if that boy don't know more about this thing than I thought,' he said, as he leaned back and reflected on what a high-toned thing it was to be secretary of a secret society. 'There is a good deal of glory in it, but a man ought not to tackle it all at once. It would be better to become inured to the work by a few week's practice at carrying a hod, or washing dishes at a religious boarding house. It takes more muscle than I expected.'

At this moment the office boy ushered in a couple of Fantail Knights who wanted the secretary to explain why the treasurer had not credited them with the thirteen cents they paid in last January.

The exchange editor looked imploringly at the office boy, and the noble youth said the secretary had gone to visit a brother Knight in the Thirty-sixth ward.

When the exchange editor crawled down stairs last night, after putting in five days on those books, he was too tired to carry home his usual allowance of schooners, so he stayed at the Dutch saloonkeeper's for breakfast. He is working at the books today, and the office boy will have to do the scissors act on the exchanges next week, unless the Fantail Knights get a new secretary.—Sunday Traveller

WELLMAN OSBORNE, Lynn, Mass.

Dear Sir.—In answer to your request as to the amount of your purchases for this season's trade would state that to this date they foot up sixty-six thousand one hundred and eighty-three dollars and fifty-one cents, ($66,183 51) of which $21,679.50 was purchased during November, and $11,194.74 during the present month. Truly yours,

WOONSOCKET RUBBER CO.

IS IT POSSIBLE that the little dealers, taxed by the profits which they are obliged to pay to the Jobbers from whom they buy their goods, and encumbered by exorbitant rents, (one of them on the principal business street of the city and only doing business enough to employ one clerk, being reputed as paying one of the highest shoe rents in the city) we repeat, is it possible that they can compete with a wholesaler whose wholesale and retail business combined amounts to upwards of three hundred thousand dollars ($300,000) a year, and who buys direct from the rubber companies in the enormous quantities indicated above, and who, with four stores, has to pay rent only on one, the other three being on his own premises? WE SAW last week in one of our exchanges some statistics prepared by the principal of the Milford High School, in reference to the attendance at that school of children of parents in moderate circumstances as contrasted with the children of heavy tax payers.

It seems that some agitation had been brought about on account of the expense of the school, and these figures were given to the public as a convincing argument that those tax payers who paid the largest for its support received directly the least of its benefits. It was shown that 34 per cent. of the attendance were children whose parents only paid a poll tax. And in proportion as the taxes paid by the parents increased, the proportion of attendance decreased till the proportion was less than 10 per cent. of attendance, from the families of those who paid the highest taxes in the town.

We think the town to which we have referred is not an exception to an invariable rule. And we refer to it as showing the advantage of the public school system, and what the State is doing for her children in the way of education. The man who owns no taxable property, who only pays his poll tax, gives nothing to the State for the education of his children. He receives it for them from the State. And the tax for the support of these schools is paid by the man who does own property, and who may have no children in the schools. More than this, the State requires that the children of the man who pays only a poll tax, as well as the children of the rich man, shall receive their gift from the State. They must attend school a certain number of months every year.

We could not help thinking, while comparing these figures, and realizing how true they were, how such statistics would read, from West Peabody. There is Mr. Appleton and Mr. Saltonstall. They pay according to Mr. Spaulding about half the taxes of that part of the town. They of course pay the same proportion of the school tax. But they have no children in our public schools; they therefore receive no benefit from this tax. Do they complain because they pay for a large share of the education of the children of West Peabody? Why don't they secede because the rest of West Peabody, who have all the children represented in our schools from that section, do not pay all the school tax? But we forbear. The figures given by the Milford schoolmaster are not new, and the law of the State in reference to the schools is not new. But the reference to it cannot be too rfequently urged.

Brother Waldron, of the Fairhaven Star, has got into trouble. He has been saying something that grated harshly on one of his subscriber's nerves, and the result was a visit to the office by the offended party, club in hand. We are sorry for Brother Waldron. It is well to keep a shot gun and several revolvers over the editorial desk, and then these visits are nothing after you get used to them. We are glad to learn, however, that Brother Waldron got the best of his assailant, and that he has nerved himself for future exigencies. After referring to an apology published, he says: This act on our part does not establish a precedent and we desire to say right here that the circumstances considered in this case will never again be entertained. Street rumor has it that other parties are desirous of having a whack at us, for purposes known only to themselves. We don't court such visits, but they may be assured of ereception in due form whenever they dcide to call upon us.

Legislative Hearing.

The hearing before the Legislative Committee on the division of our town was continued last Friday. The attendance was larger even than the first day. Mr. Upham stated that the petitioners had no further evidence to present, but should reserve the right to present testimony in rebuttal.

Mr. Needham being on the stand at the close of the last hearing was asked a few questions by Mr. Wardwell. He remembered the division of the town of Danvers in 1855; he took an active part in having West Peabody go with So. Danvers. The reason for this was the division called for by the parish line. He admitted that they were influenced by the fact that there was more business communication with Salem and Peabody. The Post office was changed 4 or 5 years ago from West Danvers to West Peabody. Thought at the time the change would remedy the delay in mails. But as much trouble had arisen since as before the change. The grievance of taxes began in 1855. His personal grievance began about the time the town house was built in the night, two or three years ago. Since that time his property had been excessively valued. He had not applied for abatement, because it was of no use. His neighbors had tried it—without success. On being pressed by Mr. Wardwell to give the names of those who had applied unsuccessfully for abatement of taxes, he could only remember his father, many years ago, and one other, whose name he did not give. He also admitted, that last year he went over some woodland with Mr. Herrick and asked for an abatement, and got it. The people of West Peabody had no difficulty in getting what they wanted from the town. They never wanted anything. In regard to the political status of the town he thought it had been pretty evenly divided, but was now steadily going one way. He did not remember using an argument with the democrats that if West Peabody were set off, the rest would be a solid democratic town. He might have brought it to their attention, but he thought anybody could see that. Did not know as he had made any trade with them. He admitted that he with three or four had come down from West Peabody and voted with the democrats last fall and that turned the election for representative. He did not consider himself an independent. He had been tied by party shackles since 1844, and many times they were pretty galling.

Rev. Mr. Spaulding was then interrogated by Mr. Wardwell. He circulated the petition for the division. Had obtained every signature but one. Had also prepared the statistics on the maps which were being circulated. On that map he gave the valuation as $450,000; admitted that he had revised his figures after a visit to the collector's office, and that he gave $434,000 to the Committee last week. The maps were printed a little over a week ago; he revised his figures two weeks ago. Did not change them on the map because he had already given orders for the printing of them. Did not let them remain in order to make a better showing before the Committee. The number of inhabitants he had made on the map 550. At present he believed it to be below that. Had not formed an exact estimate. When he published the map he divided the population by the number of houses and in Essex County he found the population averaged 5 to a house; in Peabody 6 1-2; in the smallest towns 4 1-2 and 5; and in Lynnfield 4 or 5; he came to the conclusion that as there were 110 houses in West Peabody, 550 would be a fair estimate. He had been informed by others that it was too high. It might be 50 or 100 too high. He did not know the number of inhabitants.

In getting at the number of houses he counted the dots on the atlas, and arrived at different results every time. His estimate was 110. He did not know whether the dots represented dwelling houses exclusively. He was not sure that some of them did not represent barns. He did not know whether he took into acconnt in his estimate, the school house, the railroad station, the store, etc. In regard to the growth of West Peabody if a separate town, he knew it would grow $4000 richer in taxation. He did not expect it would increase in manufactures. He had hoped that rich men might be induced to come out there and save taxation. But that argument had not influenced him. Did not think it was a common argument used by the petitioners.

Here Mr. Spaulding was questioned in regard to the unoccupied belt, which he described at the former hearing, by the map which was hung upon the wall, and he was made to admit that it was somewhat broken, that all the houses, near the Marsh's for instance, were not represented on the map, that there were good farms in this belt, and good building land. That Mr. Marsh's farm was a good one, also Mr. Colcord's, the Poor House Farm, and others on Hog Hill. Mr. Appleton and Mr. Saltonstall resided also in Boston. Never heard of their children being in our schools.

Mr. Spaulding was asked how he arrived at the tax of West Peabody as being $8,300. He said he multiplied $434,000 by 16.40, added the state tax, the proportion of poll taxes, the school tax, the dog tax and other taxes, he also added Saltonstall's corporation tax, and the tax of $1004 which they got from Appleton. He did not obtain his figures from the Assessors' books.

He said the Fire Department this year would cost $8000 to $9000. He ascertained this because last year it cost $7484, and the town had increased the pay of the firemen, adding $1500 to that, and extra expenses he thought would bring it up to $8000. It was an estimate, entirely. In regard to the Forest River fire he had never heard that the expense of fighting that was paid by the Railroad. In regard to his statement that for the past 29 years West Peabody had paid $180,000 in taxes, for which she had received back $80,000 leaving $100,000 more than she ought to pay, it was partly an estimate. Could not answer what the proportionate tax of West Peabody was in 1857; nor in 1865; nor in any year since 1855, save last year. Could give the entire tax of the town. He admitted that the valuation of the town had increased largely the past 30 years, and possibly the property towards Salem had increased in value more. Mr. Wardwell here stated that the tax of the town in 1857 was $28,376, and estimating by Mr. Spaulding's rule and giving West Peabody one-tenth their, proportionate tax would be $2800. Mr. Spaulding's figures made the tax average 6000, the 29 years. He was asked if starting with $2800 in 1857, it could show an average of this amount of $6000? and if he did not think the valuation of Peabody in the center had increased so much more than West Peabody that it should show a smaller proportion than one-fifteenth even to apportion to West Peabody? To these questions Mr. Wardwell could get no definite answer.

Mr. Spaulding was then asked how he arrived at the school tax. He replied that the total was $24,222; our proportion of one-fifteenth would be 1021.25, and he thought West Peabody paid more than that. In stating that West Peabody paid more than she received, he had not reckoned money paid to Lynnfield for schooling, nor for a pump, to Mr. Colcord, nor for their proportionate part of the high school expense, nor for the expense of the School Committee. Being asked why he had not reckoned these, he replied that he had not, that was all. Mr. Spaulding said that the North river drain would be an expense in the future, also there would have to be new school accommodations. He wanted to get out before these expenses came. He stated at the bottom of the map that the running expenses of the town were $19.00, and that on the basis of an assessed valuation 25 per cent too large it would really amount to $25.00 for West Peabody. He admitted to Mr. Wardwell that even by his own figuring it would not come to but $23.-75, but he approximated $25.00 to make a good round number. Mr. Spaulding arrived at his conclusion that real estate was taxed for 25 per cent more than its value by recent sales. On being pressed he admitted that Mr. Walcott's sale was a mortgagee's sale and that he could only recall the Henderson sale, and a sale to himself of the agent's house of the Winona mills. This he gave $580 for, and it was assessed this year for $1000. Capt. Taylor bought a part of the Henderson property for $3360. It was assessed that year for $3350. The property of the agent's house was assessed for $600 the year Mr. Spaulding bought it—and was cut down to $550, to correspond with the sale.

[At this point the chairman of the Committee said that unless it was the object of the attorney for the respondents to make the witness appear ridiculous, if he could substantiate his points by other witnesses, the chairman wished Mr. Wardwell would do so to save time. He (the chairman) called Mr. Spaulding a slow witness.] Mr. Spaulding was then asked about the town meeting, and admitted that when the notice was served on the Selectmen he enquired the expense of the warrant and serving it, and that he forbade the Selectmen going to any expense.

To Mr. Upham—He disclaimed any intention of conveying a misapprehension in his figures at the bottom of the map.

This closed the case for the petitioners, and Mr. Wardwell said the matter was brought to the attention of the town by leaving a copy with the Selectmen, who called a town meeting, at which it was voted that the representative, with a committee of ten others, be instructed to oppose it. These remonstrants he represented. Mr. Wardwell desired to be as brief as possible, but there were a few points he wished to present to the attention of the Committee. In 1855 the old town of Danvers was divided into two towns, So. Danvers and Danvers. There were then two well defined centers. The two towns were not unequally divided. From that time Peabody has steadily increased. Its population was 9028 at the last census, with a valuation of $7,000,000. There are only three towns in the State which exceed it in population and valuation. The area of the town is about 9050 acres; about two-thirds of this is in Peabody proper. It is proposed by 72 voters and 100 polls out of 2400 that half the area of the town be set off, with a valuation according to their claim of one-fifteenth or one-eighteenth; but as we shall show you of only one-twentyfifth. To this we object and for as strong reasons affecting the State as the town. We are already no more than a fairly proportioned town. Although West Peabody is not so much occupied, yet in the future a center in that portion of the town will expand. There is no natural barrier between the two sections. We shall show you that the barren belt spoken of is broken in many places, almost ridiculously so for their statements. That there is nothing to prevent the farms being extended. We are also bound to represent a small minority in West Peabody who are opposed to the division. We shall show that only 72 joined in the petition; that a minority are strenuously opposed to it. That of those who signed it, a considerable number were brought into it by pressure. That no grievance was thought of until within a year or two. That it was an artificial sentiment. The general policy of the State was not in favor of separating or dividing towns, especially where there was no center or dividing line. We shall show that of the town debt the larger proportion is the water debt—$223,000 of it—that it was no burden; that the income from the water rates paid all the interest on the expenditure and the plant, and more besides. That the figures of the petitioners are inaccurate. That even including the two rich men in West Peabody whose interests are not identified with the town the people in that section pay but a fair percentage. And that excluding these they receive more every year than they pay. Nobody dreamed of any adverse interest between the sections till a few years ago. In regard to the North river expense that was very far in the future. It was entirely visionary. The Legislature had protected Peabody from any expense in regard to a sewerage system by the North river.

Nathan H. Poor was called. He had seen a copy of the petition. Had compared them with the records of the town. Of the 108 signatures 73 appeared to be registered voters. Of the 35 remaining 16 were neither registered voters or real estate owners. Nine were non-residents. There were 19 registered voters living within the territory desired to be set off who had not signed the petition. The financial year of the town ends Feb. 1. The credit of the town was good. It pays 4 per cent. for what money it needs to hire, and its notes are at a premium at that. There are only two outstanding notes at a higher rate of interest—one at 5 3-8 and the other at 5 per cent. Mr. Poor gave the figures of the town debt—substantially as in the town report. When the school houses were built one was built for West Peabody at a cost of $14,000. The water income paid the interest on the cost, including all additions and the cost of maintainance, and about $4000 in addition. The income of the water tax is applied to paying the interest on the town debt. The water board fix the rates. The rate of taxation this year was $16.40. The average tax for the past ten years was $14.60. This year the town made a special appropriation for curbing around the Town House, and the increased state and county tax made the rate $16.40 Last year $16,800 was paid out of the town treasury in addition to the amount appropriated. This surplus comes from the town's proportion of the corporation and bank tax, the excess in water rates, and the surplusage from taxes. This year the surplus is $2757. If the town raised all the money needed in the running expenses the appropriation and rate of taxation would be larger. This surplus in the treasury was not a temporary thing, but accrued every year.

The Town House was built in 1882. It was generally conceded to be necessary. There was no difference of opinion as to better accommodations being necessary. He first heard of a movement for division two years ago. There had been claims for abatement of taxes from West Peabody many times. They had been made in a number of cases. It had been the intention of the Assessors to meet all parties fairly. Mr. Hackett had asked an abatement, so had Mr. Henderson. In each case the tax had been adjusted satisfactorily. There were few sales in that part of the town. It was almost impossible to get a fair valuation from sales. There was one member from West Peabody on the Board, none from So. Peabody. The main business of the town was the manufacture of leather. It was now depressed and affected the value of property, especially personal. Since the division of the old town there had been a steady increase in business, and the manufacturing district had increased in valuation in a large proportion. In 1855 Danvers had a larger farming interest than So. Danvers. The movement for annexation to Salem was in 1871. The town appointed a committee of 25 to oppose it, and the matter was given up without an attempt at a hearing. There was no proposed line and it was not seriously entertained. Mr. Poor explained the space on the map called the barren belt and pointed out the good farms on it. Considered it all good land and available for building purposes, or for cultivation. The farm of Mr. Colcord was considered by the Committee in selecting a site for the Asylum. Knew of no natural barrier in that section.

The hearing was then continued until Wednesday, Feb. 18, when it will be in order by the Committee until closed.

REGULATIONS FOR LENT.—By order of the most reverend archbishop, the following regulations for Lent have been promulgated for the archdiocese of Boston:—

1. All the days of Lent, except Sundays, are fast days of obligation.
2. By dispensation from the Holy See, the use of flesh meat is allowed once a day only, on Mondays, Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays, the second and last Saturdays excepted. The use of meat on Sundays is not limited as to the number of times.
3. Besides lard, the fat rendered from any kind of meat may be used in preparing food on any day in Lent. This dispensation is also extended to the days of abstinence and fast days throughout the year.
4. At the evening collation, on account of long existing custom, the church tolerates the use of eggs, butter, cheese and milk.
5. The use of flesh meat and fish at the same meal is not allowed.
6. On Good Friday the use of eggs, butter, cheese and milk is forbidden at any meal.
7. The following persons are exempted from the obligation of fasting: All under 21 years of age and those of advanced age; the sick; those who cannot fast without grave injury to their health; women during pregnacy or while nursing infants, and all those whose duties are of a very laborious or exhausting nature. Those who are excused from fasting are not thereby freed from the obligation of abstaining from flesh meat, except in cases of sickness and the like.
8. During the holy season of Lent, which begins this year on the 18th of February, it is the archbishop's desire that some special devotion, such as the "Way of the Cross" or the "Rosary of the Blessed Virgin Mary," or "Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament," with an occasional sermon, should be provided for the faithful. Every means should be used to remind them that it is a time of penance and prayer, and that, unless the heart is free from sin and the soul sanctified by the worthy reception of the sacraments, it will profit them little to keep the fast of Lent.

PETITION AND ORDER.

To the Honorable the Board of Selectmen of the Town of Peabody.

The undersigned, the Directors of the Eastern Railroad Company, a corporation duly established under the laws of this Commonwealth, respectfully represent that he Board of Railroad Commissioners have issued to said corporation a certificate that public necessity requires the construction of a branch or extension of its track one-fifth of a mile in length, or thereabouts, from a point southeasterly of Peabody Station, on that part of its road known as the Lawrence Branch, in a northeasterly direction across lands of different persons, across Walnut street and longitudinally through Upton street to land of Thomas E. Proctor; and the petitioners further represent that they have prepared a map of the proposed route on an appropiate scale with a profile thereof on a vertical scale of ten to one as compared with a horizontal scale, and have procured the report of a skilful engineer based upon actual examination and survey showing the kind and amount of filling and bridging required, the highways to be crossed and the manner of crossing the same, and a general profile of the surface of the land over which the road will pass, the feasibility of the route and the manner of constructing the road, together with a detailed estimate of the cost of construction; which said map and report are presented herewith, and the petitioners ask that after due notice, your Honorable Board will fix the route of said proposed branch and will make a certificate setting forth the route so fixed.

HOME HAPPENINGS.

> "And like the tendrils of the vine
> May Love her gentle wreath entwine
> 'Round thee, my chosen Valentine."

The employes of the Standard Thermometer Company and invited friends went on a sleighride last Thursday evening, which was complimentary to the superintendent, Mr. Thomas W. Shepard. Mudgett & Co. of Salem, furnished one of their fine turnouts, which was highly appreciated. The party started at 6.30 o'clock, and on arriving in Salem a delay of some twenty minutes was caused, when a handsome transparency of one of the company's thermometer, which showed skill for the artist, attracted considerable attention, and some near-sighted persons were heard to inquire if it was a clock. The party passed through the main streets of Salem, Beverly, Hamilton and Ipswich, and returning back to Hamilton they took supper at the farmhouse of G. W. Winslow. The thermometer had been about ten degrees below zero on the journey, but when they sat down to partake of the viands which had been prepared, it immediately arose to one hundred degrees above. The rest of the night and the first of the next morning was spent in dancing and social amusement. G. N. Winslow favored them with one of his humorous selections, and the party broke up at 2.30 o'clock, arriving in Peabody at about 4.30.

About thirty couples were present at the masquerade party of the Spiritualists, at Essex Hall, last Wednesday evening. Upton's band furnished the music. Among the costumes were the following:—Punch and Judy, George Nimblett and Nellie Henderson; Benj. F. Butler, a striking imitation, William Flannigan; "Alvin Joslin," J. H. Crowley; black and white Mother Hubbard, H. A. Hart; sailor, A. McNeil; Mother Hubbard, Lizzie Berry; jockey, H. C. Wilson; clown, H. A. Peabody; fancy clown, E. I. Kimball; gipsy, Miss Higgins, Salem; Aunt Dinah, Mrs. Pierce; Union, Miss Buxton; scrubwoman, C. Newhall; Brother Jonathan, I. Ferrin: ace of spades, Horace Holt; ghost, Mrs. H. A. Hart.

During the past year there have been 824 members initiated into the I. O. O. F. lodges of Massachusetts; number deceased 147; total net gain of members 680. The total amount paid for relief to sick brothers, relief of widows, burying the dead, and other charities was $47,376.51. The total receipts have been $111,110,20. The number of brothers relieved was 1,383. The grand lodge met in Boston last Thursday and Holten Lodge of this town was represented by W. F. Sawyer, George E. Parker and John O. Buxton.

Dalghren Post, No 2, G. A. R., of South Boston, has forwarded to all posts in the department a circular setting forth " the necessity of an amendment to the lottery law so that G. A. R. posts and other charitable associations may hold fairs and sell season tickets which will entitle the holders thereof to a chance in whatever may be offered as prizes without being held liable to criminal prosecution." With the circular is a blank petition to be circulated for signatures, and, when signed, to be sent to the General Court.

The Supreme Lodge of the United Essenians held its annual meeting in this town last Wednesday and elected officers as follows:—Supreme Chief, S. B. Gilbert of Boston; Supreme Assistant, Mrs. Julia A. Reynolds of Marblehead; Supreme Secretary, George F. Barnes of Peabody; Supreme Treasurer, George E. Lewis of Peabody; Dr. H. K. Foster was appointed Medical examiner.

The Grand Encampment of Massachusetts, I. O. O. F., convened at Boston on Wednesday, being the regular annual session. The whole number of members is 7034, being a net gain of 353. The sum of $10,621.90 has been paid 6116 weeks' benefits to 728 sick members; $2911.35 for the burial of the dead, and $705 have been paid for other charitable purposes, and the total receips for the year and a half have been $48,018.21.

The transactions of the Essex Agricultural Society for the year 1884 is published, making a pamphlet of about 140 pages. It contains besides the reports, lists of premiums, etc., a list of all the members living and dead since 1869, and a financial item of perhaps more interest than any other, showing a gain of $757.07 over the expenses of last year, the same to be added to the already handsome fund of over $17,000.

Last Sunday forenoon as Eben U. King's sleigh, with Warren King as driver, was turning round in the yard of the South church it was upset throwing the driver out. The horse started and collided with the sleigh of Mr. Edward Jacobs and the two sleighs were crowded against the stone posts, making a complete wreck of both.

The celebrated Lucier Family will appear Sunday evening at the Town Hall, and give a concert which cannot fail to please the public. Mr. J. R. Lucier, the blind solo-cornetist, will be a striking feature of the occasion. He plays the most difficult music, it is said, with as much ease as a man with unimpaired sight. M'lle Rosalie Lucier, who will also appear, is noted for her remarkable richness of tone, and Mr. C. N. Lucier is a favorite tenor and plays upon every known musical instrument. Mr. A. D. Lucier is a remarkable violin soloist, and Harry L. Woodbury has gained an enviable reputation as a baritone. Miss Lizzie Long will be the piano soloist and accompanist. This company have met with great success everywhere. There will be an overture introducing ten different instruments, an occarina quartette, a mandolin and xylophone solo, etc. They will give a first class concert, and the usual popular prices will prevail. Admission 15 cents; reserved seats 25 cents. For sale at the door.

During the campaign last fall a young man from this town wrote a letter to Rev. Henry Ward Beecher asking him if he ever said "water was good enough for working men and if so in what spirit?" He received the following reply in the hand writing of Mr. Beecher:

> When men love evil, and invent or pervert one's word, there is little use in attempting to stop the falsehood. It will like any other poisonous weed run through its course and rot and fall to the ground. No such sentiment ever passed my lips or even entered my mind. All my life has been devoted to the strengthening of the weak, the elevation of the poor and the honorable development of working men.

The long talked of Evening Telegram made its appearance last Monday evening, and naturally there was a lively demand for it out of curiosity. It is the same form as the old Salem Post, which it succeeds, with the exception of a little change in the "make up." It is printed on a pink shade of paper after the style of the New York Telegram and the Providence Telegram. It is backed by a syndicate of wealthy men and we wish it all the success it deserves.

The fine brands of cigars for five cents which Collins' cigar store offer in another column are destined to create a sensation among smokers. They come nearer to the smokers idea of a "good thing" than any we have seen. Mr. Shannon has spent much time in securing the wrapper used on these cigars. He is now furnishing virtually a ten cent cigar for five cents. Already the cigars have achieved great popularity.

At the Farmers' Institute at Beverly, Mr. James P. King spoke in the defence of the sparrow and denounced the crow. He said that Paris green had been tried and proved effectual in ridding the trees of the canker-worms. One spoonful to eight quarts of water was about the right amount for the purpose intended. The dilution is so great that there is no apprehension in using it as far as cattle are concerned.

The only winter birds that are now to be seen are the sparrows, which though hated by multitudes of enemies, are well able to take care of themselves. The sparrow, being well provided with a thick, warm overcoat, can endure very low degrees of temperature, and is all right provided he can get enough to eat. He finds no difficulty, when there is not much snow, in getting plentiful commissary supplies around kitchen doors, from garbage barrels, and in the street.

The report of the engineer of the pumping station shows that there were 20,252,310 gallons of water pumped for January; that it required 50,888 pounds of coal, and that the average number of gallons per day was 653,300; pounds of coal and wood per day, 1647; gallons pumped per pound of coal, 398 Running time, 8 hours 3 minutes.

The Lowell Railroad Company have quite a number of freight cars equipped with the coupling of the Ames Automatic Car Coupling Co. which are giving such good satisfaction that more are being added. The company has just received an order from the Grand Trunk Railroad of Canada. Their coupling is also in use on the Intercolonial and Passumpsic.

SOUTH PEABODY.

For several years past it has been the custom of the relatives and neighbors of Mrs. Rebecca E. Richardson to gather at her hospitable mansion on the evening of Feb. 6th. Last Friday evening such a party of friends, to the number of fifty or more, came together to celebrate the ninety-third anniversary of the hostess' birth. The occasion was a very enjoyable one to all present, especially to the aged lady who appeared even better than she did a year ago, no recent sickness having reduced her strength. In the early evening the company gathered in her room, where the Pastor read the 90th Psalm and offered prayer, after calling attention to the fact that Mrs. Richardson had lived during the administration of every President of the country, and alluding to some of the great changes and improvements during this long period. After a season of song the company dispersed through the house finding enjoyment in various ways, it being made evident that certain old time games had not lost their charm by the spirit in which they were entered into. About half-past ten a bountiful supper was served. The party broke up at midnight, with kind wishes for the hostess; trusting that her years may be prolonged through this decade, and that her life may be rounded out to complete a century.

DR. LIGHTHILL,

OF 115 BOYLSTON STREET, BOSTON,

Can be consulted at the

Essex House, Salem,

Every Thursday afternoon and evening,

From 2 until 9 P. M.,

on all Chronic, Obscure, and Difficult Diseases.

His Specialty embraces the cure of

CATARRH,

Throat Affections, Bronchitis, Asthma, Consumption,

DEAFNESS,

Discharge from the Ear, Eye Diseases, and Affections of the Blood and Nervous System.

CONSULTATION FREE.

[Dr. Lighthill can be found at his office, 115 Boylston street, Boston, from 8 until 12, daily.)

FROM REV. E. W. WHITNEY,

Formerly Pastor of the Universalist Church, Peabody, Mass.

For several years I have been troubled with Catarrh, which seriously interfered with my public speaking, and which baffled all my attempts to get permanent relief. Experienced surgeons operated upon me, and I was under the care of a Boston physician for two years, but obtained no lasting benefit. I applied various medicines, but failed to get relief. I was lead, by the advice of friends, to consult Dr. Lighthill. My faith was at the lowest ebb, but I am happy to say that after a few months' treatment no trace of my old trouble appears, and I have every reason to believe that the cure is permanent. I cordially recommend Dr. Lighthill to all who may be afflicted in a similar manner.

E. W. WHITNEY,

Peabody, Mass., June 27, 1879.

AN INTERESTING CASE.

A statement of Mr. Clement A. Thorndike, of the firm of L. A. May & Co., 127 Union street, Lynn, Mass.

To the Public:—Having been raised almost like one from the dead by the skillful treatment of Dr. Lighthill, and to benefit similar sufferers, I make this public statement of my case. For years I was troubled with Catarrh in my head, seriously affecting and almost destroying my nasal bone; the discharge was very profuse, requiring constant blowing and hawking for relief; gradually the irritation passed into my throat, producing hoarseness and a hacking cough, and finally it affected my bronchial tubes and lungs, leaving me a victim to consumption. The cough now became distressing and almost constant, and debilitating night sweats made their appearance. I lost flesh and became greatly emaciated. I consulted medical men and used various remedies, but all efforts for relief utterly failed. In that condition, and greatly disheartened and discouraged, I applied to Dr. Lighthill, whose able and thorough examination of my case proved to me that I was in the right hands. Convinced that he fully understood my condition, and, inspired with new hope, I placed myself under his care, and very soon experienced the benefit of his treatment. One after another of the symptoms of Catarrh left me. I gained in strength and weight, my cough and night sweats disappeared, and now I am only too thankful and delighted to be able to call myself well again. Hoping that this statement may give new courage and confidence to such as may suffer as I have,

I remain, respectfully,
CLEMENT A. THORNDIKE.

CATARRH CURED.

FROM REV. E. C. BUTLER,

Beverly, Mass.

I most heartily recommend any one afflicted with that troublesome disease, Catarrh, to Dr. Lighthill. I have full confidence in him. His treatment has had the most gratifying results in my own case, which was severe and of long standing.

E. C. BUTLER,

Beverly, Mass., Oct. 29, 1879.

CURE OF DEAFNESS.

FROM RT. REV. T. F. HENDRIKEN,
Bishop of Providence. R. I.

My Dear Dr. Lighthill: Permit me to thank you most heartily for your kindness to the Sisters of our Convent. I had no idea when I consulted you on Sister Demonica's deafness that you could so quickly restore her back to hearing, but she tells me that she hears now better than she did before. For this, and your kind and successful treatment of my own deafness, I thank you. Now I would be glad to have you refer your patients to me. You know I can recommend you as a physician and surgeon, thoroughly accomplished in those departments of medicine in which you practice. I owe you a debt of gratitude, and would be glad to pay it.

Very truly and sincerely yours
Rt. Rev. T. F. HENDRIKEN.

A complete and permanent cure of

ASTHMA.

REPORT FROM MR. C. F. BOYNTON, 31 MILK STREET, BOSTON, ROOM 35.
TO THE PUBLIC.

After having spent large sums of money, and found no relief, I was induced to apply to Dr. Lighthill, at 115 Boylston street, for treatment. having suffered from asthma in the worst form for six years, and I wish to say, for the benefit of others suffering as I did that DR. LIGHTHILL'S TREATMENT HAS MADE ME A WELL MAN, and I now can enjoy life, when before it was a dread to me. This cure was performed on me over a year ago, and I can confidently pronounce it a permanent one. I hope all afflicted with that dreadful disease will avail themselves of Dr. Lighthill's skilful services, for I feel morally sure he can cure them.

NO. V. BUSINESS CENTERS

Have also changed since the advent of railroads into this country. It is not unusual for populous centers to change in a mining country. I have often passed through places in this territory where eight and ten years ago there were as many thousands of population, cities teeming with life and dissipation, but where, to-day, there remains in some instances but a single residence, in others a few deserted dwellings. Some of these places were country ruts. But the mines which attracted the people having ceased to pay, the fortune-seekers have gone elsewhere and their claims are abandoned, their dwellings left to the moles and the bats. The former capital of Montana, once a populous city, larger, perhaps, than Helean is to-day, and having the richest placer mines in the world, is now a deserted mining camp.

This is the natural and necessary fate of strictly mining towns, but it is noticeable that the rail roads have often changed the centers of commerce in this country. Populous towns on the old coach lines are now forsaken and forlorn, while new and flourishing centers have sprung up as if by magic along the line of the rail ways where a year or two since there was not a single dwelling or a thought of one.

Scarcely six months ago on a Sunday morning there passed through Helena a train of cars drawing one thousand passengers nearly all of whom were bound for the famous Coeur D'Aline mountains, where the least possible amount of gold created the greatest possible stampede among mining and other dupes, many of whom, a few weeks later, were found in the streets of Helena, begging a breakfast and known as "busted Coeur D'Aliners," having struggled thus far homeward. It was over the same great highway of the world a few days later that a freight train of forty cars loaded with groceries tobacco and whiskey marked with placards and festooned with flags followed this great army of soon-to-be disappointed fortune-seekers to Thompson's Falls—the nearest shipping point on the Northern Pacific road to the Coeur d' Alines, to be borne over the mountains on pack mules. To day the recently populous cities of the Coeur d'Alines are silent and tenantless. Their occupants have departed as quickly as they came, the flames have destroyed their vacant cabins, the snow covers the prints of their weary feet and the silence of the eternal mountains reigns once more where cities of tens of thousands of people have suddenly appeared and disappeared in the short space of half a year.

Other plans have gone on steadily increasing like Butte (six thousand feet above sea level) which has constantly increased in its mining interests for the past twelve years with brighter prospects to-day than ever before. The deeper they bore into the mountains the richer grows the out put of ores which give no indication of diminution for fifty years to come. Butte is one of the loftiest cities of its size in America and destined to be the richest in mineral products.

Of all the places in Montana Helena is far in the lead. Unlike Butte its mines have long since become exhausted, but its business growth and development, as a commercial centre, has made it one of the wealthiest and thriftiest cities on the continent. It has never seen a building "boom" equal to that of the past season.

Large and imposing blocks of business houses and elegant, palatial residences, competing with those found anywhere in the East, have constantly risen on every side during the past eight or ten months. These have been largely built with surplus capital lying idle in the numerous banks of Helena, but unless the city has a phenomenal growth there must come a set-back compensating for this unusual and unnatural growth which, indeed is already being felt.

I have travelled through nine states and four territories in the past few months but nowhere have I seen a growth commensurate with that seen in this little city in the heart of the Rocky mountains.

The city has been disturbed with the political commotion incident to a presidential campaign. One would suppose that in a territory where the people have no voice in a presidential election there would be immunity from the strife and confusion seen at such times in the states. Alas there is no such place in all this broad land. The spirit of our politics reaches to the remotest corner of Uncle Sam's great form. There is just as much street parade, political spouting, deafening music, sky rockets, profane language, bad whiskey, expectorated tobacco juice on the street corners, low talk in the dram shops, and partings between fools and their money, here, as elsewhere. What a travesty upon the high offices of our country!

Had February one hour less we should have no full moon in this month this year. The moon fulls at eleven on the 28th.

MAYO'S

Compound Vegetable Anæsthetic.

A safe and pleasant substitute for gas and ether.

Discovered by Dr. N. K. Mayo of Boston, April 1883, subsequently administered by him in nearly two thousand cases, producing perfect slumber, being applicable to the child, the delicate sensitive woman as well as the hardy man. No ill effects have followed its use in any case, it acting rather as a vegetable tonic.

It controls the patient one-fourth longer than gas giving us time to remove from three to twenty teeth. It is with great confidence we have introduced it into our practice, giving very successful results.

This anæsthetic is purely a vegetable compound and can be administered with perfect safety to children and people in delicate health. It has no after effect as is apt to be the case in Nitrous Oxide Gas and Ether.

A THRILLING STORY.

As Told by a Merchant in Troy, N. Y.—A Surgical Operation Avoided.—How a Father, Wife and Daughter Escaped an Awful Doom.

Of the hundreds of accounts of remarkable cures wrought by DR. KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY, none have appeared so purely astonishing as the following: The persons mentioned are among the most highly respected in the city of Troy, and the story as told by the father will prove interesting to our readers,—ED.

Troy, N. Y.

Dr. Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.:—

Dear Sir: My daughter was afflicted with a severe growth of Fungus. To remove it we had resorted to almost every remedy and consulted the most prominent surgeons and physicians. Dr.—— of Troy, said that a surgical operation would be necessary, but fearing fatal results I hesitated. Some of the physicians claimed that it was caused by one thing and some by another. The Fungus was prominent and disfigured her looks. Having heard of Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE working so thoroughly on the blood I determined to try it, to see if this medicine could do what doctors had failed to do and surgeons had hardly dared to undertake. I can say in truth that the result of this trial was the complete cure of my daughter of this dreadful malady. Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY alone effected it. We used nothing else, for other things had completely failed. My daughter to-day enjoys vigorous health and to Favorite Remedy alone is the credit due. My wife also was very poor in health, due to some liver difficulty with which she had suffered a long time until she became very much reduced in flesh. A trial of Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy has resulted in the complete restoration of her health, which she had not enjoyed for years. She had gained in flesh and strength, and thus secured perfect health, and this is due entirely to DR. KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY. As for myself, being engaged in the grocery and commission business, which makes it necessary for me to test the quality of different articles, like butter, etc., my sense of taste and my stomach were seriously injured. Everything seemed to nauseate me, and fearful of dyspepsia in its most severe form, I tried DR. KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY. The first bottle afforded immediate relief, and from that day to this I can say that Favorite Remedy has restored me to perfect health. These are facts which I claim prove that Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy is the best medicine in the world for those afflicted with the above difficulties. If any one in the city of Troy doubts the truth of these statements let him come to me and I will prove them. I have recommended Favorite Remedy to hundreds and with the same good results. Yours, etc.,

WILLIAM WINDSOR.

Satisfied Jealousy.

The worst case of suspicion and jealousy in the Northwest has just been cured, the patient being the wife of a well known travelling man. She had noticed that her husband never brought his grip home with him, but always left it at the store when he came in from a trip, and in her jealousy she imagined it to be filled with love letters, appointments of meetings with various fair ones, etc. A few days since, while her husband was on a trip through Dakota, she went down to the store and approaching the porter said:

'John, you like to make a dollar honestly when you can, don't you?'

'Oh, yes'm.'

'You know where my husband keeps his grip when he comes in, don't you?'

'Yes'm. He throws it down in a corner of the office an' leaves it there.'

'Well, look here, John. He will be in on the Northern Pacific train to-morrow morning, and if at the first opportunity you slip his grip out of the house and bring it up to me I'll give you a dollar. You can bring it back in half an hour.

The porter consented, and two days later presented himself at the drummer's residence with the grip in his hand. He explained that he had not before had an opportunity to carry it away, and giving him a seat in the parlor, the woman carried her prize to the bedroom and with set teeth and pale face, opened it. The first thing she encountered was a well worn pocket Bible, thumbed and showing the marks of much handling. Then she dug out a soiled shirt, some unchaste socks, comb, hairbrush, and then she found a letter folded without an envelope. This she opened eagerly and read as follows:—

Fargo, D. T., Sept. 1, 1884.—Mr. William ——, Dear Sir: Your monthly assessment of fifty cents for the support of the Young Men's Christian Association (Bible fund) is now due, and the earnest interest you have always taken in the work assures me you will promptly remit the amount. You will be pleased to learn that the good cause progresses rapidly, as you predicted it would in your address delivered here a few weeks since. Yours,

A. W. Edwards, Secretary.

This drove much of the hard, stony look from her face, but she continued her search. She fished out three or four tracts, a bottle of pop, a Francis Murphy temperance badge, a bottle of Dr. Surepop's Corn Destroyer, a bottle of Prof. Gitthere's Bunion Pacifier, some more impure socks, and, beneath it all, in the bottom of the grip, a letter sealed, stamped and ready for the mail, addressed to 'Miss Georgie Gray, St. Paul, Minn.'

The superscription was in her husband's well-known handwriting, and again the stony look came into her eyes, and her patent bosom heaved with suppressed emotion. Her teeth gritted together, and her breath came as hard as three-year-old New England cider.

'Oh! the wretch!' she cried in her anguish. 'My suspicions are too well founded! Georgie Gray! Oh! if I had the—the—the thing here I'd kick her bustle clear over her head! I'd—I'd—I'd— Oh! this is too much! too much!' and she gave away to a flood of tears!

When she had calmed herself she tore the letter open and read as follows:—

St. Paul, Minn., Sept. 19. Miss Gray: Your note asking me to meet you in Rice Park Saturday evening was handed me by a District messenger boy this morning. In reply permit me to say that you have mistaken the man. You may not be aware of the fact, but I beg to inform you that I am a married man, and am blessed with the love and confidence of the best and sweetest little wife in America. Rather than betray that confidence or dishonor that love, I would suffer ten thousand deaths. In my eyes there is but one woman in the world, and she it is who greets me with a pleasant smile and a wifely kiss every time I come from a trip. I shall not tell her of this, for I do not want her to know that one of her sex could be so depraved and lost to all sense of honor as your act has proven you to be.

William ——.'

Then she laid down on the bed and sobbed for awhile, and then closed the grip, took it to the porter and asked him to return it to the store and say nothing of what had occurred. As he entered the store the drummer stepped from behind a pile of goods and asked:

'Did she go through it, John?'

'Guess so. She took it into another room an' was gone half an hour before she brought it back.'

'How did she act?'

'Well, she was smilin' awfully, but looked teary like around the eyes. She gimme another dollar an' said this world would be a happy world if all men were like her husband.'

'That's business, John; here's the V I promised you, and now let's go across the street and take something. When you come back dump that stuff out and put my things back in the grip, for I go out to-morrow morning. I'll never forget you John, for putting me onto this,' and they slipped out and disappeared behind the green shade of a convenient saloon.—St. Paul Herald.

How To Write A Christmas Story.

'Is this the literary editor?'

The horse reporter looked up and discovered a young lady standing in the doorway.

'No, madam,' he replied. 'I suppose you have brought an original story, and want the literary editor to commune with it.'

'Yes, sir,' replied the young lady. 'I have written a story, and mamma thinks it is very good.'

'Is there anything in it about the leaves turning to golden, and the velvety green of the leaves are now looking sere and brown? Because if there is, it won't do. The dull-red-glow-of-the-dying-ember racket is what we shall show the public from now until December. Got any dying embers in your story?'

'No, sir. Mine is a love story.'

'That's all right. The dull red glow works in beautifully in a love story; although, as a rule, young men who fall in love don't have currency enough to buy a cord of wood to make embers of.'

'But why must I write my story in that particular style?' asked the young lady.

'Because it is the season for it. You want to start out by saying that as Harold Nonesuch, the rich banker, sat in his magnificently furnished parlor, and gazed thoughtfully into the dull red embers of the dying fire in the grate, there came trooping up from the dim vista of an almost forgotten past, memories, sad sad, memories, that caused the unbidden tear to start. Don't make any mistake about the tear business; and be sure to have only one tear, because that's the orthodox style in stories. And be certain it is an unbidden tear. A tear that had received a cordial invitation to be present and start wouldn't do at all. Then say that the old man's thoughts wandered back to the happy days of his childhood. Be certain to have them wander back. If you were to say his thoughts went back, the story would be spoiled. 'Wander' is the correct style. Then when you get the old man back to his happy boyhood days you want to trot out Lucy.'

'Trot out who?'

'Lucy—little Lucy Perkins—with her great blue eyes and golden hair, the playmate of his youth that he loved so dearly and always looked upon as his future wife. Then lug out another unbidden tear, and finally have the old man break down in a storm of sobs.'

'It's very sad, isn't it?' said the young lady. 'Lucy died, I suppose, and the old man's heart is breaking.'

'No,' said the horse reporter; 'Lucy married another man.'

'Then what makes the banker weep?' inquired the maiden.

'Sympathy for the other man.'

Joyfully Astonished.—Mr. James Brunt, Deputy Sheriff, Baltimore, Maryland, writes: In an experience of thirty years I have become acquainted with numerous so-called specifics for coughs and colds, but never before experienced such surprising efficacy as was obtained from the Red Star Cough Cure. I was attacked with a severe deep-seated cold and cough. I suffered for some time, and tried this valuable remedy. I was completely cured by the use of one bottle.

Horace Greeley—he used to tell the story himself—once sent a claim to a western attorney for collection, the attorney to keep half the amount for his fee. After a time, Mr. Greeley received the following note from the lawyer: "Dear Sir—I have succeeded in collecting my half of that claim. The balance is hopeless."

Oil From Nature's Wells.—The skin on the head is kept soft and flexible by a secretion from the oil glands. When these are clogged the hair dries and falls off. Parker's Hair Balsam renews their action, restores the original color to the hair and makes it soft and glossy. It also eradicates dandruff. Not greasy, not a dye, deliciously perfumed. Delightful for a lady's toilet table. The best of dressings. Preferable to all similar articles because of its superior cleanliness and purity.

SKATING RINK NOTES.

An audience of about 800 was present at the entertainment given at the rink by the Peabody Bicycle Club last Thursday evening. The first part of the evening was devoted to skating and at 9 o'clock Prof. W. H. Marshall, of Beverly, gave an exhibition of trick and fancy bicycle riding. This was followed by the slow race, having four starters, Albert Elwell, of Danvers, B. F. Thistle, of Beverly, O. P. Galeucia, and A. F. Poor of the Peabody Bicycle Club. The prize, a gold medal, was won by Alfred Elwell of Danvers, as it took him the longest time to go the distance laid out. Eddie McLaughlin the contortionist followed in an amusing exhibition. The obstacle race wound up the attractions and consisted in riding over obstructions placed in the way. The following entered, Albert Elwell, B. F. Thistle, O. P. Galeucia, Ross F. Hardy of Salem. The prize a gold medal was won by Albert Elwell, of Danvers. Dancing followed till twelve o'clock.

The Peabodys defeated the Stars of Haverhill, last Thursday, in three straight goals. First, 2 minutes 35 seconds, Second. 4 minutes 50 seconds and Third, 9 minutes 13 seconds. Chas. O'Malley, referee.

The polo game at the rink last evening called out a fair sized audience. The game was between the Brockton Citys and the home team. Mr. Atwood of Haverhill acted as referee. Kirk, formerly of the Bay States, was goal tender for the Brocktons. Felton took his old position as rusher for the Peabodys. Churchill, rusher for the Brockton Citys, secured the first rush and the play had hardly begun, when in 15 seconds time the egg was laid in Morrill's private box, giving the goal to the Brocktons. The second goal opened by "Billy" Felton taking the rush and by a pretty and skillful play he carried the sphere through the ranks of the enemy whose numerous strokes only met the floor with resounding blows and put it squarely inside the Brockton's goal, without any one else touching the ball. Time five seconds. The third goal was a rattling and scientific game. The Brocktons secured the rush and the ball was soon spinning toward the Peabodys goal, but it was quickly sent to the other end of the rink, and for a few minutes the Brocktons played on the defensive. The ball then passed to the corner near the Peabodys goal, till Felton run it up to the Brocktons again. Back and forward flew the ball, Morrill stopping it at the Peabodys goal three successive times. The two clubs then seemed to bunch in the center of the rink with little advantage to either. Again the ball was dangerously near the Brocktons goal, when the goal tender made several fine plays, but a straight shot from Goulding sent the ball into the Brocktons goal despite the best efforts of the goal tender. Time 12 minutes and fifty seconds. The fourth goal was stubbornly fought, and several fine plays were made. Leonard of the Brockton Citys got a savage blow over the eye and while he was recovering the boys had a little practice, but didn't seem to make much effort when the game was resumed, and a scramble was made for the ball close to the Brocktons goal, and the little joker was placed in the Brocktons coop by Goulding in 3 minutes and 30 seconds.

Remember the Peabodys and Gloucesters next week.

The game last night made twelve straight games the Peabodys have won.

We understand that hereafter in case the hooting, jeering and hissing of visiting clubs by disorderly persons in the audiences is continued, the referees will stop the league game of polo, as is their duty in accordance with the rules of the Mass. Polo League.

After this the Gloucester team will have to work hard to maintain their position in the Massachusetts League.

Some of the local newspapers in suburban cities near Boston and in the large towns of the state, when their local polo team gets worsted at home seek to cover the defeat by abusing the referee. Besides being an unfair and foolish thing to do, it misleads no one, nor alters the result.—Chelsea Telegraph. We fail to see any one but the referee, Hallett (Collingwood), of your city abused, and he certainly deserved all he gets if his decision was as bad in other places as here.

"Rinkmating" meaning to skate in a rink, is the latest new word added to the English language.

The February number of the Young Ladies' Journal has been received from the International News Company of New York. It is a charming number full of interesting reading matter and fashion plates. Page after page is devoted to fancy work, of new designs finely illustrated. No young lady can afford to be without this magazine. Get it of the Peabody News Company.

We learn that Mr. Starr C. Hewitt has received a very liberal offer to go on the road.

THE DRAMA.

At the Boston Theatre Margaret Mather will appear this week for two weeks only. She makes her first appearance in Macbeth and the Honeymoon in Boston, having added these plays to her repertoire this year. This evening, Friday and Saturday evenings she plays Macbeth, Thursday evening and Saturday afternoon Juliana in the Honeymoon. Miss Mather's success this year is equal to any previous years. In Providence where she played a week standing room was at a premium, and it is evident that no other actress on the American stage can attract the public like Miss Mather.

This is the last week of Robson and Crane at the Park. They play the Cherubs this week which is one of their funniest plays. Next week the Madison Square Theatre appear in the Private Secretary.

This is the last week of Fantine at the Boston Museum, when it closes a very successful run. Next week they will bring out Iolanthe which has been in rehearsal for several weeks. There will be much interest attached to its production at this Theatre, and it can hardly fail to be a good performance.

This is the second week of Mr. McCaull's company in Gilbert & Sullivan's Operas at the Bijou Theatre. Last week Patience was played to full houses and finely played. Miss Mary Beebe was taken ill in the middle of the week and Janet Edmondson took her place at an hour's notice, and was heartily received. This week the Sorcerer will be performed, with a strong cast. The revival of Gilbert & Sullivan's operas is a refreshing change from some of the weak operas inflicted on the public. The Pirates of Penzance is the next in order.

MESSRS EDITORS:—In last week's PRESS the following interesting statement was given. "Never in our own recollection has there been a time when a person could go up and down the whole length of Foster street of an evening and not find a liquor shop open. It certainly is the case now." On reading that, we could not help saying what an undeniable argument that prohibition laws can be enforced. And as we elsewhere read that "these liquor saloons have closed their doors because of the persistent attacks of the Law and Order League, and will keep them closed until after the vote of the town at the March meeting," we instinctively said "God bless the Law and Order League." And we said in our mind is it possible that any will go to that meeting, and vote to have the rum traffic opened again? And opened by whom? By those who have been found guilty of violating the law over and over again. Can any citizen, by his vote, help to undo this year's work? Can he help to overthrow those "persistent attacks, of the Law and Order League," carried out by the Police? Does any one believe that the fortunes these liquor dealers will lose, if the town continues no-license, would begin to equal the fortunes wrecked, the misery of the families, the wretchedness, poverty and crime which the liquor sold by these dealers is responsible for?

Before last year's election, it was said "suppose we vote against license how are the laws to be enforced? A prohibitory law will be a great deal harder to enforce than the present license law, and who is going to enforce it?" We have seen how and by whom it can be done. It was also said "no-license means a free-rum sale; it means having twice as many engaged in the business." But, it has come to have a different meaning for Peabody. It means the closing of every liquor shop on Foster street.

The question now is simply this:—Shall they remain closed? Who by a yes vote, will say "open them?" Surely none but the law-breakers themselves. YOURS FOR VICTORY.

Peabody Feb. 2, 1885.

The weather here yesterday was marked by remarkable extremes. Rain fell during the forenoon, and for a couple of hours during the afternoon the weather was delightful, but the temperature fell rapidly between 3 P. M. and midnight. From 2 until 7 P. M, there was a fall of 33°, and it was six below this morning and zero weather has prevailed all day.

Mr. Orthernial Ferrin has taken the agency for the "Spy of the Rebellion" and is receiving a large number of orders. The work is the true story of the adventures of Detective Pinkerton and his "right bower," Webster, during the war of the rebellion. It is finely illustrated and printed in clean type on nice paper. The book contains nearly 700 pages and is sold at $3.50 per copy.

There is a bad leak in the water main on Grove street under the bridge, caused by a freeze. It will take several days to repair it. Mr. Lord is doing the work.

Mr. Arthur F. Poor lost a horse yesterday morning by the horse falling on Buffum street and breaking his leg.

The department were called out last Friday evening at 7.30 o'clock by a fire in the wooden building at the corner of Short and Foster streets, occupied by Thomas E. Wilson as a machine shop. The fire was discovered by several people some few minutes before the alarm was given, and attempts were made to extinguish it with buckets of water, but there was such a draught that the efforts were unavailing. When discovered the fire was around the boiler in the northwest corner of the building and by the time the department arrived had worked its way into the roof and run along to the Foster street end where it was bursting through the roof, but a few minutes work with four streams put on by Hose 1 and Steamer 1 soon had the fire all out. Hose 1 attached three lines to the hydrant in front of the old police station, and the steamer was set at the foot of Spring street. The building was owned by the town and was damaged to the amount of about $150, on which there was no insurance. Mr. Wilson's loss was principally on belting, every belt but one being burned, stock and machinery, and will amount to about $350 of which $75 was for belting. On this there was no insurance, all policies having expired last summer, and since then both the town and Mr. Wilson have done their own insuring. At the back of the shop on Short street was the small building of the Lamp Department, within 10 feet of the hottest part of the fire but it was not even scorched. In this building there were two barrels of kerosene oil but it was promptly removed to a place of safety. As soon as the firemen were done work Mr. Wilson put a gang of men at work clearing up and at seven o'clock the next morning was running his machinery as though nothing had occurred. Spaulding had a gang of carpenters at work all day Saturday repairing the burned part. During the fire the smoke was so thick that a person could not see but a few feet before him, and the steamer ran into the Hook and Ladder truck, which was standing in front of the fire but no damage was done. The firemen were covered with ice from head to foot and many of them not having rubber coats with them were drenched to the skin, their clothes freezing on them. 1000 feet of hose was wet at this fire. Steamer 1 burst one piece of their suction hose. The old trouble of the alarm not being heard caused some of the companies to be very short handed. A heavier bell is needed.

Saturday forenoon about 11 o'clock the woodwork in one of the drying lofts at the morocco factory of A. B. Clark on Union street was set on fire by the overheating of a stove. Word was sent to Proctor's tannery to have the whistle blown, but before that could be done the fire was put out and no alarm given.

On Wednesday Representative Root of Pittsfield, a member of the State Firemen's Association, in behalf of that association's legislative committee, presented the following petition to the Legislature:

To the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts in General Court assembled: The undersigned citizens of Massachusetts respectively represent that at a meeting of the Massachusetts State Firemen's Association, held at Fall River, Oct. 16, 1884, the undersigned committee were authorized to petition yout honorable bodies for the passage of an act to establish a standard uniform fire hose coupling, to be used by all fire departments of cities, towns and fire districts in the Commonwealth. (Signed) John S. Damrell, Boston; Henry L. Bixby, Newton; W. H. Turner, Boston; Samuel Abbott, Jr., Boston; George S. Willis, Pittsfield; S. P. Brown, Waltham; John B. Peck, North Attleboro, and W. M. Snow, Middleboro.

The bill provides for a coupling of a uniform thread on all hose thereafter purchased in this State. It does not in any manner affect the hose in use now, a connection screw being used until all the old couplings are done away with, which will be a matter of ten years more or less.

The Directors of the Relief Association will hold a meeting at the engine house, Thursday evening.

Hose Company No. 2. have received their new rubber coats of Mr. George H. Jacobs.

A short time ago some person unknown entered the house of Mr. Benj. Annable of the firm of Friend & Annable, on Boston street, and left a lot of combustible material in a closet and set fire to it. The family smelled the smoke and upon investigation it was found, but by some fortunate chance had gone out.

Chief Engineer Morse of the National Fire Department was in town Monday and visited the Central Station.

George E. Hills formerly a member of Abel Proctor H. & L. is on his way home from Wadsworth, Nevada, where he has been employed for the past ten years. He was one of the fire correspondents of the New York Mercury from this town for years, writing under the name of "Splice." He will visit New Orleans and other southern cities before he returns.

Quite a number of the firemen will attend the dance by Ocean Hose 3 of Danvers, next Friday evening.

NOTES

Strangers coming to this town complain bitterly of the "social and ancient citizen" barriers, which hinder them from coming into full intercourse with what should be our best families. No one who shows qualities entitling him to respect, should be treated coldly on the ground that his ancestors' bones were buried in foreign lands. There seems to be a class of people here, who are willing to "toady" to anyone who can wear a good suit of clothes, or who belongs to one of the old families, and he is received into any household, although it is known that his moral character is of the very lowest. Peabody must extend a cordial welcome to virtue and honesty before she will attract many new comers to herself.

There are in this town a lot of young men, who call themselves "mashers." They spend most of their time standing on the corners of the streets, smiling in a sickly and disgusting way upon every young lady as she passes by. One of this class met his just deserts last week. Two well known ladies were walking up Lowell street, when this would-be "masher" commenced to put in his work by attracting the ladies' attention to himself. The husband of one of the ladies was only a short distance away in his sleigh and driving close to the sidewalk, let his whip descend upon the unprotected head of the "nuisance," who quickly took to his heels.

I learn there is an ambitious member of the police force who sighs for the shoes of Officer Peasley, as Chief-of-Police. Great Scott, the shoes are too large for the man.

There is an unfortunate woman in this town and many of your readers will know to whom I refer, who has so far fallen as to be unable to control her appetite for strong drink. While she was without a home, kind friends have of late been making special efforts to save her, but their efforts are being blocked by a number of young men, who persistently follow her for the gratification of their low purposes. I should not call attention to this affair, but to warn them that unless they stop just where they are, full publicity will be given to their actions, also their names, front and back. They have friends who would be exceedingly pained by this exposure, and thus our forbearance.

What does it mean? On two different occasions of late, I have noticed a man on two different streets carrying a sign on his back inscribed as follows, as near as I can recollect: "Collector of bad accounts and from dead beats, and those who don't pay their bills. Watch where I go and you will know who they are."

I can't vouch for all I hear, but it is only my province to hear and then write what I hear. I heard that one of our store keepers said that in future he should ask visitors to squirt their tobacco juice in the boxes designed for that use. He said he knew his overshoes were large and very convenient to spit in, but he bought them on time and didn't want them ruined until they were paid for. Another season he will probably use them for coal boxes.

Last Saturday evening our assistant postmaster, Albert P. Chute, reached his twenty-first birthday and it was made a very pleasant occasion by a number of his friends who gave him a surprise party at his home on Lowell street. There were just 21 present, they occupied 21 chairs, and it was 21 minutes past when they left. He received numerous presents including a handsome handkerchief case with forget-me-nots worked upon it, and a basket of flowers and numerous other presents.

The annual meeting of the Baptist society was held Monday evening. P. D. Perkins was elected clerk, A. F. Rowell treasurer, and William Perkins auditor. The society was reported in a prosperous condition. There were two deaths, three dismissals by card, and eight taken into the church during the year. There is a membership of 130.

Arrangements are being made for a grand sleighride to Gloucester on Feb. 16, the occasion of the polo game between the Peabodys and Gloucesters. Leave Peabody rink at 6 o'clock sharp. Tickets $1.00.

Mr. Charles Benjamin the flag man borrowed a pair of shears of one of our barbers, for a few minutes yesterday, and when he returned them his hair and beard were trimmed up. Nothing like economy.

616 to 622 Washington, cor. Essex Street,

For years the readers of the PRESS have become familiar with the name of Almy, Bigelow & Webber in our advertising columns. They have a wide reputation for integrity and enterprise. The firm has been dissolved by the withdrawal of Mr. Wm. G. Webber, who leaves the firm with the regrets of many of its old patrons. A new firm has been organized under the name of Almy, Bigelow & Washburn, consisting of James F. Almy, Walter K. Bigelow, Calvin R. Washburn and E. Augustus Annable. The partners are well known to the public and customers, as they have been connected with the old firm for years. We commend to the attention of our readers the new firm, and call attention to their advertisement on the second page of this issue. So fine an opportunity to secure bargains should be taken advantage of by all persons who wish to get the most for their money.

There was a lively demand for tickets for the Cantata, Heroes of '76, at Spaulding's this morning; lots of good seats left.

Richard Jones fell into a vat at Proctor's tannery last Thursday night and was somewhat bruised, but fortunately not scalded.

The West Peabody Farmers' Club will wrestle next Friday evening with the subject "What is England's policy toward Egypt?"

A boy named Benj. O'Connell fell on a sharp pointed stick on Caller street and it pierced his hand inflicting a very painful injury.

Mrs. R. H. Wilkinson leaves to-day for a visit to her brother, Frank W. Poor, in Kansas City, where she will remain until Spring.

The good sledding has been well improved by owners of wood lots hereabouts, and goodly piles of logs have been brought to the front.

The Danvers Bleachery have received from the McCabe works, Lawrence, two large iron tiers to be used in the process of bleaching cloth.

It is probable that a grocers' association will be formed in Peabody, Beverly, Danvers and Salem, with headquarters at the latter place.

The many deaths in this vicinity recently are attributed to the extreme cold weather. Vitality runs low with aged people in cold weather.

Mr. John I. Baker, of Beverly, was on our streets Friday. The blue-eyed philosopher looked as gentle and harmless as if he never run for Congress.

The coarse or comical valentines are fast going out of style, more attention being devoted to the production of beautiful valentines, say the dealers.

There are certain combinations of men who are giving their attention to slate writing and other mysterious things said to be performed by spirits.

The Boston Herald Dramatic Club gave an entertainment in Town Hall, Boston, last week, in which Mr. Timothy Hanrahan of this town took a leading part.

Candidates for the various offices to be filled at the coming spring election seem to be very slow in coming to the front. They won't be as bashful after election.

Mr. Charles Annable, of this town, was united in marriage last Wednesday to Miss Ella F. O'Connell of Salem. The ceremony took place at St. James Church in Salem.

A representation of Union Post 50 G. A. R. attended the social reception given by John A. Andrew, Post 15 of Boston, last Friday night. They were well repaid for their visit.

It is said that when the left ear "burns" somebody is talking ill about you; and you may have noticed that the left ear burns about ninety per cent. oftener than the right year.

G. Fred Osgood, J. Howard Fallon and George H. Poor are talked of for trustees of Peabody Institute. We are willing to take off our coats and put in some work for those gentlemen.

The House committee on post-offices has agreed to report a bill reducing the rate of postage on newspapers, mailed from the office of their publication from 2 cents to 1 cent per pound.

Rev. S. R. Thayer, presiding elder of this district, will preach at the Methodist church next Sunday at 2.15. After the service the fourth quarterly conference will be held in the vestry.

A fashion paper says: "Skeleton bonnets are all the rage." The husband is one who performs the "rage" act when he is called upon to pay a small fortune for a ghost of a hat.

We were struck by the strength of the argument of a religious exchange against lotteries, and then, turning to the next page, were struck by the magnificent prizes offered for subscribers.

It is very probable that Mr. F. E. Farnham will call the Citizen's Caucus, as he was Chairman of the Citizen's Committee last year, and as none was elected, the office holds good this year.

Last Saturday evening Mrs. James Dunney fell on the ice on Mason street and broke her leg. She was taken to her home on Elm street in Mr. Thomas' team and Dr. Osborne attended her.

Several capitalists were in town last week looking over the field, and considering the feasibility of introducing the Edison incandescent light. Come on, gentlemen, we want all the improvements.

Mr. Henry Wilson will erect a dwelling house on Lowell street the coming spring, on land recently purchased of Mr. Jas. P. King. This is a desirable location for one wishing to secure a home.

"Gentleman Pat Sweeney" didn't remain long after his return from the county house, and was sent back to that institution for six months last Saturday for assaulting his mother and brother.

West Peabody is talking of holding a caucus up there and after putting in nomination town officers, coming down here and asking this part of the town to ratify them. Perhaps they will, and then again—

Mr. P. J. Lyon's barber shop has put on quite a holiday look, having been newly papered, painted and kalsomined, Mr. George F. Ward doing the work. Call in and see the improvements and then get a clean shave.

Thursday afternoon eight young men employed on the lake cutting ice were paid off, and hiring horse and sleigh in Stoneham, they paid a grand visit to Peabody, where they—had a good time.—Wakefield Bulletin.

It is extemely fashionable to be "quiet" nowadays. Quiet weddings, quiet parties, quiet dinners and quiet teas suggest that we may expect society to become one big mum social in the course of a few short years.

Daniel Lynch, a tramp, assaulted another tramp named John Riley at the police station last night and was sent to Ipswich for two months. It will be warm enough to sleep out of doors when he gets out.

It took about three days to repair the break in the water pipe on Grove street last week. The men worked all night Tuesday, and but for the flag man's shop, where they could go occasionally, they could not have stood it.

The Peabody Band of Hope, forty-five in number, visited the Swampscott Temperance Army last Saturday afternoon. A special car was kindly furnished for their use by Mr. Chas. A. Haskell. It was very enjoyable.

Two women from Salem wearing poke bonnets labelled "Salvation Army" have been seen on our streets of late. Perhaps they are the picket of a contemplated raid by Major Moore's corps on the cohorts of sin in this place.

Mr. Cousins has another grand bargain sale this week, and customers who are prompt on the ground will be amply repaid for any extra trouble they may be at to get there. He has lately given some of the best bargains ever enjoyed by buyers in Salem, or anywhere else.

A representative of the "Law & Order," a newspaper in the interest of law and order, was in town last week soliciting subscriptions. It is one of the best papers of the kind published. It is edited by L. Edwin Dudley, Secretary of the Mass. League.

The County Commissioners met at the town house yesterday to give a hearing on the petition of the Eastern Railroad to extend their tracks to Proctor's tannery. The hearing was postponed till Saturday morning, Feb. 28th, at 9 o'clock.

We have been sent a petition for names asking that a law be passed to regulate the charges to be paid for telephone service. Such companies should be under some restriction as they are a gigantic monopoly. This is a move in the right direction.

The following names have been placed on some of the engines running on the eastern division of the B. & M. R. R. No. 202, Montserrat; 104, Ipswich; 112, Arundel; 175, John Tompson; 170, Rye Beach; 195, Francis Chase, and 43, Middlesex.

One of the handsomest and most unique and original ideas in chromo lithography is the Columbia valentine, just issued by the Pope Manufacturing Co., of Boston, Mass. The design, which is in twelve colors and mounted upon a panel, is very pretty.

We regret to record the death of Arthur, ten months old son of George and Annie Whitney, who died last evening of pneumonia. The child was an exceedingly lovable one, bright and intersting and the bereaved parents have the sympathy of the community.

The Essex Agricultural Society will hold an institute in Town Hall, Ipswich, Tuesday, Feb. 24. The "Co-operative Sale of Milk" will be discussed in the forenoon, and The "Co-operative Creamery" in the afternoon. The B. & M. railroad is expected to furnish free return tickets.

Last Monday afternoon a man named Thomas McMahon employed at the Danvers Bleachery was guiding cloth out of one of the folding pens in the wash room, and in reaching over to pick up a stick used in his work the running cloth caught around one of his legs and before he could help himself he was carried along to where the cloth passes through an eye, about six inch in diameter, and striking against a breaking it and throwing him t floor. He was picked up and re to his boarding house seriously i and medical aid summoned.

Poet's Corner.

At the Rink.

One more unfortunate,
Trusting the fates,
Rashly importunate,
Tried on the skates.
Pick her up tenderly,
Loosen the straps,
Fashioned so tenderly,
Unused to mishaps.

Oh, it was pitiful
That she should flop,
Where a whole city full,
Must see her drop!
Pick her up tenderly,
Smooth out her dress,
Fashioned so slenderly,
Made to caress.

Out she struck trustfully,
Skating galore,
Down she came bustfully
On the hard floor.
Pick her up tenderly,
So good and so true,
Fashioned so slenderly,
What could she do?

Bumping inhumanly,
Jolting the men,
She is pure womanly,
And tries it again,
Pick her up tenderly,
What does she care!
Fashioned so slenderly,
So plump and so fair.

After.

After the shower, the tranquil sun;
After the snow, the emerald leaves;
Silver stars when the day is done;
After the harvest, golden sheaves.

After the clouds, the violet sky;
After the tempest, the lull of waves.
Quiet woods when the winds go by;
After the battle, peaceful graves.

After the knell, the wedding bells;
After the bud, the radiant rose;
Joyful greetings from sad farewells;
After our weeping, sweet repose.

After the burden, the blissful meed;
After the flight, the downy nest;
After the furrow, the waking seed;
After the shadowy river—rest!

Ankles.

BY DR. MARY WALKER.

There's magic in a lady's foot,
And well the ladies know it;
And she who has a pretty one
Is pretty sure to show it.
At times you, too, are martyred by
The nicest little ankle,
That shoots an arrow through your eye,
Within your heart to rankle.

But when it trips along the street,
Through wind and mud and vapor,
By sheerest accident you see
How beautiful the taper;
And as she steps upon the walk,
Amid the crowd to mingle,
Two roguish eyes look up and say,
"I wonder if he's single."

The Perils of Sleighing.

BY T. P. MORGAN.

The moon now shines bright,
And its clear mellow light,
Like a flood, falls on country and town,
And the sparkling snow gleams,
Till like silver it seems,
And the stars twinkle merrily down·

Two young lovers glide
In a sleigh side by side.
And the man has his sheltering arm
'Round the maiden's trim waist,
And her lips he does taste,
And he vows he will shield her from harm.

He thinks no one near,
So, into her ear,
He whispers words—you know what kind—
But he quickly grows dumb,
As he hears a "yum! yum!"
From a boy on a sled tied behind.

Are You Tired of Being Sick?—We want to say a word to the men, women and girls who work in stores, offices and factories. There are hundreds of thousands of you in the country. Very few of you are well. You are shut up too much and exercise too little. In this way you get sick. Your blood is bad, your digestion poor, your head often aches, you don't feel like work. Your liver, stomach and kidneys are out of order. Parker's Tonic has cured hundreds of such cases. It is pure, sure and pleasant.

She smote him with the shingle
Till she made him thrill and tingle,
Because he did not mind his baby brother,
But he soon forgot his pain
And went singing down the lane:
"A boy's best friend is his mother."

The Weather.—Lieut. Charles W. McKim, Portland, Ky., states: "For twenty years I suffered with rheumatism. During the bad weather my suffering was terrible. I was about to give up. Some one suggested the application of St. Jacobs Oil. I tried it and its relief was rapid. In half an hour I could stand up. I no longer suffer with the pains."

The Aurora Borealis was very brilliant early Sunday night.

The Loring Farm.

Essex County contains many large and productive farms; perhaps more so, than any other section of the State. Prominent among them all, and well known every where for its great fertility and productiveness, is the farm owned and occupied by our distinguished "Commissioner of Agriculture" Hon. George B. Loring. This farm is located in Salem on "Loring Avenue," formerly known as the "Forest River Road," about half way between Salem and the Swampscott line. It contains about four hundred acres. The farm house, barns and other buildings, are situated upon the easterly side of the highway. The land upon this side of the street is in a higher state of cultivation than the land upon the other side. Mr. Paige superintends operations here. As a farmer, he understands every "rope in the ship." The doctor runs a milk route in connection with the farm, and for that purpose he keeps thirty-six fine looking cows, mostly grades of the Holstein and Ayrshire breeds. Formerly he kept none but pure bred Ayrshires, but of late he has come to the conclusion that the Holstein cross is better adapted to his purposes. The barn in which the cows are kept, is nearly one hundred and fifty feet long and about half as wide. The south side of the driveway is occupied by the cows the entire length, the north side of the flooring is used for various purposes; for stables for the work horses, tieups for the oxen (two yokes) and two bulls, one Jersey and one Holstein. Two Silos are built on this side with a capacity of one hundred and fifty tons. One Silo was opened and they were feeding the ensilage to the cows, it was made of sweet corn, and was eaten readily. Mr. Paige informed me, that it made as good milk as hay or any other feed. Two rations a day were fed to the cows and they were in prime condition. We will now pass to the barn where the boarding horses are kept. They have seventy-five boarders there now, one from Peabody belonging to H. H. Proctor. They were looking clean and nice. An extensive yard is in front of the two barns, where the animals exercise themselves every pleasant day. Their quarters in the barn are warm, roomy and bountifully supplied with good bedding. The men having charge of this department, seem to be quiet and peaceable, doing all they can for the well being and comfort of the horses. Here we saw the Doctor's white breeding mare, twenty-eight years old with a fine June colt by her side. It requires a large amount of fodder to keep all these animals, but the farm is good for it. The barns will not hold all the hay they cut. Several large stacks are left outside until room is made within for it. More than one hundred and fifty tons of hay of all kinds are made, which with the ensilage, grain and roots, gives them a full supply of good wholesome feed, and the animals kept there show it. The larger half of the farm situated upon the westerly side of the street, is used for summer pasturing for the milch cows. A large quantity of manure is made which is drawn out into the fields and put into large piles, as fast as it accumulates in the capacious barn cellars, thus facilitating the farm work in the spring. Mr. Paige uses commercial fertilizers somewhat freely. Last year he used Phosphate, manufactured in Peabody by our genial friend Ames. It made an excellent record and he had never used a fertilizer equal to it. It will be remembered that this farm was formerly known as the "Pitman Farm," being then in the possession of the Pitman family, who were the parents of the Doctor's first wife, through whom it descended to its present owners. Many people will call to mind those splendid apple trees, stretching in one continuous, unbroken line, from the gateway of the farm house to the point where the rail road crosses the Avenue. We look for them now in vain. Where are they now? Alas! All of them—every one—Cremated.

O.

Girls.—Girls are of few days and full of mischief, and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise.

When the fair young girl cheweth her gum with greater haste and stampeth her pretty foot, do thou look out.

She cometh forth in the evening in low neck and short sleeves; but at morning, she lieth in bed while her mother hustleth.

When the sleigh bell tinkleth she standeth at the window and yearneth for a beau, and when he cometh, she doeth up his purse. He wrappeth the buffalo robe about her and huggeth her much and stayeth out beyond his time, and the livery man addeth four good dollars to his bill.

In the evening he hieth himself away to her father's mansion. He goeth in and sitteth by the fire, and ere she leaveth he poppeth the question and she jumpeth at the chance.

When the cock croweth he taketh his departure, and, when he remembereth the smallness of his salary, he kicketh himself and compareth himself to an ass; yea, verily.—Bloomington Through Mail.

DARK DAYS.

fected very much to being hurried. So it was that, in spite of the pressing need for immediate flight, we were still in London.

The dangerous delay made me nervous, excitable and ill-tempered. This state of mind was not without benefit to our cause, as my manner as well as my looks fully convinced my mother that my own health was the sole object of the journey. So, like a good creature, she set to work in thorough earnest to get everything ready for our departure.

To-morrow morning we were to start. I prayed Heaven that it might not be too late; that the next twenty-four hours might pass without what I dreaded taking place. For I knew that by now that ghastly object on the roadside must be lying with the light of day on its pale face!

With an effort I opened the morning's paper, and ran hastily up and down the columns. What cared I for politics, foreign news, or money-market intelligence? Here was the one paragraph which riveted all my attention. The white tomb had given up its secret! Read! To me those words were written in letters of fire!

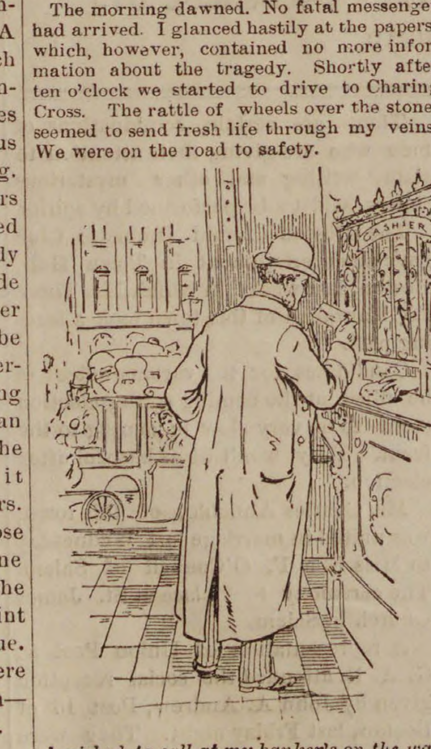
"Horrible Discovery Near Roding.—The melting of the snow has brought to light what to all appearances is a fearful crime. Yesterday afternoon a laborer walking on the highway discovered the body of a gentleman lying by the roadside. His death had been caused by a pistol shot. It is supposed that it must have occurred on the night of the great snow storm, and that the body has lain ever since under the snow, which had drifted to the depth of some feet. The facts that death must have been instantaneous, and that no weapon can be found near the spot, do away with the theory of suicide. Letters and papers found upon the corpse tend to show it to be that of Sir Mervyn Ferrand, Bart. The unfortunate gentleman's friends have been communicated with, and the inquest will be opened tomorrow."

For some minutes I sat like one stunned. Inevitable as it was that the discovery should be made, the shock seemed scarcely lightened by the foreknowledge; the danger seemed no less terrible. Oh, that we had started yesterday—were even to start to-day! What might not happen before to-morrow morning! My first impulse was to go to my mother and beg her to hasten our departure; but reflection showed me how unwise this course would be. I should alarm her—alarm Philippa! I could give no reason. My one longing was to keep the news from my poor love. Let her read that paragraph, and who could answer for the consequences? Looking as a medical man at her case, I knew that there was something about that night which troubled her; some dream, or semblance of dream, to which, fortunately, she could as yet give no coherence. Let her learn that Sir Mervyn Ferrand had ever since that night been lying dead where she met him, the fearful truth must come to her. No! not a word to excite her suspicion. My task was a twofold one. I had to save her not only from what I suppose I must call justice, but also from herself. It seemed to me that the latter was the hardest part of my work; but I would do it—I swore I would do it. I would keep watch and ward, to see that nothing reached her—that she heard nothing which could awaken memories of those mercifully absent hours.

I tore the paper to pieces and burned it. I think of all my dark days that one was the one I would be least willing to pass again. I trembled at every footstep on the stairs. Any man who paused for a moment outside our windows sent a cold chill over me. And in the midst of my misery I had to wear a cheerful face, and talk to Philippa and my mother about the pleasures of our projected journey! Ah! if we only reached the end of it in safety the pleasure would not be altogether imaginary.

Once again I say, if you cannot feel with me, throw my tale aside. Heaven knows it is a sombre one! I was breaking the law; concealing what the law calls a crime; doing all I could to save the criminal. But the criminal was Philippa, and I loved her! I myself would have stood face to face with Sir Mervyn Ferrand, and have freely given my own life if I could have assured his dying like the dog he was. Why then should I blame Philippa, who had done in her temporary madness what I would have done in cold blood? Yet why trouble to extenuate? I loved her! Those words sum up everything.

The morning dawned. No fatal messenger had arrived. I glanced hastily at the papers, which, however, contained no more information about the tragedy. Shortly after ten o'clock we started to drive to Charing Cross. The rattle of wheels over the stones seemed to send fresh life through my veins. We were on the road to safety.



I wished to call at my banker's on the way.

We started in plenty of time, as I wished to call at my banker's on the way. It was my intention to take with me a large sum in gold. Notes of any kind could be traced, but the bright sovereigns would tell no tale. I changed my check, and while doing so asked if there were any letters for me. Several persons addressed letters to me at my banker's. The spruce cashier sent to inquire, and, with my bag of gold, passed under the brass wire railing a letter with a woman's handwriting on the envelope. I thrust it into my pocket, to read at my leisure.

We travelled by the tidal train for Paris, via Folkestone and Boulogne. It was not the pleasantest weather in the world for a journey; but I wrapped my charges up warmly, and did all I could to mitigate the hardships of the voyage, undertaken ostensibly for the sake of my health. My mother, who was by now an experienced and seasoned traveller, settled herself down to the journey, although she little guessed how short the rest I meant to give her until we reached our destination. She laughingly protested against the cruelty of dragging an old woman like herself away from England just as she had returned to it; but there was that in her voice and manner which told me she would for my sake make a far greater sacrifice of comfort than this.

I thought Philippa's spirits, like mine, rose as we left London behind us. She smiled at my sallies and feeble attempts at making merry, which, now that we were fairly on our road to safety, were not quite so forced as they had been during the last few days. She listened with interest to the pictures I drew—imaginary ones, of course—of the beauties of the south; and I was glad to believe that the thought of visiting what might almost be called her native land was beginning to awaken her interest. Only let me be able to show her that life could still promise a plesant future, and the moody memories of the past months might be banished forever.

I am sure that no one who could have seen us that morning would have dreamed that out of that party of three, consisting of a comfortable, pleasant-looking English matron, a strangely beautiful girl, and myself, tho were flying from the hands of justice. Our appearance was certainly such as to disarm all suspicion.

"But where are we going?" asked my mother. "I object to go wandering about without knowing where our pilgrimage is to end."

"We are going to Paris first, then to Spain—to wherever we can find the warmth and sunshine which is necessary to my existence. If we can't find them in Spain, we will cross over to Africa, and, if needful go down to the Equator."

"Then you young people will have to go alone. I draw the line of my good nature at Europe."

I glanced at Philippa. Her long curved lashes hid her eyes, but a telltale blush was on her cheek. I knew that the day was not so very distant when she would answer my appeal as I wished. I knew that, could I but sweep away the record of that one night, all might yet be well with her. Oh, that she may never recall what I alone knew!

As we were nearing Folkestone I remembered the letter which had been given me at the bank. I drew it from my breast, intending to read it; but the sight of the Roding postmark on the outside made me change my intention. I remembered Mrs. Wilson's half promise to send me some communication. I longed and yet I dreaded to break the seal. I felt it would be better for me to read that letter alone. Whatever might be the tenor of its contents, I was sure it had some bearing on Philippa's relations with Sir Mervyn Ferrand.

We were soon on board the steamer and under way. Although the Arctic rigors of the last three weeks had departed, the air on the sea was too keen to make the channel passage an enjoyable one. I persuaded my mother and Philippa to take refuge in the saloon, and then I found a quiet spot where I was able to read my letter without fear of interruption or of betraying myself by the emotion its contents might cause. It was well I did so, for the first words blanched my cheek. The letter began abruptly, so:

"I know or guess all. I know why Sir Mervyn Ferrand did not reach my house that night. I know the reason for her strange excited state. I know why she left my house before you came to seek her. I know how he met with the death he deserved.

"Ah! she is braver than I am. She has done what years ago I swore I would do; and yet I had not the courage. I was base enough to forego revenge for the sake of the beggarly maintenance he offered me—for the sake, perhaps, of my children. I sank low enough to become his tool—to do as he bade me, even to taking under my roof the woman who thought herself his wife. Yes, she has been braver than I. But her wrongs were greater than mine; for I had but myself to blame for being in such a degraded position that he could throw me aside like an old glove. He never married me.

"Fear nothing for your sister, if she be your sister. Tell her my lips are sealed to the death; and for the sake of her brave act tell her this:

"Sir Mervyn Ferrand's first wife died on the 18th of June, 186–, three months before the day on which he married your sister. She died at Liverpool, at No. 5 Silver street. She was buried in the cemetery, under the name of Lucy Ferrand. She has friends alive. It will be easy to prove that she was the woman whom he married. Her maiden name was King. He hated her. They parted. He gave her a sum of money on condition that she never called herself his wife. He lost sight of her; I never did. For years I hoped she would die, and that he would marry me. She died too late for the hope to be realized. I told him of her death; but I changed the date. I would not tell him where she died. Part of his object in coming to Roding that night was to endeavor to wring the information from me. He would never have had it. No other woman should have been his wife so long as I could stop it.

"Now that he is dead, you can tell your brave sister that she may, if she likes, take the name, title, and what wealth she can claim. Fear nothing from me; I will be silent as death."

CHAPTER VIII.

FLIGHT.

I read the woman's letter again and again—read it with feelings in which joy and disgust were strangely mingled; but the former was the predominant sensation. In the first place, if Mrs. Wilson kept her promise of secrecy, it seemed to me that all danger of suspicion falling upon Philippa was removed. There would be no one else to make known the fact that upon the night of Sir Mervyn's death a wronged, distracted woman left her home—a woman whose life's happiness had been clouded by the villain's treacherous act—a woman of strong passions, who in her temporary delirium might easily be turned to take such vengeance for which I, at least, held her quite unaccountable. If I could but feel sure of the silence of the one person whom I dreaded, we might even return to London, and fear nothing. I wavered. After all there is something contemptible in flight. Should I trust to Mrs. Wilson's promise, and return with my companions by the next boat from Boulogne?

No, a thousand times no! Philippa's welfare is far too precious to me to be trusted in the hands of one excitable woman—a woman, moreover, who has wrongs of her own calling for vengeance. To-morrow her mind may change, and instead of furthering our safety she may be urging on the pursuit. Let me trust no one save myself.

For my love's sake, I was overjoyed to hear that, supposing the woman's statement and date were correct, Philippa was the dead man's lawful wife. Not that this fact for one moment palliated the guilt of his intention, or lessened the contempt and hatred I bore towards him; not that it changed in my eyes by one iota my love's position. Married or unmarried, to me she was all that a woman could be. Though a blackguard's craft had wrought what would be her shame in the eyes of the world; though her hands were unconsciously red with a man's blood, to me she was as pure as a vestal, innocent as a child.

Yet for her sake the news gladdened me. I knew that if ever the time should come when I could place proofs in her hands that she was a wife—that she could, if she chose, bear her worthless husband's name, and face the world without fear of scorn, the restoration of her self-respect would bring with it a joy which only a woman can rightly comprehend. And Philippa, with all her pride and passion, was a true woman, full of the softness and delicate dread of shame which characterizes the best of her sex.

Yet when should I be able to tell her? Whenever I did so I must also reveal the fact of her husband's being dead, and my doing so must bring the whole story of his death to her knowledge. I trembled as I thought what this might mean. Surely its dramatic surroundings must suggest something to her mind—must bring back the night and its horrors; must, in fact, tell her what she had done in her madness! Rather than risk this I must let her continue to bear the cruel weight of what she thought her shame. My aim must be to make her believe that Sir Mervyn Ferrand is still alive, and troubling nothing as to what has become of the woman whom he once falsely swore to love and cherish until death. I cursed the wretch's memory as I thought of him.

The sending of Philippa to live under the charge of one of his own discarded mistresses was but another proof of the man's revolting cynicism. Mrs. Wilson's acceptance of the charge showed me to what a level a woman could sink. It told me moreover, that in spite of her letter she was not to be trusted. A woman who could lend herself to her former lover's purposes in such a way as this must have parted with every atom of pride. It seemed to me that the woman and the man were well matched in baseness.

Still her letter lifted a load from my mind. I felt that for awhile there could be no pursuit; yet I resolved to risk nothing, but hurry on with all possible speed. Only when we crossed the frontier of Spain could I sleep in peace.

All researches, with a view to obtaining evidence of the first Lady Ferrand's death, I postponed indefinitely. Some day, if all went well, I would return to England and procure the documents necessary to prove the validity of Philippa's marriage. There was no pressing hurry. As to any money which should be hers, never with my consent should she touch a penny which had belonged to the dead man.

Protracted as my meditations seem on paper, they were in reality much longer; indeed, they were not at an end when the boat steamed into Boulogne harbor. I went in search of my companions, who, I was glad to find, had borne the voyage well. We were soon in the train, and, without any events occurring worth recording, at eight o'clock stood on the Gare du Nord, Paris.

We drove through the brightly lit streets to the Hotel du Louvre. The stains of travel washed away, my mother gave a sigh of satisfaction as she seated herself at the dinner table. Like a sensible woman, she was no despiser of the good things of this life. There were other late diners in the great coffee room, and many a head was turned to look at the beautiful girl who sat on my right hand; for every day which brought her new health and strength brought also to my love an installment of her former beauty. In a very short time she would be to all appearances the Philippa of old.

"How long shall we stay in Paris, Basil?" asked my mother.

"It is now half-past nine; our train starts at 8:45 in the morning. Calculate the time."

"Oh, nonsense! It is years since I have been in Paris. I want to look at the shops. So does Philippa, I am sure."

"My dear mother, the man, much more the woman, who lingers in Paris is lost. If you are going elsewhere the only way is to go straight through, or else you get no further. I have proved this, and mean to run no risk."

"But remember we are only weak women. This poor child is far from strong."

She smiled at Philippa, whose eyes thanked her for the affectionate appellation.

"Don't be merciless, Basil," she continued, "give us at least one day."

"Not one. I am just going to look after a courier, so that you may travel in all possible comfort."

My mother seemed almost annoyed, and again said I was merciless. What would she have said had she known that, unless I had received that letter, instead of going to our present comfortable quarters we should have driven to the Orleans railway, and taken the first train to the south? How little she knew—how little, I trusted, Philippa knew—from what we were flying!

I felt I must give my mother some reason for my haste; so, before going in quest of my courier, I took her aside.

"It is not well for Philippa to stay in Paris," I said. "Some one whom she ought not to meet was here a short time ago."

I blamed myself for the deception; but what could I do? Alas! it seemed to me that my life, which once was fearlessly open to the inspection of all, was now full of little else save deceptions. Should I ever again be my true self?

My mother raised no further objection. I found a courier—a bearded gentleman of commanding presence, who spoke every European language with impartial perfection. I gave him instructions to see to everything next morning; to collect our luggage save the small quantity we carried with us, and to register it through to Burgos. I had no particular reason for choosing Burgos, but it seemed a convenient place at which to take our first thorough rest.

The next day's journey was a dull, dreary, wearisome affair. My companions had not shaken off the fatigue of the previous day, and now that I felt Philippa's safety was, comparatively speaking, assured, a reaction set in with me. No wonder. I shudder now as I think of the strain to which both body and mind had been subjected during the last fortnight. I was moody and listless. The air was full of fog and mist. The so-called express train pounded along after the well known style of French railways. Orleans, Blois, Tours, Poictiers, Angouleme, Coutras and other stations passed me as one in a dream. The dull day crept on until dark evening was upon us, and we were all thoroughly glad when our day's journey ended at Bordeaux.

My mother, who was rather great at guide books, had beguiled part of the journey by a Murray, which somehow made its appearance from her travelling bag. As she knew we were to sleep at Bordeaux she had been laying down the law as to what we were to look at. We were to see the curious high wooden fifteenth century houses of the old town; the cathedral, with its fine towers; the very old churches of St. Croix and St. Seurin, and a variety of other interesting objects. It needed all the assurance I possessed, all the invalid's querulousness and insistence I could assume, to induce her to consent to resume our journey the first thing in the morning. Even Philippa pleaded for delay, and gave me to understand that she thought I was using my mother unfairly. But I was firm. If I could I would have hurried on by the midnight tratn. Any way, now that we were within a few hours' journey of the frontier and of safety, I would leave no more than I could help to chance.

So in the early morning I got my party together, and before it was light led them to the train. I believed that by now my mother looked upon me as rather out of my senses. She frankly owned she could not see the necessity of making a toil out of what might be a pleasure. She little knew that nothing could have made that journey a pleasure to me, that even finding Philippa's eyes now and again fixed on my face with what I almost dared to think was teuder interest—that even the blush which crossed her cheek when I caught those glances—was not sufficient to reward me for my anxiety.

A slow, a painfully slow train. Innumerable stoppages. A country which under the circumstances would have given me no interest even if we had been in summer instead of winter; and then, after nearly five hours' slow travelling Bayonne at last. Bayonne, with its strong fortifications. Bayonne, with the welcome Pyrenees towering Catching the Morning Train.

I find that one of the most serious objections to living out of town lies in the difficulty experienced in catching the early morning train by which I must reach the city and my business. It is by no means a pleasant matter, under any circumstances, to have one's movements regulated by a time-table, and to be obliged to rise to breakfast and to leave home at a certain hour, no matter how strong the temptation to delay may be. But sometimes the horrible punctuality of the train is productive of absolute suffering. For instance: I look at my watch when I get out of bed, and find that I have apparently plenty of time, so I dress leisurely and sit down to the morning meal in a frame of mind which is calm and serene. Just as I crack my first egg I hear the down train from Wilmington. I start in alarm; and taking out my watch I compare it with the clock and find that it is eleven minutes slow, and that I have only five minutes left in which to get to the depot.

Just as I get to the gate I find that I have forgotten my duster and the bundle my wife wanted me to take up to the city to her aunt. Charging back I snatch them up and tear down the gravel-walk in a frenzy. I do not like to run through the village; it is undignified and it attracts attention; but I walk furiously. I go faster and faster as I get away from the main street. When half the distance is accomplished I actually do hear the whistle; there can be no doubt about it this time. I long to run, but I know that if I do I will excite that abominable speckled dog sitting by the sidewalk a little distance ahead of me. Then I really see the train coming around the curve close by the depot, and I feel that I must make better time; and I do. The dog immediately manifests an interest in my movements. He tears after me and is speedily joined by five or six other dogs, which frolic about my legs and bark furiously. Sundry small boys, as I go plunging past, contribute to the excitement by whistling with their fingers, and the men who are at work upon the new meeting house stop to look at me and exchange jocular remarks with each other. I do feel ridiculous, but I must catch that train at all hazards.

I become desperate when I have to slacken my pace until two or three women who are standing upon the sidewalk discussing the infamous price of butter, scatter to let me pass. I arrive within a few yards of the station with my duster flying in the wind, with my coat tails in a horizontal position, and with the speckled dog nipping at my heels, just as the train begins to move. I put on extra pressure, resolving to get the train or perish, and I reach it just as the last car is going by. I seize the hand-rail, I am jerked violently around, but finally, after a desperate effort, I get upon the step with my knees, and am hauled in by the brakeman, hot, dusty, and mad, with my trousers torn across the knees, my legs bruised, and three ribs of my umbrella broken.

Just as I reach a comfortable seat in the car the train stops and then backs up on the siding, where it remains for half an hour while the engineer repairs a dislocated valve. The anger which burns in my bosom as I reflect now upon what is proved to have been the folly of that race, is increased as I look out of the window and observe the speckled dog engaged with his companions in an altercation over a bone. A man who permits his dog to roam about the streets nipping the legs of every one who happens to go at a more rapid gait than a walk, is unfit for association with civilized beings. He ought to be placed on a desert island in mid-ocean, and be compelled to stay there. MAX ADELER.

THE NEW REPORTER.—A new reporter is a queer being, and for a brief period he revels in bliss. The moment he secures a position on a daily paper he thinks that the eyes of the world rest on him alone, and all he has to do is to reach up with one hand and yank himself on the pedestal of fame. In the course of a few months, he realizes that he needs both hands, three or four ladders, and some one to give him a good boost in order to get there. The first thing that a new reporter does when he enters a newspaper office is to give vent to his opinions, and point out to the old reporters how easy the paper can be improved. His surroundings are novel, and in consequence he works like a Trojan. If a corner grocery burns down he pictures a scene in two columns which harrows the souls of men and makes the city editor want to kill him in cold blood. He will speak of the lurid sky, and the roaring flames licking its angry tongue, and all that kind of stuff and when he sees next morning how the city editor cut the whole article down to ten or fifteen lines, he feels sure that the entire staff are jealous of his thrilling style of writing and wish to crush him.

The city editor sends him to report a meeting, but the people there, will not admit him, and the bare idea that they refused to allow him to be present at the meeting is an insult which burrows its way down to the roots of his fluttering soul and he returns to the office towering with rage. He flashes his eyes and pounds the air with both fists like an untamed cavalier, and roars for revenge. He must have it. The press must not be throttled; It can not be as long as he has strength to wield a pen, so he sits down with the hair on his head bulged out like the tail of an angry cat, and commences his fierce attack. He writes up the Barrelmaker's Union as a mere wart upon the body politic. He scolds everybody connected with barrels and their makers. He uproots the local system, pitches into the law, tears up the Constitution, flaps his coat-tails in the face of the President, wipes his boots on the Capitol and points with pride and satisfaction to Benjamin Franklin and the flag. No, the press, the great guardian of the liberties of the people can and will not be suppressed. When pale with indignation, and reeking with perspiration, he presents his article to the city editor, that worthy functionary sees fifteen libel suits in it, and he merely swears around the office until the lights go out, and they have to put more water in the gasmeter.

An old reporter, however, never dreams of acting in such a way. If he is detailed to report the meeting of the Barrelmaker's Union, and they refuse to let him in, he thanks the Barrelmakers from the bottom of his heart. The refusal lets him out of that much work, so he loafs the evening away at the theatre, and looks at the pretty girls in the dress circle, and wonders if there will ever be one for him. The dear, sweet, delightful things.

We recollect when Bilkins first went to work on the Evening Post that he had a craving to plunge right into the middle of literature and make a fortune in two weeks.

One day he carried a poem to the city editor, who was an old journalist with a bald head, three children, a skinny wife, and a disposition so sour it would shrivel a crab apple. The city editor read the poem about a little child gathering flowers by a babbling brook, and then turned to Bilkins and said 'I see you must have mental recreation. You have not been connected more than a week, with the paper, but the strain on you has been so great that it hazed your mind. You need rest. Go up in the country and shoot jay birds for a week, and you will feel better.' Bilkins resigned his position on the paper the next day, and is now in the lard business.—New Orleans Figaro.

A curious case has just been decided in New York. A family having been poisoned by eating some canned tomatoes, suit was brought against the wholesale grocers whose label was on the can. The defense was made that the firm which was sued did not can the goods and had not sold them directly to the persons injured. But the judge held that the firm which had put its label on the cans was liable, although it was not the canner of the tomatoes and did not sell them directly to the plaintiff.

OIL FROM NATURE'S WELLS.—The skin on the head is kept soft and flexible by a secretion from the oil glands. When these are clogged the hair dries and falls off. Parker's Hair Balsam renews their action, restores the original color to the hair and makes it soft and glossy. It also eradicates dandruff. Not greasy, not a dye, deliciously perfumed. Delightful for a lady's toilet table. The best of dressings. Preferable to all similar articles because of its superior cleanliness and purity.

The Soldiers Home.

LAST YEAR'S RECORD—WHY THE CARNIVAL IS TO BE HELD.—Captain John G. B. Adams, president of the Soldiers' Home, says in his annual report: "During the year we have been obliged to turn away many worthy applicants because the home was full. We have not had at any time a vacant bed in the hospital, and the accommodations for our sick are neither adequate nor sufficient for our department. We must have more room and that very soon.

The superintendent's report shows that 119 men were received during the year, and that 109 (of whom 24 were in the hospital) remained in the home at the date of the report, July 25, 1884. The deaths during the year numbered 13.

The treasurer's statement shows receipts during the year of $19,584.05 and expenses of $19,753.69. Of the receipts $15,000 came from the State, $1968.84 from the posts of the Grand Army in this department, $1850.72 from interest and premium on bonds, $443.50 from individual donations, $168.44 from the Woman's Relief Corps and $152.55 from the Sons of Veterans. Comparing the expenditures with those of the previous year, shows a reduction of $18,130.89. The excessive disbursements for the first year, however, were for permanent improvements to the home. While but few improvements have been made during the past year as compared with the year previous, yet in considering the actual running expenses of the home, there are items of expense that should be credited to improvements rather than to the cost of living. These deducted from the total expense for the year will leave $17,111.91, that may properly be classed as the running expenses of the home, and as the average number of inmates during the year has been 105, the average expense for each man per week has been $3.13. It may be interesting to state that at the end of the year all bills were paid and that the home is free from debt.

Captain Adams and Capain George W. Creasey in behalf of the executive committee on the carnival have issued the following appeal:

At no time since the opening of the home in July, 1882, has the apartment used as a hospital been sufficient to accommodate all who needed its care and attention.

The trustees realizing the fact that additional provision must be made for the largely increasing number of sick and disabled comrades, have determined upon holding a grand carnival at the Institute building in Boston, commencing April 7, 1885, and continuing for 10 days. They hope by this method to realize a fund sufficiently large to enable them to improve the hospital and have ample means for its support in the future.

To accomplish this they respectfully and earnestly appeal to all the citizens of our Commonwealth for assistance.

At the carnival, booths representing cities, towns, churches, regiments and Grand Army posts are desirable.

Local organizations throughout the State in conjunction with the Grand Army posts or by direct communication with the secretary, is asked.

Subscriptions, gifts, bequests, are earnestly solicited. A large fund is required for the permanent support of the home.

Will you not do something to aid us in caring for these veterans?

Call to mind, if you will, the promises and the sacred pledges made to the soldier in the past; and let the assurances given him in the hour of our country's greatest peril be redeemed.

It ought to be added that on the first of January the home was full, and 25 applications for admission were on file. Of the men in the home, 24 are in the hospital, filling it to its utmost capacity, while many other inmates require hospital treatment who cannot now obtain it. Dr. J. Morrill Putnam, surgeon of the home, says the present hospital quarters are totally inadequate. They consist of one large hall or ward, occupying the western half of the ground floor of the home. They admit of no classification, therefore the consumptive whose cough is distressing both to himself and to his neighbors, the paralytic with careless and uncleanly habits, the nervous patient who needs quiet above all else, the unfortunate who is offensive either from disease or necessary dressings, all are crowded into one room, and their chances of recovery are thus lessened.

The executive committee of the carnival consists of one hundred ladies and gentlemen from various cities and towns of the State. General A. P. Martin is president; Captain George W. Creasy, secretary; and the Hon. Henry B. Pierce, treasurer. The committee has chosen Col. A. C. Wellington chief marshal.

Can the Little Dealers Compete with us?

HEAR WHAT THE WOONSOCKET RUBBER CO. SAYS:

Office of Woonsocket Rubber Co.,
Boston, Dec. 15, 1884.

WELLMAN OSBORNE, Lynn, Mass.

Dear Sir.—In answer to your request as to the amount of your purchases for this season's trade would state that to this date they foot up sixty-six thousand one hundred and eighty-three dollars and fifty-one cents, ($66,183 51) of which $21,679.50 was purchased during November, and $11,194.74 during the present month. Truly yours,

WOONSOCKET RUBBER CO.

IS IT POSSIBLE that the little dealers, taxed by the profits which they are obliged to pay to the Jobbers from whom they buy their goods, and encumbered by exorbitant rents, (one of them on the principal business street of the city and only doing business enough to employ one clerk, being reputed as paying one of the highest shoe rents in the city) we repeat, is it possible that they can compete with a wholesaler whose wholesale and retail business combined amounts to upwards of three hundred thousand dollars ($300,000) a year, and who buys direct from the rubber companies in the enormous quantities indicated above, and who, with four stores, has to pay rent only on one, the other three being on his own premises? No person of common sense can for a moment believe it. And now for a

LAST SEASON, it will be remembered, after the dedication of the new Town Hall, the experiment was tried of having the remaining lectures of the Peabody Institute Course in that hall. It was found to be a success. More people were present, on an average, than the Institute Hall would seat, and it was thought that the larger hall would be better for a course of free lectures, on account of the limited accommodations furnished by the Institute.

This season the experiment was renewed; and it can be said with truth that the number of people in attendance, except at the readings, could have been easily accommodated within the walls of the Institute Hall. Considerable comment has been made in various quarters on the course given this year, and it is evident that it has not been, on the whole, a success. It may be that the change of hall has changed in a measure the audiences; that persons have attended this year who have not been in the habit of attending these courses from year to year; and that, anticipating lectures more popular in their character, they have been disappointed.

It must be remembered, at the outset, that these lectures are free. They are given to the people by a fund established by Mr. Peabody, and are arranged by a Committee appointed by the Trustees, according to their best judgment. It is not a new statement of a very old fact, that those people who receive any benefit without charge are invariably the worst fault finders. From the year when the first course of lectures was delivered there have been people who have not been satisfied with what they got free. People like to be humbugged and pay for it; and in most of these cases if they had been induced to pay roundly for what they received they would not find half the fault they are inclined at present to do. It should also be borne in mind that attendance on these lectures is not compulsory. The course is mapped out by the Committee and our citizens advised of its nature. If it does not please this or that person he can stay away, and he will neither disturb the Committee, the course, or the people who are pleased with it, by such action.

But it will be said that the Committee are but servants of the citizens of the Town; that the gift of Mr. Peabody is to all its citizens, and that the course of lectures should be arranged to give the greatest good to the greatest number. This is true. But the Committee are met at this juncture with two facts; first, that the Lyceum, as such, has greatly deteriorated in its interest the last few years; and secondly, for this very reason, there is a lack of good lecturers from whom to select. People are not so much interested in the Lyceum lectures as they were ten and twenty years ago; the information to be derived therefrom is obtained elsewhere, in an easier and often more agreeable manner. So that to-day, it takes a speaker of unusual ability, and an unusually interesting subject, to hold the place which a man of less ability could easily have held years ago.

This is shown in the illustrated lectures now in vogue. Nearly every lecturer must have either dissolving views or some illustrated matter, to keep the attention of his audience. Again, too much attention is given, both by the Lyceum Committees and lecturers, to the so called Bureaus. These institutions are organized to make money. They get a handsome commission on every date they make for the lecturer, and when they get an opportunity to make up full courses, which is often the case, they do not hesitate to palm off a goodly quantity of poor material at a very high price.

We believe the remedy which is before the Lyceum committees of our town is a more liberal interpretation of the scope of Mr. Peabody's gift. For some reason it has been deemed necessary that the courses should contain, of late, more or less scientific lectures. That a course arranged, as in other towns and cities, to meet the popular will and approbation, would be inconsistent with the wishes of the Founder. That the lectures should be more instructive than entertaining, and in many cases, we fear, it has been held that they must be instructive at the expense of being entertaining. There can be no objection to this view. Nor is there any reason why an entirely opposite view, if so taken by the Committee, should be out of harmony with the design of the Institution. The plan for the Lyceum, in Mr. Peabody's own words, is left entirely at the discretion of the Committee. The lectures are to be "upon such subjects as may be designated by a committee of the Town." Because some committees have considered that everything should be discarded in any way tending to popularize these courses of lectures, it by no means follows that their judgment in the matter is infallible. We believe nearly every Committee have considered themselves justified in employing a reader to fill one night in the course; in one course Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Davenport, and in another Wyzeman Marshall and Lucette Webster contributed dramatic readings(what a shock this must have been.) In two instances Gilmore's Band appeared. Now this spirit which allows of a little variation from the strict lecture should be and ought to be broadened and liberalized. In addition to a reading there should be an occasional concert—and in the same course. Even if it should take in more than one concert and more than one reader in a course, the change will be so agreeable, if it is sudden, that we shall be able to stand it. This year we had two readings. For the amount paid Prof. Churchill a first class concert could have been given, and we should still have had the readings of Edward K. Hood, which, although costing the Committee but a small fraction of the amount paid Churchill, gave better satisfaction and were much more enjoyable.

The advice given by the Chairman of one of the Lecture Committees some ten years ago, at a time, too, when the amount apportioned for the Lyceum was limited, as it is now, is very appropriate at this time. He advises his successors to consider more the quality than the quantity of lectures; believing that the public will be better satisfied with a less number of good ones than a greater number of ordinary material. The advice is as good as it is old. Some of the ablest and best men in the country have been heard on our Institute platform, and some of them many times. There was Rev. Dr. Gannett, the beloved pastor of the Arlington street church in Boston, who was killed in the Revere accident; Rev. Theodore Parker, who filled Music Hall every Sunday with delighted listeners; Ralph Waldo Emerson, who, although not an eloquent speaker, was the peer of any in the purity of his diction, Rev. Dr. Miner; the leading Universalist preacher of the country; Rev. T. Starr King, the well known Unitarian preacher who died on the Pacific coast; Oliver Wendell Holmes, poet and contributor to the Atlantic; Rev. A. L. Stone, formerly of the Park St. Church, in Boston, then of San Francisco, a most eloquent speaker; Bishop Clark of Rhode Island, who is still, though venerable in years, one of the most liberal and eloquent preachers in the English church; Wendell Phillips, the silver tongued orator; Geo. William Curtis, the editor of Harper's Weekly; Rev. E. H. Chapin, the great New York preacher; Milburn, the blind preacher; Rev. G. H. Hepworth, of New York; the venerable President Chadbourn; J. G. Holland (Timothy Titcomb); Dr. Geo. W. Briggs, then pastor of the First Unitarian Church in Salem; our own Rev. Dr. Barbour; E. P. Whipple, of Boston; Gen. Cogswell of Salem, Dr. Bolles and Prof. Morse of Salem, and many others. In fact we could extend the list almost indefinitely of lecturers, brilliant and able. With such examples before them we can hardly realize how committees should have the temerity to inflict upon the public such stuff as has been heard of late many times in the courses of latter years. To come down from even the most mediocre of the lecturers we have mentioned, to Prof. J. G. Wood on "Ants in the Torrid Zone," is too great a strain for even the ordinary intellect.

To sum up, we see no objection to putting a Course of lectures and entertainments before the public, such as is done in the Lyceum Courses of other cities and towns, where the patronage of the public is needed for their support. We believe the Committee who does this will deserve the thanks of the entire community.

A PETITION has been sent to the Legislature asking that body to reduce and restrict telephone charges, and a hearing on the matter was given yesterday. We have no doubt of the right of the State to make such restrictions and reduce the charges for service. But as long as the service is in the hands of such a monopoly as exists at present there is little hope of any immediate results.

The telephone service, as at present conducted, is of too great business value to be materially dispensed with. Here and there a telephone is taken out, but the customer often finds that he cannot well dispense with it and puts it back again. Its use in private residences is of course a luxury. It is so looked at, and many such subscribers would employ its service were the charge double what it is to-day. On the other hand there are many business men and merchants who cannot afford to pay the present rates, but who would be glad to use a telephone at a less price, and it would be an advantage to them in many ways.

The question, however, is, can the service be afforded at a less price? We think it can. And the strongest argument for this position is found in the high price of the stock and the large dividends paid on it. But independent of this, if it can be shown that more telephones would be used, if the rate were reduced, it would seem to be only a matter of business that the Corporation, of its own free will, should reduce its charges. But what giant monopoly fairly embedded in the State, thinks of the public in comparison with the fat dividends it pays the stockholders, and the fat salaries it pays its officials? It may therefore be proper for the State to come to the rescue of the public, and we hope it will be done. The charges for telephone service are too high for many of our business men. They are too high for ordinary service. Possibly they may not be so for luxury. But the chief advantage from the telephone is to the business man, and if the service can be utilized so as to be a benefit to a large proportion of them, it will be a good far in excess of any result yet accomplished. We are entirely in sympathy with the petitioners to the Legislature.

THE ARTICLE by Rev. Henry Ward Beecher in the North American Review for February, will fail to change the opinions of any one, we think, with reference to the part clergymen should take in politics. There is no doubt that Beecher himself will continue to preach politics or anything else in his own pulpit. He has always done so. His is a peculiar congregation. Without Beecher it probably would not exist. Like the large congregation that used to gather in Music Hall to hear Theodore Parker, it was the preacher himself whom the people came to hear.

There will always be a difference of opinion as to how far clergymen should meddle in politics. And it depends in many cases, upon different pastors and different congregations. The English Church has always discountenanced the preaching of politics, in any form, in their churches. And it will be found that there are fewer dissensions, and greater harmony of feeling between the clergy of this church and their people, than in any other. Congregation. and churches are made up of people of varying opinions on political matters. To take an active part in politics, either in the pulpit or out, must, it would seem, weaken the power of the clergy in the higher instruction they are called to give. We know of an instance, in a small town, where a clergyman, a Republican in the last campaign, not only refused to illuminate when the democrats had a jubilee and procession in honor of Cleveland's election, but darkened his entire house while the procession went by. And this too, when a large part of his support came from democrats. This is not the spirit which should be manifested by any one towards the opposing party, who are still our friends and neighbors, if of differing political faith. And when exemplified in so strong a degree by one to whom the people are supposed to look for example and counsel, does any one doubt that his power in the latter direction would be weakened?

The name of B. P. Clark & Co., of Cambridge, has become very familiar to our readers. The fine team of the firm is seen almost daily on our streets, and their stock of confectionery and cigars is of the finest to be had. They have a large manufactory, making nearly every grade of cigar from the ordinary to the finest Havanna, and their trade is from the best retailers in their goods not only in the vicinity of Boston, but in the entire State and Country. George Stevens is the agent here for the goods of this firm, and the large and increasing demand for the cigars of Clark, show that there is merit in the goods. In fact Stevens can't sell the goods of any other maker. This speaks well for Clark.

This is an "open and shut" winter!

SKATING RINK NOTES.

An unusually large number, probably 1000 people, were present at the rink last evening to witness the Peabody—Gloucester game of polo, including among them a large number of the friends of the Gloucester team. Referee Andrew Jackson, of Lynn, made his appearance about 9.20 o'clock and was greeted with applause, after asking the audience to be as quiet as possible. This was the first appearance of the Gloucester team at our rink. They were all large, powerfully built fellows, and the experience of the night before had taught our boys there was lots of hard work for them to do, and they played splendidly all through the game. At the signal for the rush the clubs were in position as follows:

Gloucester Goal.
Smith, McKay,
Watson, Perry, Viator, Doe.
Felton. Waterhouse, Sullivan, Morrill, Phalen, Goulding, Peabody Goal.

The Gloucesters secured the rush and the play commenced in earnest, but the ball was soon captured by the Peabodys and kept near the Gloucesters goal, but no opportunity was given to cage it, and a foul was called on the Gloucesters, after resuming the play the ball was raised by the visiting club, and as it fell near the Peabodys goal it was kept out by a fine play by Morrill, then a tussle followed behind the Peabodys goal, the Gloucesters getting rather the best of the struggle and the sphere after again passing to the center of the rink, was driven into the Peabodys goal. Time 3 m. 12s. The second goal was one of the most exciting ever played in the rink, the Gloucesters secured the rush and the ball was raised and went over the rail. Play was resumed with the ball dangerously near the Peabodys goal, and a better fight followed to prevent a goal being made. The ball was finally driven in a straight line for the Gloucesters goal when a fine stop was made by their goal tender. After a short time of decidedly interesting playing the ball was taken by Felton and run through the Gloucesters and nearly the whole length of the rink, but was lost to the Gloucesters, they taking it near their goal. The Peabodys soon "caught on" to the Gloucesters trick of raising the ball, and some handsome shots were made. Morrill was kept busy a deal of the time and made three successive stops, and the playing was mostly near the Peabodys goal. As both clubs raised the ball, it was kept constantly on the move between them, and an occasional foul or broken skate gave the players a breathing spell. After one of these, the ball was placed in the rear of the home team's goal, and as it came round the corner it was pushed in at the side of the Peabodys cage. Time 7 minutes and 40 seconds. Felton for the Peabodys got the rush in the third goal amid great applause, but the Gloucesters soon had it and the game progressed with varying fortunes for both sides, Morrill making several fine stops, and again picking the ball off the top of the cage with his hocky and passing it along to Goulding, who made a straight drive at the Gloucesters goal, but it was stopped before it reached there and driven back. After a play of 5 minutes and 4 seconds, the Gloucesters had caged the ball for the third time, making it three straight for the visiting team.

"Billy" Murray of the Peabody team has decided not to play polo any more this season, owing to an accident he recently met with. The management are fortunate in securing the services os Mr. Waterhouse of Boston, who played with the Peabody team in the Brockton game for the first day.

At a meeting of the Mass. League, F. S. Atwood was given permission to resign as referee. He was incompetent and never should have been appointed.

The medals offered by the Massachusetts Polo League have been on exhibition at the rink. There are three in sets of six each. The first gold with diamond setting, the second gold and the third silver. They are beautiful and cost over $700. We trust the first set are destined to remain with our club.

It is said that the pool rooms in Boston have been doing a thriving business this winter in selling pools on the polo games, and that book making on polo, like all other sports is greatly on the increase. It is too bad that no kind of sport, either base ball, boating, foot ball, cricket or polo, can take place without the pool sellers are on the watch for results and make books on nearly every game, no matter how unimportant it may be.—Waltham Record.

Mr. John F. Driscoll secured the second prize at the Salem skating carnival last Thursday evening.

The Mass. League have adopted a rule which provides that no player shall be allowed to play with any other club in the League within 30 days.

The carnival given at the rink last Thursday evening for the benefit of the Salem Band was fairly attended. The first of the evening was devoted to selections by the Band, followed by skating till 9.30, when a game of polo was played between the Peabody and Danvers teams. This resulted in the Peabodys securing five straight and at the request of the audience two more goals were played, resulting in one each for Peabodys and Danvers. E. W. Nichols of Salem was referee. After the game dancing engaged the attention of the young folks till 12 o'clock.

Mr. Samuel W. King strained the ligaments of his right leg recently while playing polo.

The Peabody and Brockton game at Brockton last Wednesday night, resulted in the defeat of the Peabodys three to one, by the rank decisions of F. S. Atwood the referee. The goals were awarded as follows: First to Brocktons in 13 minutes, 20 seconds. Second to Peabodys in 14 minutes. Third to Brocktons in 9 minutes. Fourth to Brocktons, 25 minutes, 20 seconds. The actual time of game 1 hour, 1 minute and 48 seconds.

Manager McCully gave the audience, who were inclined to hiss the Gloucesters, some fatherly advice last night and after that no better order could be desired than was maintained. That is what is wanted every time to make such exhibitions desirable the public.

A car load from Lynn came over to see the polo game last night.

What is in a name? Andrew Jackson refereed the polo game last night.

We have much to be thankful for yet. Hallett or Atwood did not referee the game and give it away. The boys lost it honestly by being outplayed by a superior team.

To-night the Tauntons meet the Salems at the latter's rink, and no doubt but what there will be a large party go from here as they are one of the strongest teams in the New England League.

The Peabody polo team with a large party of their friends went to Gloucester last Monday night and played a game with the Gloucesters of that city, resulting in three straight for the Gloucesters. Time six minutes and ten seconds, five minutes, and the last in twenty seconds.

Lovers of polo will want to see the game of polo at the rink to-morrow evening for a set of gold medals between Sullivan, Morrill and Felton of the Peabodys, and Reed, Hill and Staniford of the Salems, at the Peabody rink. The club securing the largest number of goals in forty-five minutes' play to be declared the winner.

There was a delay at the rink last night while the referee removed from the rolls of the Gloucester Club skates what had the appearance of a rubber coating, but they claimed it was dirt.

THE DEATH of Dr. Damrosch, of New York City, is a great loss to the musical people of that city, and to the musical world everywhere. He has been to New York what Carl Zerrahn or T. W. Higginson is to Boston, or perhaps it may be said that both of them have been. For Dr. Damrosch is not only a conductor of great reputation, but he has organized many enterprises and carried them to a successful accomplishment. The last of these has been the German Opera. In the face of opposition, and of failure in the same Opera House last season, he went to Germany, engaged the troupe which has just been playing in New York, and has been not only successful there but had arranged a season with the same company in Chicago and Boston. For each of these two last cities the advance sale has already been enormous guaranteeing a success from the outset. His son is already a successful musician, and to him will fall the labor of carrying out his father's plans.

It is singular how nervous a man will become if you owe him and can't pay him. You will meet him everywhere. He is awfully plenty. He rises up before you in the most unexpected places. You even go on a back street and he is there. But when he owes you and can't pay it, he becomes scarce. He is not at home, at his place of business, or anywhere; where he was plenty before, he becomes very few indeed.

PETITION AND ORDER.

To the Honorable the Board of Selectmen of the Town of Peabody.

The undersigned, the Directors of the Eastern Railroad Company, a corporation duly established under the laws of this Commonwealth, respectfully represent that he Board of Railroad Commissioners have issued to said corporation a certificate that public necessity requires the construction of a branch or extension of its track one-fifth of a mile in length, or thereabouts, from a point southeasterly of Peabody Station, on that part of its road known as the Lawrence Branch, in a northeasterly direction across lands of different persons, across Walnut street and longitudinally through Upton street to land of Thomas E. Proctor; and the petitioners further represent that they have prepared a map of the proposed route on an appropriate scale with a profile thereof on a vertical scale of ten to one as compared with a horizontal scale, and have procured the report of a skilful engineer based upon actual examination and survey showing the kind and amount of filling and bridging required, the highways to be crossed and the manner of crossing the same, and a general profile of the surface of the land over which the road will pass, the feasibility of the route and the manner of constructing the road, together with a detailed estimate of the cost of construction which said map and report are presented herewith, and the petitioners ask that after due notice, your Honorable Board will fix the route of said proposed branch and will make a certificate setting forth the route so fixed.

HOME HAPPENINGS.

The annual report of the trustees of the Peabody fund in London was issued Monday. The report shows the totality of funds to be in Federal currency, $4,086,595. The fund owes building loans, 1,706.666. During the year the trustees opened 11 blocks of buildings in Pear Tree Court, Clerkenwell, containing 514 rooms, all occupied; eight blocks at Little Coram street, containing 450 rooms now being let; five blocks at Islington will be opened before midsummer, and five blocks to be erected at Westminister will be ready for occupation at the end of the present year. Up to the end of last year the trustees had provided for the artisan and laboring poor of London 10,144 rooms, besides bathrooms, laundries and wash-houses, occupied by 18,453 persons. The average weekly earnings of the head of each family was $5.91; the average rent of each dwelling was $1.17 per week and of each room 28 cents. The rent in all cases includes the free use of water, launderies, sculleries and bath rooms.

The McGibeny family gave one of their incomparable concerts at town hall, last Wednesday evening under the auspices of Union Post 50 G. A. R. The attendance was very small. The family band was an inspiring selectio n, and the youngest of the fourteen children showed himself to be fully equal to his part. Mr. McGibney the father of this musical family, said that he was asked by one of his audience, "Are these really all your own children?" He answered, " No these are not all my children, for there is a still younger one at home." It is a remarkable family and all who were not present missed a treat.

A. E. Wells, of the Bowditch grammar school, has the sympathy of his many friends in the death of his father, Mr. George Wells, a respected citizen of West Dedham, who was killed last Saturday evening while walking on the track of the New York & New England railroad at Hyde Park. His forehead was crushed in, and both arms and one leg broken. He leaves a widow at West Dedham, and one daughter in Hyde Park, wife of Edmund Gay, a conductor on the New York & New England railroad. Mr. Wells being an only son. His age was65 years.

A new disease has broken out among children which seems to be epidemic. The muscles in the neck are badly swollen, sometimes extending around to the jaw, where a bunch makes its appearance, the face is flushed and in some cases it is accompanied with headache and vomiting. The two children of Mr. Frank C. Ferguson have been afflicted with it, and other cases are being heard from. The Doctors don't know how to treat it. It is supposed to be caused by the sudden changes in the weather.

Letters advertised at the Peabody Post Office Feb. 18, 1885.—Maria and Patrick Boyle, John Dalton, J. D. Dennis, Mrs. Ann Flynn,(2), Mrs. Annie E. Ferren, James S. Grant, Wm. L. Kimball, Edmund Kelley, J. F. McCarthy, Chas. H. Milner, Geo. O. Morse, Katie Murphy, Jas. Mulcahy, Jas. Mulvany, Patrick Murphy, Amos Pinkham, John J. Shea, Samuel Stone, D. J. Townes, A. F. Upton, Mary J. Waters, Theo. Zschetzsche & Son, Jean Baptiste Zodoin.

Notwithstanding the severe storm, a company numbering at least 300 couples were present at the grand coffee party at Upton's Hall last Monday night, given by the C. T. A. Society. The Salem Band opened the exercises and this was followed by an elaborate programme, including singing by a quartette, piano solo, cornet solo, etc. Nearly every piece was encored. The society will net about $118, and it will be remembered by those who participated as a pleasant occasion.

Remember the lecture of Mr. George H. Patch at the Institute to-morrow evening for the benefit of Post 50 G. A. R. Mr. Patch will lecture on the battle of Antietam and give a personal reminiscence of his own capture and confinement at Libby prison. After the lecture a few invited guests will enjoy a baked bean supper at G. A. R. Hall. All go.

Mrs. Jefferson Putnam celebrated her 76th birthday last Thursday, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. N. M. Quint. Her children, grand children, and great grand children were present. She was kindly remembered with presents by the different members of the family. May she live to enjoy many returns.

The delivery team belonging to Dodge the fish man was going through Shillaber street, last Thursday, when the horse became frightened and ran away, colliding with a grocery pung belonging to Mr. Edward Wilcox. Both pungs were smashed up and both horses ran away but were captured.

There were two interesting liquor cases before the police court Monday morning. Mrs. Ellen Hayes was the first tried and she was defended by W. D. Northend. After the testimony given by the officers, Mrs. Hayes was put on the stand and said she had no control of that part of the house where the liquor was found, and had not been in there for a year, she had a kitchen and two smaller rooms and four rooms in the front of the house. Two families live up stairs, and a Mrs. Marrs also had a part; she didn't know what the lower part of the house was used for, she employed Mr. Calnan, paying him $12 a week for taking care of four horses and collecting the rents; she didn't use the horses herself or know what they were kept for, her husband kept them so she did; there was a Mr. Bresnehan, she didn't know what he did there and she didn't pay him and didn't know who paid him. Judge Merrill said there was some doubt in his mind, as to the guilt of Mrs. Hayes until she was put on the stand; but he was convinced that she had full control of the property and he should fine her $100 and costs.

The other case was that of James Corbett; at his place the officers found beer in a pitcher, and whiskey in a tumbler, the contents of which had been emptied into the sink, and the pitcher was broken in the hands of officer Peasley. Mrs. M. O. Stevens was called and said she lived next to Corbett, and had known him for five or six years, she had seen people going and coming from there in an intoxicated condition. Three different people had waked her up and she had listened to their story. Here counsel for the defendent objected to the evidence as the witness was not awake and didn't see them come out of Corbett's. She continued to say she had seen men come out intoxicated during the past two months, she knew they were intoxicated that was enough. The counsel for defense thought it had been slippery weather of late and he wanted evidence to show that men went in there sober and came out drunk. Mrs. Stevens said she had seen barrels and jugs brought there full and carried away empty, this morning the defendant carried away empty barrels; she saw a constable go in to get a drink last Sunday, saw a neighbor go away from there with a pail under his coat last Sunday. The counsel for the defense made an able argument and asked for the discharge, but Judge Merrill thought $100 and costs about the proper figure.

The following is from the Sacramento(Cal.) Record-Union:—Thomas Henry McDonald was born in Peabody, Mass. Is 32 years of age, and unmarried. He came to California in 1867. He has a good common school education. At an early age he was apprenticed to a printer. Has served in every position, from the devil to the editor, and is considered one of the best in the craft on the coast. As an evidence of his proficiency, it can be said of him that he has been engaged in various capacities in the State Printing Office under several administrations. So much so is this the case that he is regarded among our people as a Sacramento boy; and although elected by the Democrats of the Forty-sixth Assembly District, a portion of San Francisco, it is expected he will stand shoulder to shoulder with the Sacramento delegation on every issue when her interests are at stake. Mr. McDonald served in the last session; is a whole-souled, genial gentleman, a close observer, a good debater, and one who never is found absent when any measure affecting the interest of his constituency is before the House. He is one of the two Democrats in the Assembly from San Francisco.

Last Wednesday the police made a very successful raid at the Washington House, kept by the wife of "Billy" Hayes. They captured two barrels of beer and 20 feet of lead pipe. The officers found the beer in an upper room of the house with the pipe running between the partitions to the room adjoining the bar room. A loose board was arranged to take out and in the rear of this was a beer faucet and a place to set a pail under it. This arrangement was probably planned by Billy before he left for parts unknown. A fire was kept in the room with the beer.

Post 50 G. A. R. having decided to discontinue the fairs they have held on previous years will bring to Peabody Institute, to-morrow evening, Mr. Geo. Patch, who will lecture on the Battle of Antietam. He will present the subject in an interesting manner as he has done in numerous places. Music will be in attendance. Don't fail to go. Doors open at 7 o'clock. Commence at 7.45.

One day last week Dennis McCarthy employed at Proctor's shop was loading leather on the elevator in the fourth story, when the gearing slipped, dropping the elevator to the cellar. McCarty was carried down with it and received a fracture of the right ankle and other bruises. It was a narrow escape from instant death.

MUSICAL NOTES.

One week from to-night the Cantata of " The Heroes of '76" is to be brought out in the Town Hall for the benefit of the Ladies' Benevolent Society. The Cantata is not merely to be sung but acted, and the performers will be dressed in the appropriate costumes of the days of a hundred years ago. Much interest is evinced in its production, inasmuch as the chorus and soloists are nearly all our own singers. Two and three rehearsals a week have been held under the leadership of W. P. Clark, Esq., and the work is well in hand. With the attention to details which the closing rehearsals will give, we predict a very satisfactory and pleasing performance. The tickets are selling well in advance by the members of the Benevolent Society, and we are extremely glad of this, because the Society are in need of funds. The plan of the hall is to be seen and tickets are now on sale at Spauldings, and the production alone, aside from its charitable object, is worthy of a good house. The cast of characters in the Cantata will be as follows:—

Farmer of Auburn, a rural town in New England,	Mr. Frank W. Taggard
Roger, Captain of Minute Men,	Mr. Warren Wilson Jr.
Allan, Captain's Son,	Mr. Walter C. Merrill
Messenger,	Mr. Edward W. Merrill
Soldier,	Mr. C. W. Foote
Anna, a village maiden, betrothed to Roger,	Mrs. J. P. Fernald
Ruth, Farmer's daughter,	Miss Clemens
Farmer's Wife,	Mrs. F. C. Ferguson

The pupils of W. J. Lefavour gave a very satisfactory pupil's concert last Thursday evening in Kinsman Hall, Salem.

This evening the closing concert of the Y. M. C. A. will be given at which Mrs. E. R. Bigelow will sing, Mr. F. C. Record will play violin solos, and G. A. Shepard will accompany.

To-morrow is a red letter day for the Salem Cadet Band. They are to accompany the Ancient and Honorables of Boston, to Washington, who are assigned the right of the procession. That they will fully justify the reputation they have already earned, is a settled fact. That reputation is steadily growing better and better. At the promenade concert at the Salem Skating Rink Carnival last week, the pieces rendered by them and the fine manner in which they were performed gained for them great commendation.

Next Sunday at Music Hall, Boston, comes the Handel and Haydn Society. The programme includes selections from " Deborah," " Saul," " Samson" " Solomon," " Joshua," " Belshazzar," " Susanna," " Thedora," " Judas Maccabæus," " Jeptha," " Athaliah," " Hercules," and other compositions. Besides Miss Medora Hensen, engaged in place of Fursch-Madi, the artists will be Miss Emily Winant, contralto: Mr. W. J. Winch, tenor; M. W. Whitney, bass; Mr. Bernard Listemann will conduct the orchestra, Mr. B. J. Lang will be the organist, and Mr. Carl Zerrahn conductor.

The South Boston Catholic Union gave a fine concert last Sunday evenat Wait's Hall under the direction of J. J. Carew, late organist of St. John's Church of this town. Mr. Charles R. Adams, Signor Leandro Campanari and others took part.

The Boston Advertiser is certainly " spleeny" on the Boston Symphony Concerts. Here is what is said of the Philomela Ladies' Quartette who appeared at the last Saturday evening's performance: For the singing of the young ladies we have only praise, the voices being beautiful in quality, admirably balanced, blending exactly, and well governed in point of tune and phrase. But we have only dispraise for the taste which inserted into a symphony programme that which, while admirable in its place was there thoroughly trivial—lowered and be littled by its environment. If this sort of trifling is to be repeated, it only remains to engage the Spanish Students or some distinguised virtuoso on the concertina or harmonica.

A DESERVING PROSPERITY.—We desire to call the attention of our readers to the announcement on the first page made by the Naumkeag Clothing Company, who have inaugurated a midwinter sale, to dispose of a portion of their large stock, to make room on their counters for the invoices of spring goods, soon to be received. When this firm say "bargains," they mean what they say, and purchasers may feel assured that their statement is correct. Without doubt, this establishment, which is a branch of one of the largest wholesale and retail clothing houses in America, can offer better inducements to their patrons, and better values for the money, than others who do not possess the many advantages of this company, which under the efficient and gentlemanly management of Mr. Z. A. Gallup, has established a business and prestige second to none in Salem. They are worthy of the confidence and liberal patronage which their efforts in behalf of the public have so well merited.

The boys want to know why they can't coast on the sidewalks, as well as their fathers drive at a breakneck speed in the street. Ask us something easy.

DEAFNESS,
Discharge from the Ear, Eye Diseases, and Affections of the Blood and Nervous System.

CONSULTATION FREE.

[Dr. Lighthill can be found at his office, 115 Boylston street, Boston, from 8 until 12, daily.)

FROM REV. E. W. WHITNEY,

Formerly Pastor of the Universalist Church, Peabody, Mass.

For several years I have been troubled with Catarrh, which seriously interfered with my public speaking, and which baffled all my attempts to get permanent relief. Experienced surgeons operated upon me, and I was under the care of a Boston physician for two years, but obtained no lasting benefit. I applied various medicines, but failed to get relief. I was lead, by the advice of friends, to consult Dr. Lighthill. My faith was at the lowest ebb, but I am happy to say that after a few mon'hs' treatment no trace of my old trouble appears, and I have every reason to believe that the cure is permanent. I cordially recommend Dr. Lighthill to all who may be afflicted in a similar manner.
E W. WHITNEY,
Peabody, Mass., June 27. 1879.

AN INTERESTING CASE.

A statement of Mr. Clement A. Thorndike, of the firm of L. A. May & Co., 127 Union street, Lynn, Mass.

To the Public:—Having been raised almost like one from the dead by the skillful treatment of Dr. Lighthill, and to benefit similar sufferers, I make this public statement of my case. For years I was troubled with Catarrh in my head, seriously affecting and almost destroying my nasal bone; the discharge was very profuse, requiring constant blowing and hawking for relief; gradually the irritation passed into my throat, producing hoarseness and a hacking cough, and finally it affected my bronchial tubes and lungs, leaving me a victim to consumption. The cough now became distressing and almost constant, and debilitating night sweats made their appearance. I lost flesh and became greatly emaciated. I consulted medical men and used various remedies, but all efforts for relief utterly failed. In that condition, and greatly disheartened and discouraged, I applied to Dr. Lighthill, whose able and thorough examination of my case proved to me that I was in the right hands. Convinced that he fully understood my condition, and, inspired with new hope, I placed myself under his care, and very soon experienced the benefit of his treatment. One after another of the symptoms of Catarrh left me. I gained in strength and weight, my cough and night sweats disappeared, and now I am only too thankful and delighted to be able to call myself well again. Hoping that this statement may give new courage and confidence to such as may suffer as I have,
I remain, respectfully,
CLEMENT A. THORNDIKE.

CATARRH CURED.

FROM REV. E. C. BUTLER,

Beverly, Mass.

I most heartily recommend any one afflicted with that troublesome disease, Catarrh, to Dr. Lighthill. I have full confidence in him. His treatment has had the most gratifying results in my own case, which was severe and of long standing. E. C. BUTLER,
Beverly, Mass., Oct. 29, 1879.

CURE OF DEAFNESS.

FROM RT. REV. T. F. HENDRIKEN,
Bishop of Providence. R. I.

My Dear Dr. Lighthill: Permit me to thank you most heartily for your kindness to the Sisters of our Convent. I had no idea when I consulted you on Sister Demonica's deafness that you could so quickly restore her back to hearing, but she tells me that she hears now better than she did before. For this, and your kind and successful treatment of my own deafness, I thank you. Now I would be glad to have you refer your patients to me. You know I can recommend you as a physician and surgeon, thoroughly accomplished in those departments of medicine in which you practice. I owe you a debt of gratitude, and would be glad to pay it.
Very truly and sincerely yours
Rt. Rev. T. F. HENDRIKEN.

A complete and permanent cure of
ASTHMA.

REPORT FROM MR. C. F. BOYNTON, 31 MILK STREET, BOSTON, ROOM 35.
TO THE PUBLIC.

After having spent large sums of money, and found no relief, I was induced to apply to Dr. Lighthill, at 115 Boylston street, for treatment. having suffered from asthma in the worst form for six years, and I wish to say, for the benefit of others suffering as I did that DR. LIGHTHILL'S TREATMENT HAS MADE ME A WELL MAN, and I now can enjoy life, when before it was a dread to me. This cure was performed on me over a year ago, and I can confidently pronounce it a permanent one. I hope all afflicted with that dreadful disease will avail themselves of Dr. Lighthill's skilful services, for I feel morally sure he can cure them.

Book Notices.

Ballou's Monthly Magazine for March is issued and is fully up to its usual excellent standard. There is a capital illustrated article on Africa, showing the celebrated Victoria Falls—the most wonderful in the world. Then comes Mr. Wm. H. Thomes' story, "Lewey and I; or, Sailor Boys' Wanderings." In the third part of "Lewey and I," the scene of which is laid in San Diego, in the year 1846, during the early stages of the Mexican War, the two adventurers make their escape from the calabozo, and turn the tables on the Mexican, Sanchos, who takes his place in the boys' cell. We understand the author, Mr. Thomes, intends to visit the scenes of his early adventures in California some time in April, and the trip will be of rare interest to him, we should suppose. The other matter in Ballou's is good, and includes stories, poems, amusing matter, etc. Only $1.50 per year, or 15 cents single copy. Address, Thomes & Talbot, 23 Hawley St., Boston, Mass.

Some months ago a party of girl-artists found picturesque sketching-ground among the granite quarries of Cape Ann, Massachusetts, and they made a number of drawings which will appear in the forthcoming March Harper's. Miss Ellen Day Hale, the daughter of Edward Everett Hale, herself well known as a rising artist, was one of the number, but instead of contributing sketches she has written the paper on the granite industry which the pictures illustrate, giving in a chatty way an interesting account of stone-cutting in general and these quarries in particular. One of the most curious facts she brings out is the idiosyncrasy of various cities in the matter of pavements, Philadelphia in particular "insisting upon having especially long and fair stones." The article and its pictures form an interesting example of feminine co-operation.

Washington is fast growing, in the esteem of tourists, to be one of the most beautiful capitals of the world, and the drift of literary and fashionable people toward it, as a winter resort, is giving it a new social importance aside from its political interest. In line with the new development is the growth of a domestic architecture that gives it much of its external character. An interesting paper, giving "A Glimpse of Some Washington Homes," in their exterior and interior architecture, has been prepared for Harper's Magazine by Mr. E. W. Lightner, and will appear in the March issue. Among the homes illustrated will be those of Senator Pendleton, Justice Stanley Matthews, W. L. Payne, and other notables.

We are in receipt from the Excelsior Publishing House, No. 31 Beckman street New York, a copy of Excelsior Recitations and readings, No. 3. Nos. 1 and 2 have met with such a ready sale that the publishers have decided to issue the third number. There are many new selections in this one, and everything is choice and desirable. Prose and poetry, humorous, dramatic and sentimental selections are all represented. For sale by the Peabody News Co.

The Season, the best fashion magazine published in this Country, is on our table early as is the custom. It is full to the brim with the latest novelties; the styles are the newest and best and the colored plates alone are worth double the price of the magazine. Everything interesting to a lady, in the way of needle work, is also to be found in each number. Published by the International News Co., New York, and for sale by all news dealers.

THE RIGHT KIND OF AN ACCIDENT COMPANY.—Seven years ago when the United States Mutual Accident Association of the City of New York was organized it promised an aggressive campaign against extortionate rates for accident insurance, and the rejection of just claims for indemnity and death losses upon technical grounds. It has kept its promise, and by furnishing sound accident insurance at extremely low rates and adjusting its losses on a basis of fairness and justice, has built up a membership of twenty thousand, and carries to-day an insurance of One Hundred Millions of Dollars.

The United States Mutual Accident Association has adjusted and paid honorably and promptly over four thousand claims amounting to nearly half a millions of dollars, at a cost to its members of only-half the rates charged by stock accident companies, and invites all who appreciate honesty, economy and fair dealing to join its ranks. A $5000 policy with $25 weekly indemnity costs members of preferred occupations only $13 a year, which may be paid at one time or by assessments as they are made.

To become a member write for Circular and Application Blank, and when received fill out your application, inclose $5, and forward it to James R. Pitcher, the Secretary, at 320 Broadway, New York, on receipt of which a policy will be promptly mailed to you.

If you never had your name in the newspapers and are dying to see it in print, just go and register at a Boston hotel and then buy next morning's Advertiser.

MAYO'S

Compound Vegetable Anæsthetic.

A safe and pleasant substitute for gas and ether.

Discovered by Dr. N. K. Mayo of Boston, April 1883, subsequently administered by him in nearly two thousand cases, producing perfect slumber, being applicable to the child, the delicate sensitive woman as well as the hardy man. No ill effects have followed its use in any case, it acting rather as a vegetable tonic.

It controls the patient one-fourth longer than gas giving us time to remove from three to twenty teeth. It is with great confidence we have introduced it into our practice, giving very successful results.

This anæsthetic is purely a vegetable compound and can be administered with perfect safety to children and people in delicate health. It has no after effect as is apt to be the case in Nitrous Oxide Gas and Ether.

A THRILLING STORY.

AS TOLD BY A MERCHANT IN TROY, N. Y.—A SURGICAL OPERATION AVOIDED.—HOW A FATHER, WIFE AND DAUGHTER ESCAPED AN AWFUL DOOM.

Of the hundreds of accounts of remarkable cures wrought by DR. KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY, none have appeared so purely astonishing as the following: The persons mentioned are among the most highly respected in the city of Troy, and the story as told by the father will prove interesting to our readers,—ED.

TROY, N. Y.

DR. KENNEDY, RONDOUT, N. Y.:—

Dear Sir: My daughter was afflicted with a severe growth of Fungus. To remove it we had resorted to almost every remedy and consulted the most prominent surgeons and physicians. Dr.—— of Troy, said that a surgical operation would be necessary, but fearing fatal results I hesitated. Some of the physicians claimed that it was caused by one thing and some by another. The Fungus was prominent and disfigured her looks. Having heard of Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE working so thoroughly on the blood I determined to try it, to see if this medicine could do what doctors had failed to do and surgeons had hardly dared to undertake. I can say in truth that the result of this trial was the complete cure of my daughter of this dreadful malady. Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY alone effected it. We used nothing else, for other things had completely failed. My daughter to-day enjoys vigorous health and to Favorite Remedy alone is the credit due. My wife also was very poor in health, due to some liver difficulty with which she had suffered a long time until she became very much reduced in flesh. A trial of Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy has resulted in the complete restoration of her health, which she had not enjoyed for years. She had gained in flesh and strength, and thus secured perfect health, and this is due entirely to DR. KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY. As for myself, being engaged in the grocery and commission business, which makes it necessary for me to test the quality of different articles, like butter, etc., my sense of taste and my stomach were seriously injured. Everything seemed to nauseate me, and fearful of dyspepsia in its most severe form, I tried DR. KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY. The first bottle afforded immediate relief, and from that day to this I can say that Favorite Remedy has restored me to perfect health. These are facts which I claim prove that Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy is the best medicine in the world for those afflicted with the above difficulties. If any one in the city of Troy doubts the truth of these statements let him come to me and I will prove them. I have recommended Favorite Remedy to hundreds and with the same good results. Yours, etc.,

A Letter from the Far West.

NO. VI. THE WEATHER.

Of Montana has become easternized and is no longer true to its old-time reputation. Formerly there was no rain here. A man carrying an umbrella was spotted as a "pilgrim" and a "tenderfoot." But for the last summer it is safe to say that it rained twenty days out of each month. For the first time good crops were produced in some localities without any irrigation, even the beach lands, in some instances, yielded good crops.

The old-timers lay the wet weather to the charge of the railroad which has brought all their troubles into the territory, including pilgrims and nickles. When I came to the territory "two bits," twenty-five cents, were the smallest currency. Even a needle was "two bits". If you objected you were told that it was not the needle but the freight on it that they charged the "two bits" for. Now we have five cent stores and eastern prices for many things, not excepting gas and street cars. The fact is, railroads are bringing to us floods of people and with them low prices. And until "old-timers" get adjusted to the new state of things they cannot get their old profits nor their equivalent.

It matters little whether prices are high or low, other things being equal. Twelve or fifteen years ago flour sold in Helena for $100 a sack. One of the wealthiest men in the territory got rich, it is said, selling pies at six bits a piece —75 cents—with brown paper for the bottom crust. Potatoes were sixty cents and one dollar a pound. One woman sold all she had at the former price after digging out the eyes to plant. Money went not much further then than it goes now, when prices have adjusted themselves to the demands. In those days traders made no account of the fractional part of a dollar. If the change was on your side of the half dollar you kept it, if on the traders' he kept it. When men took a drink (which was the principal business aside from mining in those days) they opened a pocket bag of gold dust and the bar tender took out a pinch as he would take a pinch of snuff —such a quantity being considered worth about two bits, and if he happened to get a nugget worth several dollars, it was so much the more for him and so much less for the other. He was bound to have it all sooner or later.

Yes, railroads are great innovators and civilizers and society has never risen so rapidly in Montana as since the coming of the iron horse. It has brought us Beecher and Ingersoll but it has also brought us Frances Willard and Joseph Cook, and it is possible that it has changed the weather. So much steel running in parallel lines through the country and the settling up of the valleys may have much to do with changing the electrical currents of the atmosphere and superinducing rain.

The climate of Montana averages milder than any Eastern State. Although we have extremes of cold here that sends the mercury suddenly down among the twenties, thirties, forties, and even fifties and sixties, yet the cold weather here is not as uncomfortable as in the East. Cattle stay out all winter and rustle for themselves among the hills.

It seems queer to a pilgrim to see the family horses of the city turned out in the fall to shift for themselves all winter in the mountains. This is the uniform custom here. Horses worth five hundred dollars are turned loose for five months, and not seen until hunted up in the Spring. Each horse has his own brand or mark which is recorded. If any one is found having a horse and cannot show his brand in a bill of sale it is apt to go hard with him. Men are hung quicker for horse stealing than for murder in Montana. Horses are very valuable in Montana, and, as a result, horse thieves have become uncomfortably numerous. But the vigilantes are after them. The cow boys of the muscle hill and judith valleys have organized against the horse thieves and have executed twenty-seven the past summer on their own hook. The above valleys are immense tracts of country large enough to put the state of Massachusetts inside of them and then walk round it. These vast regions abounding with horses and cattle afford peculiar advantages for the thieves, but if a man or a squad of men are found with horses of which they cannot give a satisfactory account they are either hung to the nearest tree, or shot down without the expense of judge, jury or counsel. It is said that the cow boys never make a mistake.

But I was speaking of the weather. The coldest snaps are liable to moderate any hour in a warm current of wind coming over the mountains from the Pacific, and known as a Chinook—pronounced with a sneeze—the term is said to have come from an Indian tribe. It will melt and blow a foot of snow into the air in a few hours time without any freshet. The dry atmosphere of this climate seems to absorb moisture like a sponge. I believe there were less of these "chinooks" than usual last winter, which made it a winter of unusual severity for cattle—not for the cold but for the unusual time the ground was covered with snow. Yet the weather of Montana last winter was much preferable to that of the Atlantic coast. The autumn weather of this country is uniformly fine. The months of December and March—the most disagreeable of the year in the East I have found the pleasantest in the year so far. I took a coach journey of six hundred miles in December, 1883, occupying three weeks time. I journeyed where a few weeks before there had been several feet of snow, blinding blizzards, and intensely cold weather, yet at the time of my journey the weather was as bland and the roads as dry as in May. And on the 21st day of December I saw a man, one hundred and seventy miles north of here, leisurely riding a sulky plough and turning soil as mellow as is found in midsummer. I also saw the same thing twenty miles from here, in the Little Prickley Pear Valley, on the 20th day of last March—something I never saw in the East. Yet this is a country where snow is seen the year round on the mountains, and where a month seldom passes without a light snow-fall in the valleys. A queer country this.

THE DRAMA.

The success of Margaret Mather at the Boston Theatre last week is only a repetition of her previous triumphs there, and of her receptions everywhere she has appeared this season. This is the last week of Miss Mather in Boston. To-night and Saturday afternoon Romeo and Juliet will be seen; to-morrow evening, the Lady of Lyons; Friday evening, the Hunchback; Saturday evening, Leah. Next Tuesday evening she appears in Mechanic Hall, Salem, where her many friends in this vicinity who are unable to see her in Boston will have an opportunity.

"The Private Secretary," which is said to be the funniest play of the day, will be presented at the Park Theatre, Boston, by the Madison Square Theatre Company this week.

The scheme of "The Private Secretary" is that of mistaken and transferred identities. The persons who are regarded each as being the other are a giddy young Londoner and a sedate clerical secretary and tutor, and the fun comes principally from the unfitness of both for the assumed characters. The brisk fellow voluntarily takes the role of the Secretary, partly to gratify his love of deviltry, and partly to gain the favor of a rich old uncle, who holds to the theory that the youth who does not sow wild oats deserves no good harvest. The place of the young man's foolery is the country house of a chum's family, where there are two girls for them to encounter, flirt with, and finally marry, and where various conditions are favorable to an excessive amount of comical misunderstanding and complication.

Mr. W. H. Gillette positively appears in his great creation of "The Private Secretary," aided by a very competent company. Seats can be secured by telephone for any night of the engagement which lasts for two weeks.

Third and last in the series of Gilbert and Sullivan revivals at the Bijou comes this week—"The Pirates of Penzance." The opera, with its melodious score, is always pleasant to hear with a competent company to interpret the beauties which Sir Arthur Sullivan introduced. By special arrangement with D'Oyley Carte, the original orchestration is to be presented at this revival of "The Pirates;" and, though the work is allotted but a week's career, Mr. McCaull will make the production very complete. Miss Mary Beebe, having recovered from the illness which compelled her to relinquish the roles assigned her in "Patience" and "The Sorcerer," will make her re-entrance as Mabel.

Gilbert and Sullivan's fairy opera, "Iolanthe," will be sung at the Boston Museum this week and next, forming the closing attraction of the winter lyric season. It will be the first production of the work on the stage. Miss Marie Jansen is to impersonate Phyllis, and will make a fascinating ward in chancery. Mr. George W. Wilson will have opportunities for character acting as the susceptible Lord Chancellor. Mr. Charles J. Campbell is to essay the role of the fortunate Strephon, who is half a fairy. In his old character of the Earl of Tolloler, Mr. W. H. Fessenden is entirely at home; Miss Helen Dayne is to rise from the depths below the stage as Iolanthe, the ever young. The Fairy Queen's role will be entrusted to Miss Rosa Cooke; while the fairy Celia, Leha and Fleta will be impersonated by Miss Kity Uart, Miss Emma C. Tuttle and Miss Evelyn Shaw. A fine chorus of peers and fairies is to be looked for.

Edwin Booth's return engagement opens next week at the Museum. "The Iron Chest" is to be acted Monday and Tuesday. "A New Way to Pay Old Debts" will be presented Wednes day and Thursday. "The Apostate" on Friday and Saturday, with "Don Cæsar de Bazan," in its complete form and incidental music, at the matinee on Saturday.

"A Midnight Marriage," with Mrs. Thomas Barry and William Redmund, comes to the Museum for two weeks in April.

Barrett next week in "Francesca da Rimini," superbly mounted at the Boston Theatre.

With the retirement of the Union Square Company, and the radical changes to be made in the Madison Square system, it looks as though the only stock organizations in America next season would be at Daly's, Wallack's and the Boston Museum.

Monday morning at ten minutes before 3 o'clock fire was discovered in the large morocco shop of J. E. Arnold on Nichols street, Salem, and before the department could get on the spot the flames had spread over the whole building, which was 153 feet in length and five stories in height, and running through an ell 50 feet long, soon setting fire to the morocco shop of Christopher Carter on Hanson street, a two and a half story building. It next tackled the Nichols currying shop but by this time the firemen had got their lines of hose laid and water on the fire, stopping the progress of the flames at this point. Three dwelling houses situated near the fire were badly scorched, and at one time it was thought that they could not be saved, as the hydrant streams could not be thrown above the first story. Mullen's grocery store was also badly scorched, and a tan shed directly across the street from the Nichols building was on fire, making it almost impossible to pass between the two fires, and the lines of hose already laid through the street smoked and some of them burned. At a little before 3 o'clock the alarm was given in this town and the department turned out, and in response to a call for help, Gen. Sutton steamer was sent down and soon had a powerful stream on the flames, which soon showed that they were under control. The loss was about $40,000 mostly insured. The Nichols factory was to be started up that morning by George A. Hall & Co., of Boston. The damage to the building was about $1500. The three dwelling houses were occupied by Michael Whalen, Michael Nolan and Thomas A. Devine respectively. The evidence all points to the fires being the work of an incendiary, and must have been set in the Arnold building in a number of places. The following is the insurance:

J. E. Arnold was insured for $9500. On building and machinery, $6500, divided as follows: Liverpool, London & Globe, $3250; Northern, $1625; Phœnix, $1625. On stock, $3000 divided as follows: Liverpool, London & Globe, $1000; Orient $2000. The latter insurance was on stock belonging to William P. Clark of Peabody, but insured by Mr. Arnold.

The currying shop on Nichols street, owned by the William F. Nichols estate, and occupied by Geo. A. Hall & Co., was insured as follows through the agency of Henry A. Brown: City of London, $1425; Howard, $1425: Commerce $1000; and through the agency of Charles S. Nichols & Co., the building was insured for $1000 additional.

The stock of Geo. A. Hall & Co., was insured as follows: Liverpool, London & Globe, $1500; Glens Falls $1000; Westchester, $1500 and Howard $500; it is therefore fully covered.

Michael Nolan's dwelling, No. 14 Nichols street, was insured for $1000 in the Union. This building was only slightly damaged.

Michael Whalen's building, 3 Varney street, was insured for $1200 in the Salem Mutual. Building slightly damaged.

Mr. Mullen will lose about $150 on account of flour damaged by water. No insurance.

The Peabody firemen were dismissed at 4 30 o'clock. Had the steamer kept right on to Salem when the alarm was first given, they would have got the first steamer stream on the fire. As it was, they were only a few minutes behind the Salem machines, while the third Salem steamer did not arrive until a short time before the Sutton was ordered to pack up. The water pressure was bad, in some cases water could hardly get out of the nozzle of the hydrant streams. The Peabody steamer threw a fine stream through an inch and a sixteenth nozzle, but could have done better if she could have got more water, but there was another steamer and five or six hose lines on the same chuck, while there were other steamers and hose lines drawing from the same main. The smoke beat down to the ground and the streets were a glare of ice which made it dangerous to move around. R. H. Brown & Co.'s whistle was blown, the watchman thinking the fire was at Clark's Mill. This whistle called parts of the department in that direction, thinking that there was another fire in that neighborhood. The chime whistle on Lord's tannery in Salem screamed for half an hour, and when first heard it was taken by many for Upton's whistle. The Salem Engineers offered the Peabody boys a collation, but they decided not to wait for it as it was so near daylight. Chief Osborne and his assistants handled the fire with great skill and prevented its spread. The Peabody Engineers were present and rendered valuable assistance.

The Hayward Hand Grenade will be exhibited as to its use as an extinguisher of fires, on the Square to-morrow morning at nine o'clock, by its agent, D. E. Poor.

Several of the firemen from this department attended the assembly by Ocean Hose 3 of Danvers last Friday night.

Lynn falls into line with one of the big fires, this one being one in which the loss was $150,000. It was the large four-story wooden building on the corner of Oxford street and Central avenue, and occupied by C. A. Coffin & Co. as a shoe manufactory. Two other buildings adjoining were also burned. Help was sent from Salem consisting of Steamer 2, a hose carriage and fifteen men, who went over the road, making the quick time of 26 minutes from the time of receiving the dispatch, but the fire was under control. The flames were seen in this town quite plainly and were watched by the boys until the fire was under control. It broke out about 20 minutes of 10 last evening. The insurance companies have been great sufferers in this section since the first of last June; first coming the Winslow & Rogers' fire with a loss of nearly $60,000, followed by the Pinder & Winchester blaze of $100,000 loss. Next came the Upton fire with its $125,000. The next large one did not quite reach the others, but still it is included in the heavy losses, this one being the Arnold fire of Monday morning, where the losses are about $40,000 and to cap the climax comes the one in Lynn of $150,000, making a total for the five fires of $475,000, and the Insurance companies are called upon to loose the greater part of this. It is very evident that Peabody is not the only place that the fire losses will run up.

Some of the Salem papers say that the Gen. Sutton steamer was not sent for, but went to the Salem fire of their own free will. This is not so, as a telephone dispatch was sent to the police station requesting that help should be sent immediately, and at about the same time a member of the company, J. W. H. Ferguson, was sent back from the fire by Engineer Hadley of the Salem fire department, to have the engine hurried up. The apparatus is not allowed to go over the line unless they are sent for and it was the same in this case.

Annual ball of the Salem Firemen's Relief Association will be held in Mechanic Hall, Salem, on Thursday evening.

SOUTH PEABODY.

A party of twenty-five ladies and gentlemen called at the house of Mr. Orlando Newhall on Lynnfield Street, last Thursday night. Mr. Newhall was taken by surprise but made the most of it, and asked the company in. The evening was spent in a very pleasant manner by all present. About eleven o'clock the party were invited to the dining room where a bountiful supper was served, and by the way the cream and cake was devoured, it was enjoyed by all present. The party broke up about midnight, all hoping to meet at the same place some future time.

Mr. H. N. Batchelder has been cutting and hauling ice to fill the large refrigerators of J. B. Thomas at his slaughter houses.

The funeral of Mr. C. R. Goodrich took place from his late residence on Lynnfield street last Monday afternoon, Rev. J. W. Colwell officiating. The remains were placed in the tomb at Cedar Grove Cemetery.

Conductor Morgan resigned his position on the L. & B. road last Monday, on account of ill health.

Rev. J. W. Colwell preached to the children last Sunday, taking for his text a a part of the twenty-third Psalm. The discourse was very interesting not only to the children but to the older ones, and was listened to very attentively throughout.

A Sabbath School concert was held in the vestry Sunday evening, after the usual exercises by the children, remarks were made by the Pastor and Superintendent.

Only a small audience attended the lecture at the church, given by Miss Crabtree, last evening. About three dollars were taken at the door.

Mrs. Addie M. (Newhall) Bodwell, died at her mother's residence in Wyoma Saturday after a lingering illness of several months of consumption. The funeral took place Tuesday from her late residence, a large circle of relatives and friends being present. The remains were brought to Peabody and placed in Cedar Grove Cemetery.

Mr. Frank E. Newhall is housing about 200 tons of ice in the house at the rear of his residence on Washington street.

The annual fair of the Ladies' Society will be held at West Peabody Hall, Wednesday evening, Feb. 25. An open sale will be held and an entertainment consisting of recitations and singing will be given, also a dialogue entitled "Leaving Jona."

Owing to the extra work put upon the horses of the B. & L. Railroad this week, the cars leaving Peabody at 10 and 2 o'clock will run only to Wyoma, and the cars leaving Lynn at 11, 1 and 2 will also stop at the stables.

"I took her riding in a sleigh,
And now all peace and quiet shun me,
For to the office every day,
The stable-keeper comes to dun me."

If you are looking for serviceable shoes you will find them at Power's, Main street store.

A "QUEER" STORY.—There is a cheap clothing dealer on Kearney near California, whose confidence in mankind has received a severe set back. The other day an honest looking countryman walked into his store and said:

"You remember that second-hand overcoat I bought here for eight dollars yesterday?"

"Never dakes pack anytings ven vonce solt, my friendt," said the hand-me-downer.

"Oh! that is all right. I just wanted to say that I found this five hundred dollar bill sewed in the lining. Perhaps the owner may call for it."

"Of gorse he vill—he has call alreadty, my tear friendt," exclaimed the dealer eagerly capturing the money. "You ish von honish man. Here I gif you feefty dollar ash a revard. Dot vill pe all right."

When the honest customer got around the corner he murmured softly: "I guess I'd better take this fifty and skip up to Portland, before that sheeny tumbles to that counterfeit. It's getting mighty hard to shove the "queer" round these parts, and that's a fact."—San Francisco Post.

Speaking of Mr. James T. Furber, who is the general manager of a railroad system, valued at more than $50,000,000, the Maine Farmer says: Mr. Furber was born in Great Falls, N. H., 1828. When a boy his parents moved to South Berwick, in this state, and he was educated at the South Berwick academy. In 1854 he entered the service of the Boston & Maine road in its freight department. He served in al the various grades of service in the freight and passenger departments, and was made in January, 1873, after a faithful service of nearly 20 years, the general superintendent of the road. He completed the extension of the road from Berwick to Portland, and run the first train over it. Under his management the stock of this road has gone from below par to the marvellous advance of $167 per share, thus testifying in an unanswerable manner to his fidelity and capacity. Mr. Furber is a broad man who thoroughly understands his business — practical — knowing every part of it, its construction and its management. With a strong and robust physique, with great knowledge of men, with a rare power to select right men for responsible subordinate positions, with an earnest desire to satisfy every just demand of the public, and with a firm purpose to make this great enterprise in every way successful, who can doubt that consolidation, under his guidance, will but redound to the benefit and growth of Maine.

A Republican official of a Western State it is reported, unwittingly made the following bet on the result of the National election: I acknowledge the receipt of $5, for which I agree to give R. J. Watson a grain of coffee for the first electoral vote Cleveland gets over Blaine's vote; two for the second, four for the third and then doubling for each additional electoral vote Cleveland gets a majority over Blaine, the coffee to be of the best green java worth twelve cents a pound." How many grains of coffee were due to Mr. Watson and what was the value thereof computing the coffee at twelve cents a pound, with 2,800 grains to the pound. We want an answer.

The Boston Herald tells this assessment insurance story, saying that the president of the company insolved is a man whose name is supposed to be synonymous with integrity: A man taking out a $10,000 policy, doubting at the time if there were sufficient members in the class to make up a $10,000 benefit in case of his decease, he ventured to inquire how many persons were insured for $10,000. He was told that there were 750, which at the rate of $10 assessment for a benefit, would give his heirs $7500. Some time later on he found out that while he had been regularly paying his $10 assessments there were not 100 persons in the class.

An exchange tells how a girl's taste differs according to her age: "At sixteen she wants a dude with tooth-pick shoes and microscope mustache, or a coachman; at twenty, a chief justice, with piles of tin; at twenty-five she'll be satisfied with a member of Congress, on a salary; at thirty, a country doctor or minister will do; at thirty-five an itinerant tinker; over thirty-five anything that wears pants."

Young men, pause and consider. The cholera will come next year, and statistics show that the death from this cause among single men double those among married men. If these cold nights don't move you perhaps the cholera will. Isn't that the way to put it ladies?

We adopt the following from an exchange: "We would esteem it a favor if our friends having visitors would hand us their names in order that we may give them personal mention. If they are young ladies, and handsome, we would not object to having them bring their visitors in person."

NOTES
ASHTON

The stock of comic valentines is large this year and are represented in the most ridiculous aspect. I have seen several young men and ladies whose vexation and wrath at receiving one was only atoned for by thrusting it into the fire. Now I have received several, among them one that closely resembles the heading of this column. From what he tells me the "office boy" has been having a lot of fun with your employes and assistants, and the more vexed they became the greater was the enjoyment of the "imp." The first to receive one was the Skating Rink reporter, representing a slim man lying on his back on the floor of the rink, with a small pair of skates strapped to his number eleven shoes, which were elevated in the air, while a hole in the seat of the pants gave the impression that he would soon have to start some crazy patchwork. His hands were not raised in Benedict(ion.) The "Sparks" reporter had bitterness added to his cup by receiving a caricature of a fireman, boldly penetrating a low building resembling Wilson's machine shop, on which the streams from several hydrants were being thrown, one of which strikes the bold fireman in the eye, and as he looks for the culprit with the other one, the expression is only equaled by that seen on his face when he finds there is to be no crackers and cheese. One of the young ladies who was in Boston Saturday got her valentine Monday. This was supposed to represent her present appearance and weight after a gain of nineteen pounds, making a total of eighty-two pounds. Or else—but no, she couldn't have gained eighty-two and now weigh nineteen. That would be impossible. "Angie" also got a valentine, but the boy says it came from "Marks" the lawyer, and had a verse on it like this:

"Forgive, forget, were wisely told,
Is held a motto good and old.
But half the motto is better yet;
Then ah! forgive, but don't forget."

Then there was the "hefty" girl. She didn't want it No(y)sed around that she received a Relihan(some) one from the thermometer works. This represented a couple of doves sitting in the corner of a sleigh, with a beautiful transparency between them.

I heard an indignant mother complaining that last Wednesday some of the school rooms could not be heated sufficiently and that some closed, while in others the thermometer registered only fifty-eight or sixty and a session was held. This is certainly not warm enough, and considering the prevalence of diseases I don't think the teacher was justified in exposing the children to a sudden cold which might result in a more serious disease. If the teachers are not allowed to use their own judgment in a case like this, they should be given authority to close the school by the Committee.

I see by your last issue that some five or six of our young men are rejoicing over the arrival of new-comers to the household. Most of the arrivals are of the female persuasion and supposed to have women suffrage proclivities, although this is a Democratic year and some of the other gender may be christened Grover C. I am always happy to give notice of such an event, and always take pleasure in congratulating the parents, and even feel it my duty to extend a hearty welcome to the "little stranger."

I learned that one of our townsmen invented an Opera Glass, so I made enquiry and found it to be a very convenient device. It is in the form of a frustrum of a cone, and the user looks through the small end and uses it principally between the acts of the Opera.

They say that those who were at the police court last Monday morning enjoyed a treat in the way of legal repartee between the counsel for Jas. Corbet, Charles H. Simonds, Esq., and D. N. Crowley, Esq., council for the L. & O. League. That was said to be an able and eloquent argument of the counsel for the defence, filled with brilliant flashes and original comparisons. Beginning with the least interesting matters and gradually working up to a climax. Now the voice was low and pleading for the wrongs of the poor man, and gradually increased till it reached the roll of sheet iron thunder, and in the distance the furious approach of white bean rain, and the whole is finished amid a glare of red fire and a crash of the orchestra. As the vast audience hung to every word of the speaker, the intoxicating flow of eloquence continued, as he pictured the home of the rich, and the nerves of his hearers were wrought up to a terrible strain, still he talked on and on with a pose like the Apollo Belvedere, and on and on again,—till the counsel for the other side said it was ten minutes past eleven. This sad and cruel interruption was like breaking the crank to a hand-organ and the instrument came to a dead stop.

"The editor of the Salem Gazette seems to have an itching to poke his nose into our town affairs, particularly in regard to West Peabody," remarked a business man to me the other day who had attended the hearing at the State house, and then read the Gazette's account of it. "The points made against Mr. Spaulding were very neatly covered in a general way by the writer in the Gazette, and was one of those accounts that was bound to suit both sides and make nothing clear."

I read a very good poem in a recent issue of one of our Salem contemporaies, purporting to have been written for that paper and signed C. E. H. But I am told this should have read: written for C .E. H. and been signed C. E. R.

FOR THE BOYS!

OUR TRADE DEMANDS IT.

A Gigantic Mark Down Clearance Out Sale. Every article must go before we commence to enlarge and remodel our store.

Owing to our increasing trade in Boys' and Children's Clothing, we are again compelled to enlarge this department for the third time since commencing business in Salem. When completed we shall have the Largest, Best Lighted and Most Elegant Salesroom for the sale of Boys' and Children's Clothing east of New York City.

In order to close out at once our entire stock of Men's, Boys' and Children's Winter Clothing, Underflannels, Cardigan Jackets, Leather Jackets, Woolen Shirts, Hosiery, etc., we shall inaugurate a mark-down sale that for quantity, fine quality and low prices will eclipse any bargain or bankrupt sale ever before attempted by any dealer in New England.

REMEMBER this is not a bankrupt sale of old shop worn goods, but are all clean and stylish. Our only reason for offering these great bargains is, that we must close them out and have the room for our Spring Stock, which we are now busily manufacturing. It will pay you to come 100 miles to attend this GREAT BARGAIN SALE.

Country Dealers could make money by purchasing of us now. We shall not quote prices in this advertisement, as it would be impossible to give them all in detail, but a call at our store will convince you that we are underselling our competitors as usual from 25 to 40 per cent.

We have taken all our Men's and Young Men's Extra Fine, Medium, and low grade Winter Overcoats, Ulsters and Suits, and marked them down to extremely low prices in order to close them out at once.

We have reduced the price from $2 to $10 each, according to the quality. Many of these garments are marked less than the actual cost of manufacture. We have also taken several hundred pairs of Men's and Young Men's All Wool Pantaloons, and marked them down from $1 to $2 per pair, according to quality.

We shall close out several hundred Boys' Heavy Winter Overcoats and Suits, ages 12 to 17 years, at prices reduced from $2 to 6 each, according to quality! All our Children's Winter Overcoats and several hundred Children's All Wool Suits, ages 4 to 12 years. We have marked them down from $1 to $4 each, according to quality.

N. B. Buyers of Clotning, remember this is an opportunity seldom offered to secure first class Clothing at about 60 cts on the dollar.

Last Friday a boy named Corbett, caught on a coal team on Union street and fell off, the team passing over his leg. It was thought that the bones were broken, but an examination showed them to be only badly bruised.

Some people are alarmed at the Salvation Army, but so long as it changes swearing men into praying men, and drunken men into sober men, there is no ground of fear from it; and that it does before our eyes.

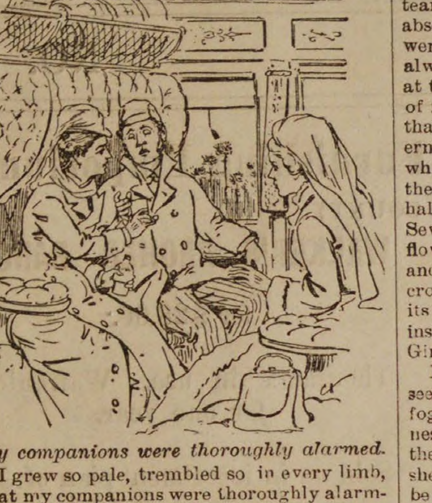
The Knights of Labor in this county are to form a district assembly, in which all the local assemblies will be represented, and by which they will be better acquainted with each other and can reach uniform action.

At a party one evening recently, one of our married young men was congratulated upon the arrival of his first baby. The young man blushed and stammered his thanks to the young lady who was congratulating him, but hoped he would be given a little more time as he was not aware of the arrival. It was rather embarassing for both.

DARK DAYS.

above it. In less than two hours we should be in Spain.

A curious dread seized me—a presentiment so strong that ever since then I have lost faith in presentiments. Something seemed to tell me that all my efforts had been in vain; that at the frontier there would be certain intelligence received which would lead to our arrest; that Philippa, with one foot, as it were, in the land of refuge, would be seized and carried back to face the horrors and the shame of a trial for murder. It was, as events showed, an absurd fancy, and only the increasing tension of my nerves can account for the hold it gained upon me.



My companions were thoroughly alarmed.

I grew so pale, trembled so in every limb, that my companions were thoroughly alarmed. We had brandy with us, which was duly administered to me. After awhile I recovered, and although the fear was still with me, sat with the stoicism of an Indian at the stake, awaiting what might happen at the frontier. I had done all I could. If, at the last moment, disaster overtook us, I had at least striven by every means within my power to avert it.

We have passed Biarritz, the merry bright watering place. We have passed Hendaye, the French frontier station. We leave the towering Pyrenees on our left. We are at Irun, where all baggage must be jealously scrutinized. We are in Spain! Nobody has troubled us. No suspicious-looking stranger has watched us. The stoppage has been long, for the custom house officials are annoyingly particular in the discharge of their duty; but our noble-looking courier has saved us all personal trouble. He had done us yeoman's service. At last we are in another train, a train which runs on a line of another gauge. The very time of day has changed. We have lost or gained—I forget which—some twenty minutes. We now count by Madrid time. We are fairly on Spanish ground, and I have saved my love. Saved her from others—now to save her from herself. Never, never shall she know the secret of that dark night. We will speed away to the south—to the sun, the color, the brightness, the flowers. All shall be forgotten. The dark remembrance shall be swept from my mind. I will call it a dream. I will win Philippa's love—the love that I dare to believe is already almost mine. We will live forever in bright, sunny, glowing lands. Who cares for dull, dark, dismal England? Have we not youth, wealth, and, oh, blessed word! love? Before my love and me lie years and years of sweetness and joy. Shake off black gloom and be merry, Basil North. You have conquered fate!

We have passed St. Sebastian. The sluggish train is wearily winding up the valley of the Urumea. We are in wild and glorious scenery. The railway is carried at a great elevation, from which we get now and again peeps of far-away valleys. Yes. I could now find time to admire the wonderful scenery which lasted until we passed Miranda.

My mood changed with the country. I laughed; I jested. Each of the many stations at which we stopped furnished materials for my new-born merriment. I laughed at the solemn looking Spanish railway officials, and drew pictures of the doleful fate of imaginary noble born hidalgos whom poverty forced to descend to such employment. I grumbled not at the slowness of the train, although an ordinary traveler might well, when on a Spanish line, sigh for the comparatively lightning speed of the much maligned French trains. Time was nothing to me now. Was there not a lifetime stretching before me—and Philippa? My gayety was contagious. My mother laughed until the tears came, and Philippa smiled as I had not seen her smile since we picked up under such sad circumstances that long dropped thread of friendship.

Those who have travelled in Spain will scarcely credit me when I say we had the compartment to ourselves. We were troubled by no cloaked Spaniard who, as is the wont of his kind, insisted upon smoking like a furnace and keeping both windows shut. Our noble courier had been given his instructions. His arguments were venal, and had I troubled about money I should have found them costly. But they carried the point, and no one intruded on our privacy.

The hours went by. My mother slept, or pretended to sleep. I seated myself near Philippa, and whispered words of thinly veiled love. She answered them not—I expected no answer—but her eyes were downcast and her cheek was blushing. She sighed. A sad smile played around her sweet mouth, a smile that spoke of a world of regret. That sigh, that smile, told me that she understood me, but told me also that, ah! it could never be. The past never forgives! But all the same she let her hand rest in mine; and although, considering what had happened, I scarcely dare to say so, for once, for many, many months, I was all but happy.

For me that journey ended only too soon. At night we reached Burgos, the capital of the old Castilian kingdom, and I laid my head on my pillow and enjoyed sleep such as I had not known since the night before that one when Philippa, with the snowflakes falling around her, stood outside the window of my cottage and gave me something to live for—something to hope for!

CHAPTER IX.

SAFE—AND LOVED.

Now that we are safe in Spain; now that Philippa's arrest is a matter of impossibility, and her expulsion from a country so lax in its observance of international obligations highly improbable, when her guilt can at the utmost be only suspected, if indeed suspicion ever points to her, I may pass rapidly over the events of the next two months; the more so as my record of them would differ very little from the description of an ordinary tour in Spain. To me, after the feverish anxiety, the horrible dread as to what any hour might bring forth, which had characterized our flight from England, it seemed something very much like bathos my dropping at once into the position of the everyday tourist taking a couple of ladies on a round of travel; but for the time I was outwardly neither more nor less.

From Burgos we went to Valladolid; from Valladolid to Madrid—Madrid, the high-perched city, with its arid, uninteresting surroundings and abominable climate. Not long did we linger here. Bad and trying as the English winter may be, the cold of Madrid is a poor exchange for it. I had almost thrown aside the assumed character of an invalid; but I felt it would be the height of inconsistency, after forcing my companions to accompany me in search of warmth, to make any stay in the Spanish capital. Right glad I was to leave it, and turn my face southward. Philippa was by now in apparently good health, both bodily and mental; but while at Madrid I trembled for her, as I should tremble for any one I loved who made that city a resting-place—a city swept from end to end by crafty, treacherous, icy winds blowing straight from the Guadarrama mountains; insidious blasts in which lurk the seeds of consumption and death.

So at our leisure we went southward, halting at such places and seeing such sights as we thought fit; lingering here and there just so long as it suited us; travelling by easy stages and in such comfort as we could command. At Malaga we spent weeks, revelling in the balmy, delicious air; at Granada we were days and weeks before we could tear ourselves away from the interesting, absorbing glories of the departed Moor. We were in a new world—a world which I had always longed to see. At last—it was just at the end of April, when the land was full of roses, when vegetation was breaking into that rich luxuriance unknown in the northern lands—we turned our steps to the city which I had in my own mind fixed upon as the end of our wanderings, the half Spanish, half Moorish, but wholly beautiful city of Seville; brilliant, romantic Seville, with its flower-bedecked houses, its groves of orange and olive trees, its luxuriant gardens, its crooked, narrow streets, its Moorish walls, its numerous towers, all of which sink into insignificance under the shadow of the lofty Giralda. All I wanted seemed to be here.

Here was everything for the sake of seeking which I had professed to leave foggy England—sun, warmth, color, brightness. Here I thought, if in any place in the world, will the one I love forget what she knows of the cruel past. Here it may be our new life shall begin.

Glorious, wonderful Seville! The magic charm of the place fell on my companions as it fell upon me, as in led it falls upon all who visit it. By common consent we arranged to stay our course for an indefinite time. Perhaps by now we all thought we had endured enough of hotel life, and wanted some place which might bear the name of home; so, although such things are not very easy to find, I hired a furnished house. Such a house!

From the narrow street—the need of shade makes narrow streets indispensable to Seville—pass through a light openwork iron gate into a spacious white marble lined courtyard, or, as the Spaniards call it, patio; a courtyard open to the sky, save for the gayly colored awning which is sometimes spread over it; a space fragrant to the four corners with the perfume of orange and other sweet smelling blossoms, bright with glowing oleanders, and musical with the murmur of fountains. Around the walls statues, some of the fair works of art, paintings and mirrors Every sitting room in the house opening on to this cool central fairyland—a fairyland which, for many months of the year, is almost the only part of the house used in their waking hours by the Sevillanos. Add to this a garden, not large but exquisite, full of the rarest and choicest blossoms, and if you are not hopelessly bigoted, and enamored of English fogs, you must long for such a home in courtly, beautiful Seville!

With such surroundings—almost those of a Sybarite—who can blame me for being lulled into security, if not forgetfulness, and for telling myself that my troubles were nearly at an end? Who can wonder at the castles I built as hour after hour I lounged in the patio, with its fragrant, soothing atmosphere and gazed at Philippa's beautiful face, and now and again meeting her dark eyes, and sometimes surprising in those thoughtful depths a look which thrilled my heart—a look which I told myself was one of love?

True, that often and often in my sleep I saw the white, dead face, with the snow-heap forming over it. True, that often and often Philippa's wild cry, "The wages of sin—on, on, on!" rang through my dreams, and I awoke trembling in every limb; but in the daytime, in the midst of the sweet shaded repose, I could almost banish every memory, every thought which strove to lead me back to grief and horror.

The days, each one sweeter than its forerunner, passed by. Each day was passed with Philippa. We wandered for hours through the marvellous gardens of the Alcazar; we drove under the shading trees of Las Delicias; we made excursions to Italica and other places, which the guide-book tells you every visitor to Seville should see; but I think we found in the ordinary sights, which were at our very door, as much pleasure as in any of the stock shows. We loved to watch the people. We delighted in the picturesque, ragged-looking, black-eyed Andalusian boy-rascals who played and romped at every street corner. We noticed the exquisitely graceful figures of the Sevillanas; I, moreover, noted that the most graceful of these figures could not be compared to Philippa's own. We strolled up the awning-roofed Calle de las Sierpes, and laughed at the curious windowless little shops. Everything was so strange, so bright, so teeming with old-world tradition, so full of intense interest, that no wonder I could for the time send painful memories to the background.

And Philippa? Although there were times when her face grew sad with sad remembrances; although at times her eyes sought mine with that troubled, inquiring look; although I trembled as to what might be the question which I seemed to see her lips about to form; I did not, could not believe she was entirely unhappy. The smile —a quiet, thoughtful one, yet a smile—was oftener seen on her face. It came now of its own accord. More and more certain I grew that, if nothing recalled the past, or I should say, if nothing filled the blank, so mercifully left, of that one night, the hour was not far distant when my love would call herself happy. Oh, to keep that fatal knowledge from her forever!

Such was my life. So, in calm and peace, all but happiness, the days passed by, until the hour came when for the third time I dared to tell Philippa that I loved her—to tell her so with the certainty of hearing her re-echo my words. Yes, certainty. Had I not for many days seen her eyes grow brighter, the grave, thoughtful look leave her face, her whole manner change when I drew near? Such signs as these told me that the crowning moment of my life was at hand.

Here for one moment I pause. I scorn to excuse myself for wishing to marry a woman who had been, or supposed herself to have been, the innocent victim of a scoundrelly man of the world. I have nothing in common with those who think such an excuse is needed. Mrs. Wilson's statement that the marriage was valid might be true or false. It gave me the impression that it was true, and I believed that Philippa could lay claim to bear the man's accursed name. But whether she was Lady Ferrand, or a trusting woman betrayed, for my own sake I cared little. She was Philippa!

As to my intention of marrying, my one wish to marry a woman who, in her temporary and fully-accounted-for delirium, had killed the man who so cruelly wronged her, I have but this to say. My tale, although I give it to the world, is not written for the purpose of fiction. It is the story of myself—a story which seemed to me worth telling—of a man who loved one woman passionately, blindly, and without consideration. Such was my great love for Philippa that I feel no shame in telling the truth, and saying that had I seen her, in full possession of her senses, level that pistol and shoot her betrayer through his black heart, I should have held that only justice had been done. I should have regretted the act, but nevertheless I would have pleaded for her love as fervently and reverently as I was now about to plead for it.

Once more I say, if you condemn me throw the book aside.

Philippa, with her eyes half closed, was, as was usual at that hour, sitting in the patio. In her hand she held a sprig of orange blossoms, and ever and anon inhaled its delicious perfume; an action, by the by, scarcely needful, as the whole air was redolent of the fragrance thrown from the great tree in the centre of the marble space. She was, or fancied she was, alone, as some little time before I had left the court to obtain a fresh supply of cigarettes; and my mother, who could never quite adapt herself to the semi-open-air life, was taking a siesta in the drawing room. As I saw Philippa in all her glowing beauty, the white marble against which she leaned making as it were a suitable foil to the warm color of her cheek—the long, curved, black, downcast lashes—the bosom rising and falling gently—like an inspiration the thought came to me that in a minute my fate would be decided. Heavens! how could I have waited so long to hear the words which I knew she would say?

I crept noiselessly to her side. I passed my arm round her waist and drew her to me. I whispered words of passionate love in her ear—words, the confidence of which startled me; but then this time I knew that my love of years was to be rewarded.

She did not shrink away; she did not struggle to free herself, but she trembled like a leaf in my embrace. She sighed deeply, even hopelessly, and I saw the tears welling in her dark eyes. Closer and firmer I held her, and kissed her cheek again and again. Had that moment been my last I should have said that I had not lived in vain.

"Philippa," I whispered, "my queen, my love, tell me you love me at last."

She was silent. The tears broke from her eyes and ran down her cheeks. I kissed the signs of sorrow away.

"Dearest," I said, "it is answer enough that you suffer these kisses, but I have waited so long—been so unhappy; look at me and satisfy me; let me hear you say, 'I love you!' "

She turned her tearful eyes to mine, but not for long. She cast her looks upon the ground and was still silent. Yet she lay unresisting in my arms. That, after all, was the true answer.

But I must have it from her lips. "Tell me, dearest—tell me once," I prayed.

Her lips quivered; her bosom rose and fell. The blush spread from her cheek and stole down her white neck.

"Yes," she murmured, "now that it is too late, I love you."

I laughed a wild laugh. I clasped Philippa to my breast.

"Too late!" I cried. "We may have fifty years of happiness."

"It is too late," she answered. "For your sake I have told you that I love you, Basil. My love, I will kiss you once—then loose me, and let us say farewell."

"When death closes the eyes of one of us we will say farewell—not until then," I said, as my lips met hers in a long and rapturous kiss.

Then with a sigh she gently but firmly freed herself from my arms. She rose, we stood on the marble floor, face to face, gazing in each other's eyes.

"Basil," she said, softly, "all this must be forgotten. Say farewell; to-morrow we must part."

"Dearest, our lives henceforth are one."

"It cannot be. Spare me, Basil! You have been kind to me. It cannot be."

"Why? Tell me why?"

"Why! need you ask? You bear an honored and respected name; and I, you know what I am—a shamed woman."

"A wronged woman, it may be, not a shamed one."

"Ah! Basil, in this world, when a woman is concerned, wronged and shamed mean the same thing. You have been as a brother to me. I came to you in my trouble; you saved my life—my reason. Be kinder still, and spare me the pain of paining you."

By look, by word, by gesture, she seemed to beseech me. Oh, how I longed to tell her that I firmly believed she was the dead man's wife! I had much difficulty in checking the words which were forming on my lips. But I dared not speak. Telling her that the marriage was a valid one meant that I must tell her of her husband's death, and, it might be, how he died.

"Philippa," I said, "the whole happiness of my life, my every desire is centred upon making you my wife. Think, dearest, how when I had no right to demand the gift my life was made desolate; think what it will be when I know you love me and yet refuse to be mine! Have I been true to you, Philippa?"

"Heaven knows you have."

"Then why, now that you love me, refuse me my reward?"

"Oh, spare me! I cannot, I will not give it. Basil, dear Basil, why with your talents should you marry the cast-off—mistress—of Sir Mervyn Ferrand? Why should you blush to show your wife to the world?"

"Blush! The world! What is my world save you? You are all to me, sweetest. You love me—what more do I want? Before this time next week we will be married."

"Never, never! I will not wrong the man I love. Basil, farewell forever!"

She clasped her hands and fled wildly across the court. I caught her at the door, which she had reached and half opened. "Promise me one thing," I said; "promise you will wait here until my return. I shall not be five minutes. It is not much to ask, Philippa."

Philippa bent her head as in assent. I passed through the doors, and in a few minutes returned to the patio, accompanied by my mother, who glanced from Philippa to me in a surprised way.

"What is the matter?" she asked, with her cheerful smile. "Have you two young people been quarrelling?"

Philippa made no answer. She stood with her fingers interlaced; her eyes cast on the ground.

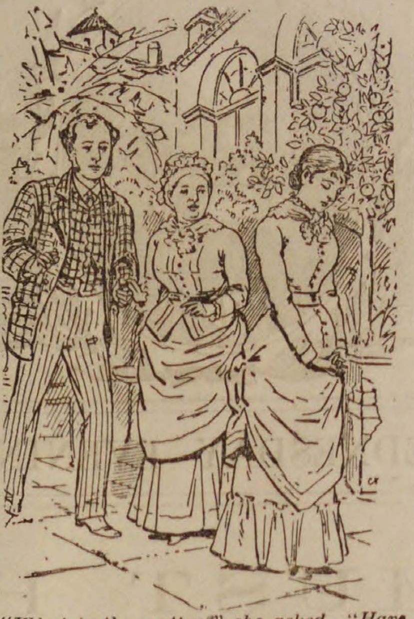
"Mother," I said, "I have to-day asked Philippa to be my wife. I have told her that all my happiness depends upon her consent to this. I have loved her for years, and at last she loves me. Yes, she loves me."

My mother gave a little cry of pleasure, and stepped forward. I checked her.

"I love her, and she loves me," I continued. "But she refuses to marry me. And why? Because she fears to bring shame on an honorable name. You know her story; you are my mother. You, of all people in the world, should be the most jealous as to the honor of my name. You should know whom you would choose for my wife. Tell her—"

I said no more. My mother advanced with outstretched arms, and in a moment my poor girl was weeping in her embrace, while words which I could not hear, but whose purport I could well guess, were being whispered to her. I had indeed been right in trusting to my mother's noble nature.

"Leave us for a little while, Basil," she said, as Philippa still sobbed upon her shoulder. "Come back in a quarter of an hour's time."



"What is the matter?" she asked. "Have you two young people been quarrelling?"

I turned away, went past the screen which is sometimes put up to insure privacy, out of the iron gate, into the narrow street. I watched the lounging, dignified-looking men and the dark eyed women who went by; I looked at the merry urchins at play; and, after what seemed an interminable quarter of an hour, returned to learn how my gentle counsel had succeeded with my suit.

My mother and Philippa were sitting with their arms around each other. Philippa, as I entered the patio, raised her eyes to mine with a look of shy happiness. My mother rose and took the girl by the hand.

"Basil," she said, "I have at last been able to persuade her that you and I, at least, rise above the conventionalities of what is called the world. I have told her that, knowing all I know, I see nothing to prevent her from being your wife. I have told her that simply for her own sweet sake I would rather see you marry her than any woman in the world. And, Basil, I fancy I have made her believe me."

With her soft eyes full of maternal love my mother kissed me and left the court. I opened my arms to close them round the fairest woman in the world, and all the earth seemed bright and glorious to me. My great love had conquered!

And yet, even in that moment of bliss, my thoughts involuntarily flew away to a snow-heaped road in England—to a white drift, under which for days and days a ghastly object had once been lying. A dream! a dream! It must have been a fearful dream. Forget it, Basil North, and be happy in the happiness you have at last won!

CHAPTER X.

THE SWORD FALLS.

Once conquered—once convinced that the obstacles which her solicitude for my welfare raised against my wish were not insuperable—Philippa offered no further resistance; while as for me, every day that might be counted before I called her my wife seemed a day spoiled, if not entirely wasted. With my mother's arguments to back my own fervent persuasion, I had no difficulty in winning Philippa's consent to our marriage taking place as soon as the needful formalities could be complied with. And yet, although the day was fixed, it was at my instance changed, and the ceremony postponed for awhile.

My reason for deferring my crowning happiness was this. Knowing all that I knew, the question arose, under what name was Philippa to be married? Under her own maiden name; under the false name which for some time Sir Mervyn Ferrand, for reasons best known to himself, had made her assume; or under that name which, supposing Mrs. Wilson had spoken the truth, she was legally entitled to bear? So anxious, so resolved was I that there should be no shadow of doubt as to the validity of her second and happier marriage, that after due consideration I determined to sacrifice my own inclination, and postpone our wedding long enough to give me time to pay a flying visit to England, where I could do my best to obtain such evidence as would show that Philippa was the dead man's widow.

I made the excuse that I found many matters of business connected with my property must be attended to before I could be married. I travelled to England—to Liverpool—as fast as I could. I stayed there for a week, and during that time made full researches into the life and death of a woman who, as Mrs. Wilson said, had died on a certain date, and been buried under the name of Lucy Ferrand.

The information I acquired as to her antecedents is of no consequence to my story. Whatever her faults may have been, her history was a sad one; indeed it seemed to me that the history of any woman who had been cursed by Sir Mervyn Ferrand's love was a sad one. However, the result of my investigations was, in short, this: Ferrand had married the woman many years ago. They had parted by mutual consent. With his cynical carelessness he had troubled no more about her; and, stranger still, she had not troubled him. She died on the date given by my informant. The question of identity could be easily settled; so that if ever Philippa chose to claim the rights appertaining to Sir Mervyn Ferrand's widow, she would have no difficulty in making that claim good. But I trusted that years might pass before she learned that the man was dead.

I made my presence in England known to no one; in fact, I felt that in returning to my native country I ran a certain amount of risk. For all I knew to the contrary, there might be a warrant out against me. If suspicion as to the author of that night's work had in any way been directed to Philippa, I, the partner of her flight, could not hope to escape free. However, I comforted myself by thinking that if danger menaced us I should have heard something about it, as after our first hurried start I had made no attempt to conceal our whereabouts. It would have been useless. My mother had friends in England with whom she exchanged letters. I had an agent and lawyers with whom, if only for financial reasons, I was bound to correspond. I had been obliged to write to my stolid William, and instruct him to get rid of the cottage as best he could, and to look out for a fresh place for himself. But all the same I did not care to let it be known that I was now in England.

While engaged upon raking up evidence on Philippa's behalf, I did not neglect to make such inquiries as I could respecting the event which had happened that night near Roding. I found that, so far as the general public knew, the crime was still veiled in mystery. No one had been arrested; no one had been accused; no reason for the deed had been discovered, and as yet suspicion pointed to no one. Indeed, in spite of the hundred pounds reward offered by government, it seemed that Sir Mervyn Ferrand's murder was relegated to swell the list of undiscovered crimes. By this I knew that Mrs. Wilson had kept her promise of silence; and now that months had gone by; now that public attention had been turned from the thrilling affair; now that Philippa seemed as far or farther than ever from giving any token which suggested the awaken-

PETITION AND ORDER.

To the Honorable the Board of Selectmen of the Town of Peabody.

The undersigned, the Directors of the Eastern Railroad Company, a corporation duly established under the laws of this Commonwealth, respectfully represent that he Board of Railroad Commissioners have issued to said corporation a certificate that public necessity requires the construction of a branch or extension of its track one-fifth of a mile in length, or thereabouts, from a point southeasterly of Peabody Station, on that part of its road known as the Lawrence Branch, in a northeasterly direction across lands of different persons, across Walnut street and longitudinally through Upton street to land of Thomas E. Proctor; and the petitioners further represent that they have prepared a map of the proposed route on an appropriate scale with a profile thereof on a vertical scale of ten to one as compared with a horizontal scale, and have procured the report of a skilful engineer based upon actual examination and survey showing the kind and amount of filling and bridging required, the highways to be crossed and the manner of crossing the same, and a general profile of the surface of the land over which the road will pass, the feasibility of the route and the manner of constructing the road, together with a detailed estimate of the cost of construction which said map and report are presented herewith, and the petitioners ask that after due notice, your Honorable Board will fix the route of said proposed branch and will make a certificate setting forth the route so fixed.

LEGISLATIVE HEARING.

The adjourned hearing on the West Peabody division was continued last Wednesday morning at the State House. The examination of Mr. Poor was continued by Mr. Wardwell. The report of 1884 which was before the Committee was the report for the financial year ending Feb. 1. 1884. He thought the expenditures for the West Peabody portion of the town had been about the same the past ten years. At the special town meeting called on the West Peabody matter he had no means of knowing how many were present. The vote to lay the matter of instructing our representative to oppose the division on the table stood 36 to 100. It was larger than the usual vote at town meetings. It was held in the afternoon. Would not get as many people out at that time as in the evening. The reports of the Poor Department are made up to April 1. In making up the report of 1883 the number of families assisted was known, but no exact account was kept of the number in families. It was estimated. The succeeding year the exact number of persons was kept. There were more people assisted last year than the previous year. Every person is considered in the report no matter how little they have been helped. The expense of running the Alms House depends somewhat upon the value of the crops. Some years there is a net profit in running the Alms House. There was more floating population in the center of the town than in West Peabody. There was a larger foreign population, and they had larger families on an average than the Americans. The church in West Peabody was a branch of the South church in Peabody, and it had been supported by that church. There was no other place of religious meeting there.

Cross examined by Rev. Spaulding: He knew of the movement for annexation to Salem. Did not know whether it was proposed to annex the whole town. Did not know whether any line was drawn. Did not remember any line leaving out all the town west of Endicott street. There were 25 on the committee to oppose the division besides the Selectmen. R. H. Brown was in favor of the annexation. Did not know the position of C. B. Farley. He had heard reports about the division of Peabody perhaps two years. It might have been talked about in West Peabody longer. The Town meeting was called without any petition. Had not heard then of any opposition. Should judge there were about 250 present. There were 2475 polls in town; and 1725 registered voters. Did not know whether or not, the moderator of the meeting was in sympathy with the petitioners.

At this point Mr. Spaulding tried to prove that the statement was incorrect that there were 16 non registered voters on his petition. Mr. Poor explained to the Committee how he obtained his list. It was copied from the original petition and given to him by the Clerk of the Legislative Committee. He examined the list by the town records. He did not know whether all the signers of the remonstrance were registered voters. The vote on building the town house was taken in the evening. The polls were open and all the citizens had an opportunity to vote. The entire cost of the building was about $108,000. It cost about $1000 a year to run it. It was insured for $50,000. The room for the Selectmen was nearly as large as this Commiitee room. There was a large hall above with a stage 50 x 28 with footlights, etc. Whether this hall was needed by the town depended upon the way it was looked at. The school house was the only piece of town property he knew of in West Peabody—unless it was a town pound. The town debt was $458,000. It was incurred for property in the Eastern part of the town. The question was then asked Mr. Poor if he thought there would have been any debt at all if the wants of the Eastern part of the town had not been in excess of those of the West. Objection was raised to this by Mr. Wardwell that this was a matter for argument, and the Committee sustained the objection.

Mr. Poor was then questioned as to his statement that the water works paid $4000 above the interest on the whole cost. In this estimate the $2000 was not included, which was paid for cleaning out the reservoir. It was charged to construction account. Thought it belonged there. The amount paid for lawsuits, including the one begun by the Fay estate, was not included. It was charged to Miscellaneous Expenses of the Selectmen's Department. The Selectmen were authorized by vote of the town to defend all suits brought against the town. The expense incurred by the flooded tomb in Cedar Grove Cemetery was not included. The expense of removing the remains was charged to the Board of Health. Nothing was allowed for depreciation in the works in this estimate. He did not know when the Naumkeag Contract ran out. Could not tell if it would make a loss to the department.

He considered Peabody a thrifty town. Its valuation had doubled in the last 30 years. He did not know as the farms of West Peabody were worth any more than they were 30 years ago. He believed in dealing justly and generously by West Peabody in the valuation of property.

To Mr. Wardwell. The clearing out of the reservoir was something more than repairs on the works. It was an improvement that would be of benefit long in the future.

T. J. Relihan was then called. Had been on the Board of Selectmen three years; on the Board of Health six or seven. The Board of Health had been called to West Peabody. On complaint of Mr. Saltonstall they visited the place of Mr. Andrews. The whole Board went. Mr. Saltonstall had lost two children from typhoid fever, and the Board went to investigate. They found a large hennery there, and the place in a filthy condition. The police were called there several times during the period covered by the report of 1884. He recalled instances of the Needham robbery, a robbery at Saltonstall's, of damage to trees, of fires in the woods, when the police were called to hunt up those parties who set the fires. Mr. Peasley was unable to be present on account of the Court holden at Lawrence, and at the request of the witness he had drawn off from his book the times the police had gone to West Peabody, viz: Jan 20, '83, robbery: Feb. 26, Butler case; April 15, fires in the woods; May 26, Saltonstall robbery; June 27, damage to trees; Sept. 19, damage by dogs.

Mr. Relihan had compared the death rate in Peabody with other places in this vicinity. By the census report of 1880 the death rate of Peabody was 15.95: in 1877 it was 17.68. The average death rate for the entire county of Essex in 1880 was 20 24. There were 21 towns in the county whose average was greater than Peabody; two equal to it, and eleven less. He considered the condition of the town superior in cleanliness and health to what it was seven years ago. By the last report of the Board of Health, Lunacy and Charity, the cost of maintaining the poor of Peabody per capita of population was 1.13; the cost per cent. of valuation, 1-7 of 1 per cent. In Lynnfield the cost was 2.04 per capita; per cent. of valuation, 1-4. In Danvers, 1.10 per capita; per cent. of valuation, 1-5. Boxford, 1.25 per capita; per cent. of valuation, 1-6. Georgetown, 1 04 per capita; per cent. of valuation, 1-15. Topsfield, 1.65 per capita; per cent. of valuation, 1-4. Saugus, 1.44 per capita; per cent. of valuation, 1-4.

The valuation of Peabody for the year ending May 1, '83, was	$6,707,250 00
Of West Peabody (the portion asked to be set off) it was	425,550 00

This last item was divided viz:

Personal property	$173,800 00
Real Estate	251,750 00
Total	$425,550 00

which is 4-63 of the entire valuation of the town. Of this there is exempted and abated $13,950 leaving the net amount taxed as $411,600.

The tax of West Peabody is as follows:

$411,600 at 15.40 per $1000,	$6,338 64
99 Polls at 2.00 less 3.00	195 00
Dog Tax (24 at $2; 5 at $5)	73 00
Income of Mass. School Fund. proportion to number of scholars, which is 65-1795 of $168.50	6 09
Proportion of Tuition for scholars out of town. 4-63 of $129.62	8 23
Corporation Tax, Appleton and Saltonstall	1000 00
Total West Peabody Tax	$7620 96

Of this West Peabody property there was owned by residents outside of the proposed West Peabody line, viz:

Personal Property	$1,150 00
Real estate	56,950 00
	$58,100 00

Of this there is exempt or abated $2250.

Henry Saltonstall's property is viz:

Personal Property	$62,000 00
Real Estate	14,250 00
H. Saltonstall, Trustee	27,000 00
F. H. Appleton's property:
Real Estate	55,900 00
Personal Property	21,350 00
Total 2 men	$180,500 00
Saltonstall's tax	$1592 05
Appleton's tax	1191 65
Corporation tax	1000 00
Total	$3783 70
The whole tax of West Peabody	$7620 96
Deduct Appleton and Saltonstall	3783 70
Difference	$3837 26
The entire valuation of W. P.	$425,550 00
Deduct Appleton and Saltonstall	180,500 00
Difference	$245,050 00

which is 1-27 of the entire valuation of the town.

The amount expended in West Peabody for 1884 was viz:

Highways and Bridges	$1471 20

Mr. Relihan here explained how this was arrived at. He took from the Town Report the expenses of the different Wards. He allowed 9-20 of Ward 5, and 9-10 of Ward 6. This he arrived at by measurement on the map furnished by Mr. Spaulding. He added the expenses for clearing snow in that part of the town and other expenses picking out only what belonged to that part of the town. Had also excluded all the salary of Mr. Besse.

This closed the hearing for Wednesday.

THURSDAY'S HEARING.

Nathan H. Poor at the opening desired to correct his statement of the previous day. He was in error in reference to the taking of the vote in the Town House. It is not by ballot, but by hand vote. The objection made by Mr. Saltonstall to taking water from Humphrey's Pond was that is was private property. He objected to the city of Lynn taking water from this pond. There are five Selectmen and Assessors in Peabody; West Peabody has one; she also has one out of six school committee; two constables out of twenty; one Trustee of the Peabody Institute out of twelve; one of the two surveyors of highways.

Mr. Relihan then continued his statement, and proceeded to show the amount expended in West Peabody, viz:

Highways(brought over from last hearing)	$1471 20
State and County tax (total amt. $14,186) 4-63 is	900 73
Decoration of Soldier's Graves (total appropriation $250) 4-63 is	15 87
Cedar Grove Cemetery (total appropriation is $600) 4 63 is	38 09
Sinking Fund appropriation 4-63 is	1053 97
4-63 of Interest Acct. is	1401 00
Printing and Stationery (total expenditure $710.18) 4-63 is	45 09
Board of Health (whole expense is $407.96) 4-63 is	25 90
Expense of Town Officers (total $4133.76) 4 63 is	262 46
Police Department (total expense is $5818.48) 4-63 is	369 43
Miscellaneous and Incidental Expenses of the Selectmen's department (total $3612.07) 4-63 is	229 33
Poor department (total expense is $9845 88 4-63 is	625 13
School department	1490 06
Fire department 4-63 is	475 20
Total	$8403 46
If we deduct (1) 4 63 of Sinking Fund for High Service ($101.58) and (2) 4 63 of Interest on Water Debt, $557.50,	$659 08
Difference	$7744 38
Whole of West Peabody tax	7620 96
	$123 42

The West Peabody tax of $7620.96 includes the tax of Appleton and Saltonstall; deducting their tax it makes it $3837.26.

The following expenditures were made in West Peabody leaving Appleton and Saltonstall out; that is, on a basis of 1-27 instead of 4-63 of the entire valuation:

Highways and Bridges	$1449 67
State and County tax 1-27	525 42
Decorating Soldier's Graves 1-27	9 26
Cedar Grove Cemetery 1-27	22 22
School House debt, 1 27 of interest on $92,000,	136 29
1 27 of Printing and Stationery	26 30
1-27 of Expense for Town Officers	153 10
Miscellaneous and Incidental expenses of the Selectmen's dept. 1-27	133 78
School department (actual expenses and 1-27 of what cannot be separated)	1354 83
Poor department	100 00
Proportion of appropriation to Sinking Fund for the West Peabody School House	265 60
Total	$4176 47
West Peabody tax without Appleton and Saltonstall	$3837 26
Difference	$339 21

In the above estimate nothing is charged to the Town House debt or interest on it; nothing for the fire department; nothing for the police; nothing for the Board of Health; nothing for the other town debt, except the proportion of school house debt; nor for the water debt or interest on the same.

The number of polls in town May 1, 1883, was 2530. The number in West Peabody assessed and not abated was 99. The number of polls in town May 1, 1884, was 2484, in May, 1880, 2273. The population of Peabody in 1880 was 9028. The whole number of voters in 1883 was 1818; in 1884, 1715. The whole number of acres assessed was 9050.

Mr. Relihan further stated that the expenditures of the Board of Health for 29 years had been $7500, and that of this amount $3800 was spent in West Peabody during the small pox epidemic of 1873 and 1874, including hospital. The expenses of the police department for the financial year ending Feb. 1, 1884, were $5818.84; for the year ending Feb. 1, 1885, covered by the town report in the hands of the printer, it was $6724.38. The expense of the fire department for the year ending Feb. 1, 1884, was $7484.49; for the year ending Feb. 1, 1885, it was $6801.56. In addition to this last amount there was an item of $918.25 for two new hose carriages, for which there was an appropriation of $600, and in the previous year the engineers were authorized to sell the hand engines and the hook and ladder truck and purchase two new hose carriages with the proceeds. They did sell the same for $950 but did not spend it then.

Mr. Relihan stated that the West Peabody school house had been insured last year at a cost of $249.37. The tax of Henry Saltonstall May 1, 1884, was viz:

On Personal estate	$62,000 00
On Real estate	14,250 00
	$76,250 00
H. Saltonstall Trustee	$27,000 00
Tax		$1695 30
F. H. Appleton May 1,
Personal property	$56,050 00
Real estate	23,000 00
	$182,300 00
Tax		$1298 42

The entire valuation of the town May 1, 1884, was $6,671,200; the valuation of West Peabody was $425,750.

Mr. Relihan stated that he had obtained these figures from the Assessors' books; that he and Mr. Preston had gone over them independently at different times, and with the same result. The location of each piece of property is described on the Assessors' books. The assessed valuation May 1, 1884, of the portion of the estate of Geo. W. Henderson, sold to Taylor, was, two

THE BIG GUN SPEAKS,

Can the Little Dealers Compete with us?

HEAR WHAT THE WOONSOCKET RUBBER CO. SAYS:

Office of Woonsocket Rubber Co.,
Boston, Dec. 15, 1884.

WELLMAN OSBORNE, Lynn, Mass.

Dear Sir.—In answer to your request as to the amount of your purchases for this season's trade would state that to this date they foot up sixty-six thousand one hundred and eighty-three dollars and fifty-one cents, ($66,183 51) of which $21,679.50 was purchased during November, and $11,194.74 during the present month. Truly yours,

WOONSOCKET RUBBER CO.

IS IT POSSIBLE that the little dealers, taxed by the profits which they are obliged to pay to the Jobbers from whom they buy their goods, and encumbered by exorbitant rents, (one of them on the principal business street of the city and only doing business enough to employ one clerk, being reputed as paying one of the highest shoe rents in the city) we repeat, is it possible that they can compete with a wholesaler whose wholesale and retail business combined amounts to upwards of three hundred thousand dollars ($300,000) a year, and who buys direct from the rubber companies in the enormous quantities indicated above, and who, with four stores, has to pay rent only on one, the other three being on his own premises? No person of common sense can for a moment believe it. And now for a houses, $1600; barn and carriage house, $1000; land on Lowell street, about 28 3-4 acres, $750; total, $3350. The assessed valuation of the agent's house at Winona Mills May 1 1883 was $500; the land about an acre, $50; total, $550.

Cross examination by Mr. Spaulding. When the Board of Health visited Mr. Andrews' place they found his dwelling house in a filthy condition. They directed him to put it in order. This was the only occasion he recalled of visiting West Peabody. Thought the Board had been called to the same place previously. In regard to the visits of the police they were given to him from the record book of Mr. Peasley. Did not know whether the Needham robbers were caught by the Peabody police. Did not know whether the robbers who broke into Saltonstall's wine cellar sampled the liquors or not. Was not present on the occasion. Did not testify that the cost of the poor in the Alms House, both out door and in door, was $1.13. Said that the official report of Lunacy and Charity gave that as the cost per capita of population. He did not know how many out door poor there were. (Here Mr. Spaulding attempted without success to convince the witness that his figures were not correct; that he should show the cost to be over $2.00, etc. The Chairman of the Committee informed Mr. Spaulding he would have an opportunity to show it if he so desired, but it was evident he could not show it by this witness. Mr. Spaulding then went on to another subject.)

In regard to the division of Ward 6 on the map, the witness measured it with a rule on the map, the same with Ward 5. Did not know about the charge of $25.00 for gravel paid to Mr. Spaulding, whether it belonged to the preceding year. The witness made his estimates from the Town Report before the Committee. That charge appeared in the report; he knew nothing further about it.

Mr. Spaulding then went back to the police business again, when Mr. Wardwell objected, saying that it had been gone over with once, and that Mr. Relihan had said he knew nothing about it except from Mr. Peasley's record. He had no objection to Mr. Spaulding proving anything he wished, but it was evident this witness knew nothing about this matter, and it only took up the time of the Committee. The Committee concurred in this. Mr. Spaulding then tried to have Mr. Relihan say it cost the Poor Department 625.13 to keep one man, because he had estimated one permanent occupant of the Alms House in the statement given. Mr. Relihan said it was not possible to estimate the out-door poor, and he had taken the one occupant of the Alms House from Mr. Spaulding's own figures. "Then," said Spaulding, "it is certainly correct." Mr. Spaulding tried to break his testimony in reference to the Fire Department, and the number of polls in West Peabody, but without success. In regard to the water works and the present danger to health without a sewerage, the witness referred to the death rate as the best answer.

To Mr. Wardwell. The Board of Health required the regular clearing of cesspools; the refuse from nearly all the tanneries drained into Goldthwait's brook and was carried by a canal down to the North River.

James Flint of West Peabody was the next witness. He was one of the remonstrants. His objection to the division was on account of the High School in particular. If the town was divided, he would have to pay $40.00 a year for tuition, and $20.00 more for books; that would cost him $60.00. He had children in attendance and had had more in previous years. If the town was divided he would have to send them to Peabody to the High School and also pay a tax in West Peabody for which he received nothing. He was born in West Peabody. First heard of any talk of division about a year ago. It arose in the Farmer's Club. He lived about a hundred rods from the depot. He had talked with many people. And his opinion about the matter was that about half or a third of the petitioners who proposed to divide the town were indifferent about it. It was brought about by supposed grievance. There were certain parties who would like to set up a town government by themselves. The depot and Post office were in the same place. The store was a small West India Goods store, and the only one he knew of. They used the School House for a church. It was situated 200 rods from the depot, all alone by itself in a field. There was no village in this part of the town. There are four houses within twenty-five rods of each other.

Cross examination by Mr. Spaulding. He knew of no way of being assured that he would not be obliged to pay for the High School tuition for his children in case the town were divided. He did not know whether all the non-signers to the petition were remonstrants.

To Mr. Wardwell. This disagreement and discontent in town matters was confined to one or two people, in his opinion.

To Mr. Spaulding. He had seen the man who was making the disturbance. He sold him a horse once. He had heard that those who signed the petition had done so because what they thought was excessive taxation.

To the Committee. It would be a small town like the old school district where they were always quarelling. He desired to live in peace. He thought the causes of dissatisfaction were imaginary and the people thought that they were going to be taxed less. He couldn't see how it was. He had figured it up and did not believe it then, and didn't now. He was not a farmer he was a shoe-maker and worked out of town. He owned his place.

At this point, it being but a few minutes of one, one of the committee said he would like to know if the gentleman was prejudiced against the division, on account of the horse trade he had with Mr. Spaulding. And he should like to hear the story of that trade. Mr. Spaulding commenced to ask Mr. Flint some questions but the committee wanted the gentleman to tell the story in his own way; he thought it would be more interesting. Mr. Flint said he bought a horse of Mr. Spaulding or his agent and paid a $100 for him; previously he had asked some of the neighbors about the horse but could not get much information. He had never owned a horse before, and did not know much about horses; he did not suppose he had got a five hundred dollar nag, but after keeping the horse a few weeks he was glad to sell him for $25; this brought down the house, in the midst of which the hearing adjourned.

FRIDAY'S HEARING.

Mr. Spaulding said if Mr. Relihan was present he would like to ask him a few questions, whereupon that gentleman took the stand. He was asked the estimate of the West Peabody valuation which he had given as $425,550. He was asked by Mr. Spaulding if he included any property taxed to William H. or M. W. Felton. Mr. Relihan looked on his list of non-residents and found that he had the name of William H. Felton. He did not know anything about any property of Edward Jacobs. Mr. Wardwell here stated that Mr. Jacobs failed a number of years ago and that Mr. Spaulding ought to know that there was no property taxed in his name. He had not included any of Frank Marsh's farm nor any of the town farm. He was asked about a piece of 40 acres owned by a Mr. Wheatland, and was informed by the town clerk that it was taxed to the heirs of Benj. Goodhue. He did not have any property taxed to Chandler Newhall, nor to a Mr. Swett or Sweet. He could not answer whether they were property holders in West Peabody or not. He had not examined the records to see whether West Peabody had any Bank or Corporation Stock except that of Appleton and Saltonstall; he had not credited West Peabody with the $30,000 worth of bonds that were recovered after the Needam robbery; he understood most of it was worthless.

Mr. Spaulding here wished to know of the committee, if there was any way by which the exact valuation of West Peabody could be got at, he had a paper which was drawn off for Mr. Appleton by Mr. Preston, in which he made the valuation about $470,000. Mr. Preston had since cut this down $36,000, which would leave $434,000 and he knew of an estate of $1000, that ought to be deducted. Now if there was any way to get at this correctly, he should like to do it. The chairman said that the Committee understood the feelings of the gentleman, but he did not think that the matter of $15,000 would make enough difference to delay the hearing. The Committee understood the matter, and would give it due consideration.

C. Warren Osborn was the next witness. He had resided in Peabody all his life, was a constant attendant at town meetings, had not heard any talk about a division until within a year. He first heard of it in one of the penny dailies. He never heard of any disaffection until the last March meeting. Mr. Osborn was on the finance committee last year; while they were in session, Mr. King came in and said that the firemen were dissatisfied with their pay, and he thought it would be better to advance it to $20. He thought they would be contented with that, and it would be better than to have it brought up in town meeting. To this Mr. Spaulding agreed. In the Town Meeting Mr. Spaulding arose, after a motion had been made by a gentleman from West Peabody to make the firemen's pay $30, and supported the increase. He admitted that he had signed the report for $20, but supposed he could change his mind.

In another part of the report, to which all agreed, a certain sum was appropriated for roads and bridges. The committee are in the habit of recommending a man for surveyor. The previous year the town had one man for this office. This year the committee, 4 to 1, desired to recommend the same person. Mr. Spaulding desired that the man left off the previous year should be re-instated in his old position. The Committee were willing to agree on a West Peabody man if Mr. Spaulding would recommend some other person. He did not do it. This was the man who made the motion to increase the pay of the firemen. The firemen got their pay, and the man was chosen surveyor, not only of West Peabody but of So. Peabody and came very near being elected surveyor of the whole town. In the discussion in the Committee it was agreed by Mr. Spaulding if the Committee would recommend the man the money should be paid by the town directly to the workmen instead of passing through his hands.

Cross examined by Spaulding. He had not heard about the division until within a year. It might have been talked about longer than that in West Peabody. He was not posted as to what they were talking about up there. There was no proposition in the Committee to increase the pay of the firemen to $30 that he remembered of. Mr. Spaulding never stated in the Committee that they ought to have $30. He never advocated it in the Committee. He was finding fault with every department in the town government. The witness presumed that the gentleman might have stated in Town Meeting that he voted in Committee under a misapprehension. The gentleman made a speech in Town Meeting of over an hour, and he (Mr O) could not remember all he said. The highway surveyor was an old surveyor. He had a fair reputation in that capacity. Mr. Spaulding asked that his pay should be equal to that of Mr. Besse for the time he worked. The chief opposition to him was that when the men who worked on the highways came to the Selectmen and complained that they could not get their pay, it was time to have a change. He did not know that the men did not get their pay at last. The witness had opposed Mr. Spaulding's proposition to have the men paid directly, because he supposed it would drift back again to the old way, and the money be paid to the surveyor directly, as he had been informed it had been done since Mr. Walcott's appointment.

Franklin Osborn was the next witness. Had always resided in town First heard of the talk of division about a year ago. Never heard of any previous disaffection. He had a conversation with J. Fred Ingraham, one of the petitioners. He said he regretted signing it.

Mr. Spaulding objected to this sort of testimony. Mr. Ingraham was not dead or sick. Why not summon Mr Ingraham? He did not like this sort of testimony. It would submit him (Mr. S.) to the necessity of calling every one of the petitioners.

Mr. Wardwell said the same question had been raised before, and Mr. Upham aaked him to admit that ten or twelve more men would testify substantially as Harrison Taylor. Mr. Wardwell then stated that he proposed to show that all who signed the petition were not in favor of the division, and that he should introduce evidence to that effect. Mr. Upham then raised the same objection as to the inconvenience of calling witnesses, but he had rested his case and decided not to call any more witnesses.

Mr. Upham (who had just come in) said that he did not understand that he asked Mr. Wardwell to admit the fact, but to waive the matter. It was more in the nature of prospective evidence. He had supposed when he rested if anything should be brought up which would call for rebuttal he should have the opportunity to introduce it.

Mr. Wardwell did not understand that it was raised prospectively. He had distinctly told Mr. Upham that he should introduce such evidence. This was his first witness. He should offer the evidence of four petitioners who were not in favor of the division, and should argue from these that there were others.

Mr. Upham said that in that case he certainly should desire for himself personally to correct the impression that might be made that he was one of the petitioners who had not signed in good faith.

Mr. Spaulding said there were on the petition some one hundred names. They were not men without integrity. They knew what they were about; the names had some meaning. If evidence were permitted to be introduced that four men signed the petition unwillingly, he could not meet it without bringing in all the signers. The names of the men ought to be proof enough. If any man on the petition was dissatisfied he could take his name off. He objected seriously to this attempt to impeach these witnesses. He could bring witnesses to prove that Mr. Osborn bulldozed Mr. Ingraham, and that was the reason for his position.

The Chairman said he desired it to be understood that the Committee did not propose to be dictated to as to the method in which this hearing was to be conducted. They were not to be driven in the matter. The Legislature of Massachusetts had appointed them to get at all the facts in connection with this, as every case. They proposed to be fair to both sides. There had been considerable said about the signing of the petition under pressure, and if the remonstrants desired to show this they would have an opportunity. It was the decision of the Committee that the witness could answer the questions of Mr. Wardwell; that the petitioners could introduce evidence in rebuttal with reference to the parties referred to by the remonstrants in their evidence, and no others.

Mr. Spaulding. Would it be proper for me at this time to appeal to the committee for their decision in the matter?

The chairman. This is the decision of the committee.

Mr. Spaulding. I appeal to the committee.

The chairman. Very well. I have no objection to polling the committee, if that is what the gentleman desires.

The vote of the committee was then taken, and the decision of the chairman unanimously sustained.

Mr. Osborn continued. This conversation occurred on the cars between Peabody and Boston, on the day of the first hearing. Mr. Ingraham said he had signed the petition but he did not believe in it, he had supposed that the people of Peabody, including the witness, was in favor of the division. The people in his section believed that they were paying too high taxes by figures which had been given them. They had signed the petition pretty unanimously. Mr. Ingraham said that he had got to live with them, and preferred to agree with them. The thing was worked up by Mr. Spaulding and Mr. Needham, and the figures were prepared by them; the witness had no business relations with Mr. Ingraham.

Cross examination by Mr. Spaulding. Mr. Ingraham did not say that he had made any attempt to take his name off of the petition. He did not say any undue influence had been used. The inference was that the people of West Peabody believed the figures to be true.

To Mr. Emery. When he signed the petition Mr. Ingraham said that he thought the people of Peabody were in favor of letting them go, and that there would be no opposition.

To Mr. Wardwell. He said he was still opposed to the division; he was not in favor of it, but wished to go with the rest of them.

John Linehan was the next witness. He had a talk with Mr. Ingraham. It was on Merchant's Row, Boston. Mr. Ingraham said he did not think anything about it when he signed the petition. He thought the matter was simply to be debated before the Farmer's Club. The witness said that he asked Mr. Ingraham a few more questions, but he could get no satisfactory answers. Mr. Ingraham said he thought Mr. Linehan was trying to pump him, and then get him summoned as a witness to the State House, and he didn't want to come. The witness remembered a man in West Peabody who was killed at a fire some ten years ago. He helped inter his remains. The man's family had been supported by the town ever since.

Cross examination by Mr. Spaulding. Mr. Ingraham did not say he wanted to take his name off the petition; he wanted to live in peace.

Gustavus Merrill was the next witness. He lived in Peabody; he met Samuel Hale in the Coal Office, who said he was one of the petitioners; he said he had signed the paper but did not wish to be set off; he said he had been told about the water and taxes, and had been urged to sign it by Mr. Spaulding. The witness said he did not get much more information, as he was interested in seeing a girl and didn't notice anything else. This girl was thirteen years old and weighed 195 pounds. Mr. Wheeler, Mr. Sanger and four or five others were in the coal office.

E. S. Plaisted was then called. He was one of the petitioners; he was Station Agent and Post-master of West Peabody. The Post Office was kept in the Station. His opinion of the division was that it was the wish of West Peabody to be set off. He had refused to sign it at first, but thought he might as well do as the rest did. He had no opinion in the matter. He did not remember any conversation with Mr. Blaney, in which he stated that he should not have signed the petition if he had not felt obliged to. There were so many things talked about that he could not remember every thing. He did not know that Mr. Blaney was sick, except as he had been told by counsel; finally he did remember of seeing some account of it in either the Item or the News.

To Mr. Spaulding. The reverend gentleman had never done him any special favor; had never heard of any improper influence being used to get signers. His name was on the petition; if he didn't want it there he should take it off; should judge that the majority of West Peabody people signed it.

Mr. Emery. Did the gentleman wish to leave the impression upon the minds of the committee that the conversation mentioned by Mr. Wardwell did or did not take place?

Mr. Plaisted. The committee could draw their own inference.

Mr. Emery. Then the committee can infer that the conversation alluded to might have taken place even if he did not remember it.

Mr. Plaisted. The committee could draw their own inference. He did not wish to testify in this case; he did not desire to commit himself, and did not propose to. If they could get anything out of him he should like to see them.

Frank T. Arnold was the next witness. He had had a talk with Mr. Ingraham about the time the petition was put in; it was on High Street, Boston; had talked with him since in the Peabody Station, and three or four other places. At the first conversation he asked him if he was in favor of the division. Mr. Ingraham replied no. Mr. Arnold asked him why he signed it in that case. He replied that socially he would be cut; would be a cast-off if he did not sign it. There had been strenuous efforts made to get signers. At the depot since the first hearing, Mr. Ingraham had repeated substantially the same thing. He had understood that the people in town were willing to let them go, and if the West Peabody people wanted to go he thought he might as well sign it.

The cross examination by Mr. Spaulding failed to shake Mr. Arnold's testimony.

S. A. Southwick testified that he was chairman of the Board of Selectmen; he recalled issuing the warrant for the special town meeting. Mr. Spaulding came in and asked him if they had caused any expense to the town; he replied probably three dollars for printing and serving a warrant. Mr. Spaulding asked if he charged for his services, to which he gave him no direct answer. Mr. Spaulding objected to the Selectmen putting the town to any expense, if they did he should put an injunction on the town meeting. The witness had lived in town since 1840; he had not heard anything about the division until the Farmer's Club meeting; there was no more complaint from one portion of the town than from the other; as far as the request to abate taxes was concerned, there are twenty such in the village to one in West Peabody.

Cross examined by Mr. Spaulding. There were very few requests for abatement from West Peabody; he could only recall three or four; the rest were from the village. Mr. Spaulding then asked him if he did not say that there would be no opposition to the division. Mr. Southwick said he would give that conversation as near as he could remember. He said to Mr. Spaulding that he thought the people were indifferent in the matter as it then stood, but if the gentleman took the course he intimated he might provoke some opposition.

To Mr. Wardwell. At the time of this conversation the matter had not been discussed by the citizens. He thought the general feeling of the town now was against the division. He did not think that was caused by the opposition. The strongest argument he had heard some people use in favor of division was that they would get rid of Mr. Spaulding.

To the Chairman of the committee. The assessors intend to assess the property as near as they could to what it was worth; business was dull and depressed, and under the present circumstances, the valuation may be rather high, but it would not be when business comes up. It is the plan to assess property as near to the selling price as possible, but to lean toward the tax payer.

To Mr. Emery. The witness looked to a profitable tanning business in the future, if this is realized he thought the valuation of property would be low.

To Mr. Spaulding. They had made a gain in real estate last year, and a loss in personal property.

To Mr. Wardwell. There was no material increase in West Peabody but rather the other way.

Nathan H. Poor, was then called by the committee. To the chairman. When he first became connected with the board, it was their custom to assess real estate for two thirds of its value; just after the close of the war, there was a great increase in the valuation of all property. They now intended to assess property at its fair cash market value. There was some farming property in West Peabody not accessible for any other purpose, and in a high state of cultivation. A house in Peabody was worth more in the village than in West Peabody; they considered what they would sell for, not their cost. Had very few sales in Peabody for the last few years; did not think of any sales, that had brought as much as the property was valued for. And this applied no more to West Peabody than the rest of the town. The valuation was raised in war time by a per cent. in certain sections. West Peabody was not raised very much, if as much as the rest of the town. They had not had a general valuation of property for twenty years. In assessing the property, they divided the town into sections, each member of the board taking a particular portion. Mr. Herrick had been on the board four years, before Mr. Herrick West Peabody had been represented by George W. Taylor, and nearly every year there had been one member from West Peabody.

To Mr. Wardwell. There had been a member on the board of selectmen, only one year from South Peabody, and South Peabody was much more populous than West Peabody; neither had there been any member from North Peabody.

James H. Thomas was called next. He was a resident of Peabody. He was requested by the committee, to go around with a paper, and obtain signers in remonstrance, and also to employ others. He prepared about twelve papers, and circulated one in each of the banks, and other convenient places, and had five other canvassers beside himself. This was the Monday before the first hearing, that day he was busy getting the papers ready for the others, and he did not get to work until Tuesday. Wednesday preceding the hearing was a very heavy snow storm, and while he got what few names he could that day, he didn't think the others worked at all. The petitions were not circulated after Thursday, he was instructed to bring them in Wednesday evening at the town house, where the committee had a meeting. About five o'clock that evening he called in the canvassers, and there were no signatures obtained after that; there was one petition headed by Herrick with which he had nothing to do, there was also one of fifty-one names, that was left in the South Danvers National Bank, it was stormy and the witness did not think to go after it. None but legal voters signed, as far as he knew. There were about twenty names in the same hand writing. Witness explained this. He went into some of the currying shops and some of the men wished to sign the petition, but their hands were black, and they asked the witness if he couldn't sign for them; he did this in about twenty cases; he obtained about four hundred and fifty names himself.

To the committee. He was paid for his service, for the time spent, and nothing more.

Cross examined by Mr. Spaulding. The witness obtained 450 names; he took no names Monday, but worked Tuesday and as much of the time Wednesday as he could; the rest could not go out Wednesday; there were a number of people who did not see the petition; he should call a legal voter a registered voter; there were not many voters who refused to sign; he had two assistants in the village besides himself, and one in Dublin and another on Washington street.

Rufus H. Brown was the next witness. He had lived in town since 1843; he had always taken an interest and part in town meetings; he first heard of the matter of division within a year; he had not known of any ill feeling previously; the business of the town is manufacture of leather; there was tendency to increase that business; when he first came to town there were only a few manufacturers; one man now does more than all together at first. Thomas E. Proctor had removed his residence from town, but his business remained. The business of the town does not go away even if the men themselves remove. This was in reply to the assertion of Mr. Spaulding that fifty business men of the Center were just as liable to remove from town as the two rich men from West Peabody. There was no reason why the leather business should not increase; there was no other town with the possibilities of Peabody, unless it might be Woburn. The witness was a member of the Congregationalist Society; he knew that members of the church here were in the habit of going up to West Peabody to conduct the Sunday School and other meetings; it was a branch of the church here, which had organized both the West Peabody and South Peabody churches; there was no question but that the citizens would regret having West Peabody set off; the village is made up of laboring men and this conservative element has a good influence, and for that reason he should be loth to have them go; the speaker thought that part of the town received many advantages from the school and police; the witness was a democrat in politics.

Cross examined by Mr. Spaulding. He was not sure that Peabody was the only market for West Peabody; he was president of the Savings Bank; he only knew of two mortgages on farms in West Peabody, and one of them was Mr. Spaulding's; he was not sure of the amount.

D. S. Littlefield was the next witness. He was one of the water board, and chief engineer of the fire department; he remembered a fire at Winona Mills in 1876; when they arrived the main factory had not fallen in; there was a building connected with it and the fire had just got into the corner of that; they worked four hours with the steamer; there was a building near it that was saved; they had four lines of hose on the fire; the news of the fire was brought to the village on horse back; he also remembered a fire at Flint Farm and thought it was previous to the other one; it was in the evening and the engines went up there in about thirty minutes; if the junction was connected by telephone he thought the firemen could go to Winona Mills in from thirty-five to thirty-eight minutes after they got the alarm; years ago an engine was sent to West Peabody and a company formed, but they lost all interest in it and it was taken away and sold.

In North Peabody the water pipes go all along the line, the water is generally taken for domestic use, they mostly had hose to sprinkle their gardens with, had heard of some of them to help out the garden vegetables, an application had already come in to extend the water across Mt. Pleasant and also one from Mr. Emmerton. The board considered it only a question of time when it would have to be extended to West Peabody.

The pipes also extended to South Peabody. They were extended wherever they would guarantee four per cent. They had not made an estimate, for the expense of extending the pipes to West Peabody. It would not cost far from a hundred thousand dollars. In regard to the expense on the reservoir which was charged to construction account, the basin was all filled up with mud and filth, and it was also enlarged to use as a storage. The contract with the Naumkeag Mills expires in 1895 the rates are very low, he thought fifteen hundred dollars a year, he thought it could be renewed at very much increased figures. In regard to the cost of maintaining the water works, there is always a charge made to drinking fountains, in Danvers and in Salem. They make no charge of this in Peabody.

He knew Samuel Hall, one of the petitioners, he was in his shop a short time ago, he was opposed to the petition, he had heard it argued, that the taxes would be low, but he did not believe it would be so, only for a few years. The hearing was then adjourned, subject to notification by the Committee.

Mr. W. H. Baldwin has bought the brick house adjoining the Post Office on Foster street paying $8000 for the same. He will build an addition in the rear 32x42 feet four stories high, and also a stable in the yard. The house will be fitted as a first class hotel and Mr. Baldwin will take possession the first of July, when his lease of the present hotel expires.

The School Committee had a meeting yesterday afternoon and voted to insert an article in the warrant asking for an appropriation to build a four room school house, north of the Essex Railroad and East of Wallis street, in other words, "Dublin." Also voted to give a public exhibition of writing and drawing at the town hall some time this year.

To cure frost bite, procure enough oil of peppermint to thoroughly bathe the parts affected, and keep away from the fire until the oil has drawn out the frost. If this is strictly followed many lives and limbs can be saved and months of suffering avoided. Care should be taken to get the oil, as the essence would not have the desired effect.

HOME HAPPENINGS.

The Old Ladies Home Auxiliary Society have elected the following officers:—President, Mrs. Joseph Jacobs, Jr.; Vice Presidents, Mrs. D. P. Grosvenor, Mrs. A. H. Harrington, Mrs. John Osborne, Mrs. William Hall, Mrs. William P. Clark, Mrs. Charles Jenkins; Treasurer, Miss A. A. Little; Secretary, Miss S. F. Kittredge; Board of Directors, Mrs. G. H. Poor, Mrs. H. H. Proctor, Mrs. Warren Shaw, Mrs. Charles Brooks, Mrs. Mary A. Fox, Mrs. Eliza Sutton, Mrs. J. W. Hudson, Mrs. J. B. Thomas, Mrs. Clarence Warner, Mrs. M. F. Batchelder, Mrs. R. Gibson; at large, Mrs Elijah W. Upton, Mrs. James Buxton, Mrs. D. B. Lord. The society has raised during the year $3738.19

In a shop not far from the square is a young man whom we will call Harry for short, who has been kindly remembered with comic valentines. On the 14th he received one and was highly amused and showed it among his companions. After that the mails brought one, two and three a day, he began to use them to decorate the wall paper in the factory for a few days, but as they came in so plenty he despaired of finding room to put them. Some had a descriptive verse with tender sentiment for the youth. Now the thing has become serious, every mail brings its valentines and there are several back towns to hear from, while the receiver sits with a gloomy look upon his face at times, and again with blood in his eye; at last accounts he was negotiating with one of our store keepers to take them off his hands at half price.

Margaret Mather, the promising young actress, who is now making a phenomenally successful tour, in which crowds have not been able to obtain even standing room, will visit this town Thursday evening April 23d, on which occasion she will take the character of Pauline in "The Lady of Lyons, or Love and Pride," in five acts. She is well supported and the play abounds in eloquent declamations, and is one of the most powerful dramas in the English language. We predict that there will be a large sale of tickets and that the hall will be packed to witness this sterling play with such a cast of characters as will be presented.

As the time for the annual town meeting approaches it may be interesting to know how the vote on license has stood for the past five years. In 1880 the vote was 278 in favor of license and 313 against license, and the next year it stood with the Selectmen. In 1882 the vote in favor was 498 against 353 opposed. In 1883 the yea vote was 583 and the nay 348. In 1884 the vote was yes 509; No 644. What the vote will be this year there is considerable doubt but certainly the figures show an increasing interest in the question each year.

The legislative Committee on Railroads have reported a bill extending the provisions of the act authorizing the Eastern Railroad Company to issue preferred stock in exchange for its certificates of indebtedness, so as to permit dividends on preferred stock to be paid by the Boston & Maine railroad out of gross earnings, according to the terms of the lease lately effected.

Mr. Frank Gowen arrived home this week on a visit to friends having been recently discharged from the 15th U. S. Infantry in which regiment he served five years, spending most of his time in Arizona, Texas and New Mexico. He has many stories to tell of frontier life. The young man who enlisted with him was killed by the Indians in Colorado, four years ago.

The revenue from the water works for the past year will amount to $23,740. The surplus over and above the running expenses of the works and the interest on the water debt will amount to $6445. The receipts for the year ending Jan. 31, 1884, were $22,979.42, showing an increase in the revenue for the year ending Jan. 31, 1885, of $760.58.

The members of the Unitarian society will try and reduce their debt on their parsonage in the following manner. Envelopes will be distributed, all those who feel disposed, may give what they please and at the same time enclose a verse from the Bible which will be read to the congregation at some future time.

Several liquor cases came up in the Superior Court at Lawrence last week. Patrick Ellis and Dan'l Manning, both bartenders at the Woodbine, were found guilty, John O'Mahoney was discharged. Andrew Holleran was also convicted. James E. Millea was convicted for the second time.

Danvers Mirror says, the steam whistle on J.A. Lord's tannery in Peabody, awoke many in this town Monday morning. Speaks well for the whistle.

Mr. Joseph Goodhue Shedd, a well known and eccentric individual of this town, was found dead in his bed, on Main street last Monday morning. He was the only son of the late Dr. Joseph Shedd, who for many years was town clerk of the old town of Danvers. He was about 72 years of age, and leaves three married daughters. He married Esther Osborne, a sister of Jonathan E. Osborne. He kept a drug store where William T. Lee now is, it being his father's homestead. Dr. Shedd sold to the late Augustus Towne, who sold to George E. Meacom and he to Dr. Frost, who was succeeded by Mr. Lee. Since the death of his wife Mr. Shedd has resided with his daughters in New Hampshire, coming to this town for a portion of each year, keeping bachelor's hall in a rear room of the old estate that he reserved for himself. He came here the day before last Thanksgiving and had been in his usual health. Monday morning he visited a neighbor and obtained some hot water. On Sunday evening Mr. Charles Davis sat with him until about 11 o'clock, and offered to stay all night, but his offer was declined with thanks, with the request that he "come in the morning and see whether I am dead or alive." He was, when a young man a prominent member, and we believe, ensign of the old Danvers Light Infantry. He had a fine education, and was a thorough druggist and a penman of note. He kept a restaurant and ice-cream saloon at 272 Essex street, Salem, about 1846.

The celebrated Hanlon Brothers will be at Mechanic Hall next Friday evening producing their great piece "Le Voyage en Suisse." A trip to Switzerland, the cheeriest, brightest and most joyous comic creation of the present stage. The sensations are: Upsetting of a Stage Coach, Passengers thrown all over the stage, Pullman Car in full motion on Stage, Collision and Railroad Explosion, Wreck of the Rigi Kulm Hotel, Man falls through the Ceiling; the whole making a most novel and pleasing performance replete with fun, mirth and music, in harmonious blending. Tickets at G. A. Newhall's, 207 Essex street, on Monday Feb. 23.

At the fourth Quarterly Conference of the Washington street M. E. Church held Sunday afternoon, Dr. L. P. Thayer, presiding, it was unanimously voted to ask the return of Rev. C. N. Smith as pastor for another year. The following persons were elected as officers of the church for the ensuing year:—Board of Stewards, John Baxter, T. G. Smith, L. W. Foan, Z. W. Reed, Wm. A. Saunders, John Steele, Peter A. Sim, Walter McMath, Geo. Montreal, Wm. J. Strout; Board of Trustees, I. A. Drowne, Hiram Kimball, A. McKeen, W. W. Gilman, B. C. Bancroft, B. F. Goodwin, C. W. Jenkins, T. G. Smith.

The ladies of the weekly prayer meeting of the South Church will unite with the Woman's Christian Temperance Union in observing Tuesday next, March 3, as an all-day of prayer for the continued success of prohibition in our town. All interested in the cause, both ladies and gentlemen, are invited to come in to the parlor of the South Church at any hour from 10 A. M. to 5 P. M., with haa cnge in leaders each hour.

The new banner of the Band of Hope which the children by their efforts have secured money for, arrived to-day. It is very handsome, and will be carried by the boy who collected the most money, Frank Haskell, at the next public meeting in the Town hall. The children as well as all who contributed, will certainly take great satisfaction as they behold it.

On Sunday, Feb. 15, Miss Clara E. Sweetser was presented with the "Household Library of Poetry and Song," by the Primaay Class of the Sabbath School of the South Church of which she has been one of the faithful teachers for several years. Gertie Cole made the presentation speech. Miss Sweetser — now Mrs. Watriss is to reside in Cambridge.

One of Hathaway's baker teams was left standing on Franklin street last Sunday morning when the horse ran away and coming down Chesnut street, brought up in the yard near the PRESS office, scattering a liberal supply of beans and brown bread about. The damage to the team was about $20.

The laws of the United States allow single women 21 years of age, or any woman who is the head of a family, to enter upon government land upon the same terms as men. Many women are securing for themselves homes by these means, and they expect to become voters when the territories where they settle become States.

The spring election is rapidly drawing near, and behooves all good citizens to bestir themselves and bring out the best men for local offices, in the choice of whom fitness, not politics, should be alone regarded.

Rev. C. N. Smith will speak upon the Subject of Temperance at the Methodist Church next Sunday afternoon.

SPARKS.

Ex. driver Al. Currier was in town last Monday visiting some of his friends.

George E. Hills arrived home from the west Monday after an absence of nearly ten years. He struck for the engine house about as soon as he arrived home. He was connected with the fire department previous to his going west. He was clerk of Abel Proctor H. & L., No. 1.

Last Thursday D. B. Lord and his men were around thawing out hydrants which were found frozen up. The one on Main street at the foot of Park, one at the corner of Grove and Main, one on Beckett street, the one near Quint's farm, and two others were frozen. One on Shillaber street was frozen and had burst and will have to be replaced with a new one. A cellar in the neighborhood was flooded to the depth of a foot and a half.

Engine meetings next Monday evening.

Some of the boys attended the ball of the Salem Firemen's Relief Association last Thursday evening in Mechanic Hall. To show how the old fashioned fireman's uniform red shirt has gone out of style, it is said that only one was seen on the floor at that ball. The blue regulation is fast taking the place of the old shirt and belt.

One of the rules of the fire department of this city requires that all hose companies shall change the hose on the reel at least once a month so as to prevent it from sweating and thereby rotting it.—Waltham Record.

It is rumored that the members of Steamer No. 1, and Hose Company No. 3 are arranging for a pool tournament, to take place on their tables in a short time.

In case of any change on the Board of Engineers, the name of John H. Tibbetts has been mentioned. John A. P. Sumner would make a good Engineer as he has had a number of years experience on the Board and is a good fireman under all circumstances. It is rather early yet, though, to present names.

The Telegram of last night said that Lewis S. Peabody was one of the Committee of the Relief Association, probably meaning one of the Directors. That was not correct as he has not been on the Board of Directors since the incorporation of the Association. He was formerly one of the Trustees of the old Association. Z.

CONSULTATION FREE.

[Dr. Lighthill can be found at his office, 115 Boylston street, Boston, from 8 until 12, daily.)

FROM REV. E. W. WHITNEY,

Formerly Pastor of the Universalist Church, Peabody, Mass.

For several years I have been troubled with Catarrh, which seriously interfered with my public speaking, and which baffled all my attempts to get permanent relief. Experienced surgeons operated upon me, and I was under the care of a Boston physician for two years, but obtained no lasting benefit. I applied various medicines, but failed to get relief. I was lead by the advice of friends, to consult Dr. Lighthill. My faith was at the lowest ebb, but I am happy to say that after a few months' treatment no trace of my old trouble appears, and I have every reason to believe that the cure is permanent. I cordially recommend Dr. Lighthill to all who may be afflicted in a similar manner.

E W. WHITNEY,

Peabody, Mass., June 27. 1879.

AN INTERESTING CASE.

A statement of Mr. Clement A. Thorndike, of the firm of L. A. May & Co., 127 Union street, Lynn, Mass.

To the Public:—Having been raised almost like one from the dead by the skillful treatment of Dr. Lighthill, and to benefit similar sufferers, I make this public statement of my case. For years I was troubled with Catarrh in my head, seriously affecting and almost destroying my nasal bone; the discharge was very profuse, requiring constant blowing and hawking for relief; gradually the irritation passed into my throat, producing hoarseness and a hacking cough, and finally it affected my bronchial tubes and lungs, leaving me a victim to consumption. The cough now became distressing and almost constant, and debilitating night sweats made their appearance. I lost flesh and became greatly emaciated. I consulted medical men and used various remedies, but all efforts for relief utterly failed. In that condition, and greatly disheartened and discouraged, I applied to Dr. Lighthill, whose able and thorough examination of my case proved to me that I was in the right hands. Convinced that he fully understood my condition, and, inspired with new hope, I placed myself under his care, and very soon experienced the benefit of his treatment. One after another of the symptoms of Catarrh left me. I gained in strength and weight, my cough and night sweats disappeared, and now I am only too thankful and delighted to be able to call myself well again. Hoping that this statement may give new courage and confidence to such as may suffer as I have,

I remain, respectfully,

CLEMENT A. THORNDIKE.

Lynn, June 18, 1881

CATARRH CURED.

FROM REV. E. C. BUTLER,

Beverly, Mass.

I most heartily recommend any one afflicted with that troublesome disease, Catarrh, to Dr. Lighthill. I have full confidence in him. His treatment has had the most gratifying results in my own case, which was severe and of long standing. E. C. BUTLER,

Beverly, Mass., Oct. 29, 1879.

CURE OF DEAFNESS.

FROM RT. REV. T. F. HENDRIKEN,

Bishop of Providence. R. I.

My Dear Dr. Lighthill: Permit me to thank you most heartily for your kindness to the Sisters of our Convent. I had no idea when I consulted you on Sister Demonica's deafness that you could so quickly restore her back to hearing, but she tells me that she hears now better than she did before. For this, and your kind and successful treatment of my own deafness, I thank you. Now I would be glad to have you refer your patients to me. You know I can recommend you as a physician and surgeon, thoroughly accomplished in those departments of medicine in which you practice. I owe you a debt of gratitude, and would be glad to pay it.

Very truly and sincerely yours

Rt. Rev. T. F. HENDRIKEN.

A complete and permanent cure of

ASTHMA.

REPORT FROM MR. C. F. BOYNTON, 31 MILK STREET, BOSTON, ROOM 35.

TO THE PUBLIC.

After having spent large sums of money, and found no relief, I was induced to apply to Dr. Lighthill, at 115 Boylston street, for treatment. having suffered from asthma in the worst form for six years, and I wish to say, for the benefit of others suffering as I did that DR. LIGHTHILL'S TREATMENT HAS MADE ME A WELL MAN, and I now can enjoy life, when before it was a dread to me. This cure was performed on me over a year ago, and I can confidently pronounce it a permanent one. I hope all afflicted with that dreadful disease will avail themselves of Dr. Lighthill's skilful services, for I feel morally sure he can cure them.

Book Notices.

Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly for March is an unusually interesting number, combining as it does articles of present interest with those of permanent value. It opens with a careful study by Lisie Lester of Madame Ristori, with a portrait and several illustrations in character. Professor Charles A. Joy contributes an article on A Jersey Cattle-farm, and Oscanyan furnishes an extremely interesting paper on "The Armenians." "Something about Childrens' Books" with its quaint facsimile illustrations shows us the juvenile literature loved by our grandparents when they were boys and girls. "Pate de Foie Gras," by Nugent Robinson will appeal to the gourmet, and "Staten Island, its Past and its Present," by J. Barnitz Bacon, to the local antiquarian. The serial story "The Death-mark," reaches its twenty-fifth chapter, and there are several short stories and some beautiful poems. The miscellany is well selected and entertaining. Published by Mrs. Frank Leslie, 53, 55 and 57 Park Place, New York.

When a new drama has proved successful, it is customary for the audience to call the author before the curtain. They halve a curiosity to see what sort of man it is that created the play that has amused and instructed them. There is something very much like this in regard to our great newspapers; their editorial utterances are all anonymous, but there is generally a tradition of some half-shadowy personage who has established the journal, given it its character and constantly directs it: and the public like to have him come before the curtain now and then, to address them in his own person. This Murat Halstead, of the Cincinnati Commercial Gazette, has done in the March number of the North American Review, to which he contributes an article on "The Revival of Sectionalism." In the same number, Archdeacon Farrar presents his views on "Future Retribution," and Prof. N. K. Davis discusses "The Moral Aspects of Vivisection" in a way that brings together briefly nearly everything that any person of note has said on the subject. The other articles are one by President Gilman on Titles (chiefly scholastic), one by Judge John A. Jameson on "Speculation in Politics," and one by John W. Johnston on "Railway Land-grants."

We thought we liked cold weather. In fact, all through the hot days of summer, we kept constantly wishing for cold weather to come, and often wished for an iceberg in which to hide ourselves from the boiling, sweltering rays of the sun. And when, at last winter comes, we are happy—extremely so. But when it is with us awhile; when it gets so cold as it has been the past few weeks—that the thermometers drop clean down under the houses, and then ain't low enough—when water freezes sitting by a red-hot stove and when you wake up in the morning and find your breath congealed into an an icicle a couple of yards long we can't help thinking that it is getting a little too chilly, to say the least. "Come, gentle spring, come," for our over-coat has about played out, and our office stove has an astonishing appetite for fuel.

ARE YOU TIRED OF BEING SICK?—We want to say a word to the men, women and girls who work in stores, offices and factories. There are hundreds of thousands of you in the country. Very few of you are well. You are shut up too much and exercise too little. In this way you get sick. Your blood is bad, your digestion poor, your head often aches, you don't feel like work. Your liver, stomach and kidneys are out of order. Parker's Tonic has cured hundreds of such cases. It is pure, sure and pleasant.

VEGETABLES AND FLOWER SEEDS.—We have received from the publisher Joseph Harris, of Moreton Farm, Rochester, N. Y., his illustrated catalogue of vegetable and flower seeds for 1885. It is a neatly gotten up work of 72 pages profusely illustrated with engravings of plants, flowers and vegetables. All in want of seeds of the best quality should send to Mr. Harris for a copy of his catalogue which is sent free to all. Address Joseph Harris, Moreton Farm, Rochester, N. Y.

AGOIL ON SUGAR. W. J. Conover, Mid Lothian, Va., says a few drops of Agoil on a little sugar cures cough very promptly and as a general pain reliever. He keeps it constantly in his house. Sold in Peabody by D B. Grosvenor. Sample bottles free for trial.

Mrs. J. Lyman, Grand Rapids, Mich., says Dr. Agoil's Pills cured her of Liver Complaint and the worst forms of Dyspepsia after everything else had failed. Sold by D. P. Grosvenor.

Any of your old plugs are good frames to build on. Weare's Condition Powders will build up a run down animal more than anything else known. Weare's Powders are a dead shot for worms. Sold in Peabody by D. P. Grosvenor.

"Weare's Sure Cure for Heaves" is the only reliable remedy science has yet produced. Sold by D. P. Grosvenor.

THE WEATHER.—Lieut. Charles W. McKim, Portland, Ky., states: "For twenty years I suffered with rheumatism. During the bad weather my suffering was terrible. I was about to give up. Some one suggested the application of St. Jacobs Oil. I tried it and its relief was rapid. In half an hour I could stand up. I no longer suffer with the pains."

I CURE FITS!

When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office. It costs you nothing for a trial, and I will cure you.
Address Dr. H. G. ROOT, 183 Pearl St., New York.

CONSUMPTION

I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. Indeed, so strong is my faith in its efficacy, that I will send TWO BOTTLES FREE, together with a VALUABLE TREATISE on this disease, to any sufferer. Give Express and P. O. address. DR. T. A. MAYO'S

Compound Vegetable Anæsthetic.

A safe and pleasant substitute for gas and ether.

Discovered by Dr. N. K. Mayo of Boston, April 1883, subsequently administered by him in nearly two thousand cases, producing perfect slumber, being applicable to the child, the delicate sensitive woman as well as the hardy man. No ill effects have followed its use in any case, it acting rather as a vegetable tonic.

It controls the patient one-fourth longer than gas giving us time to remove from three to twenty teeth. It is with great confidence we have introduced it into our practice, giving very successful results.

A THRILLING STORY.

AS TOLD BY A MERCHANT IN TROY, N. Y.—A SURGICAL OPERATION AVOIDED.—HOW A FATHER, WIFE AND DAUGHTER ESCAPED AN AWFUL DOOM.

Of the hundreds of accounts of remarkable cures wrought by DR. KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY, none have appeared so purely astonishing as the following: The persons mentioned are among the most highly respected in the city of Troy, and the story as told by the father will prove interesting to our readers,—ED.

TROY, N. Y.

DR. KENNEDY, RONDOUT, N. Y.:—

Dear Sir: My daughter was afflicted with a severe growth of Fungus. To remove it we had resorted to almost every remedy and consulted the most prominent surgeons and physicians. Dr.—— of Troy, said that a surgical operation would be necessary, but fearing fatal results I hesitated. Some of the physicians claimed that it was caused by one thing and some by another. The Fungus was prominent and disfigured her looks. Having heard of Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE working so thoroughly on the blood I determined to try it, to see if this medicine could do what doctors had failed to do and surgeons had hardly dared to undertake. I can say in truth that the result of this trial was the complete cure of my daughter of this dreadful malady. Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY alone effected it. We used nothing else, for other things had completely failed. My daughter to-day enjoys vigorous health and to Favorite Remedy alone is the credit due. My wife also was very poor in health, due to some liver difficulty with which she had suffered a long time until she became very much reduced in flesh. A trial of Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy has resulted in the complete restoration of her health, which she had not enjoyed for years. She had gained in flesh and strength, and thus secured perfect health, and this is due entirely to DR. KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY. As for myself, being engaged in the grocery and commission business, which makes it necessary for me to test the quality of different articles, like butter, etc., my sense of taste and my stomach were seriously injured. Everything seemed to nauseate me, and fearful of dyspepsia in its most severe form, I tried DR. KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY. The first bottle afforded immediate relief, and from that day to this I can say that Favorite Remedy has restored me to perfect health. These are facts which I claim prove that Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy is the best medicine in the world for those afflicted with the above difficulties. If any one in the city of Troy doubts the truth of these statements let him come to me and I will prove them. I have recommended Favorite Remedy to hundreds and with the same good results. Yours, etc.,

WILLIAM WINDSOR,
Cor. Canal and Mount Streets, Troy, N. Y.

MALARIA.

As an anti-malarial medicine

DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S

has won golden opinions. No traveler should consider his outfit complete unless it includes a bottle of this medicine. If you are exposed to frequent changes of climate, food and water, Favorite Remedy should always be within your reach. It expels malarial poisons, and is the best preventative of chills and malarial fever in the world. It is especially offered as a trustworthy specific for the cure of Kidney and Liver complaints, Constipation and all disorders arising from an impure state of the blood. To women who suffer from any of the ills peculiar to their sex Favorite Remedy is constantly proving itself an unfailing friend—a real blessing. Address the proprietor, Dr. D. Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y. $1 bottle, 6 for $5, by all druggists.

G. A. R. LECTURE.

The lecture at the Institute last Thursday evening by George H. Patch, Esq., Military editor of the Boston Globe, under the auspices of Union Post 50 G. A. R., was well attended and very interesting. The Waverly Quartette opened the exercises with a song, and Frank E. Farnham, Esq., introduced the speaker with a few patriotic remarks. The speaker said that his lecture on Antietam was compiled from personal observation, and what he had since read. The speaker gave a glowing account of the battle and defended Gen. McClellan against the charge of disloyalty; he thought the mistakes were made by the officers holding the opinion that the army was raised for dress parade, but they soon found they were raised to suppress the rebellion. After the close of the lecture the Waverly Quartette sang "Tenting to-night." After which Mr. Patch gave an account of his capture and removal to Libby prison. He enlisted in the 19th Mass. in Aug. '61; was 17 years old, and little over five feet high, and weighed 104 pounds. He spoke of the line of battle, which was not like Magnolia or Framingham, but was irregular etc., this being before the battle of Antietam. He was lying in the woods and as the enemy approached he with the others retreated, and he ran behind a hut, where he stopped to bind up the wound of a comrade who had been shot in the leg and was bleeding to death, and this delay caused him to be captured by the Rebels. He was given in charge of a Rebel soldier about his own age, and removed to a sheltered place in the woods. Later he was accosted by the Rebel General, D. H. Hill, who asked questions concerning the strength of the Union forces, and he told him they had 300,000 men, and that if he waited till the reserve came up they would drive him into the Potomac. He was ordered to the rear for his impudence. He was removed to a hospital with an apple orchard adjoining and lived principally on apples. He was taken to Shepardtown and Winchester. In the mean time he had been reported killed in battle, but he had an opportunity to write home, using a piece of paper bag for the purpose, telling his mother that he "was going to see Richmond before the others." They started for Libby Prison; they were well treated during a 100 mile march, and got their living by being turned into a cornfield and eating the corn and green apples, this lasting nearly a week. Again they were put on cattle cars, and after a ride of 117 miles they reached Libby Prison. The food was good enough to keep a well man comfortable, but to the sick it was only aggravation. He spoke of the vermin, etc. He was finally released in the following manner:—One day an officer came in with a parole paper and he crowded up to see the paper signed, and laughed at the handwriting of the officer's assistant, and was told that if he could write any better he should do the writing. This he did on condition that he could put his own name on the parole, which was allowed, and thus he was exchanged, and experienced great joy at seeing the old flag again.

After the concert the speaker with several invited guests repared to G. A. R. hall where a baked bean supper was served at which Commander George F. Barnes presided. After supper Comrade Patch spoke in defence of himself in going before the Legislative Committee asking that the G. A. R. and other charitable institutions might be exempt from existing laws relating to lotteries. He said many comrades are past the mature age of life, and are not able to improve their condition, and as the Grand Army could take in no new blood, something had got to be done to keep up the charity fund of the Posts. He said there is another bill now before the Legislature which solves the question of the charity fund of the Posts and whether the good work done by them can continue. It provides that any town may at its annual town meeting vote to raise such a sum of money as agreed to be devoted to the charity fund of the Grand Army post in that town, to be used by them in the relief of any deserving soldier or sailor or their family. Mr. Patch also favored the Lovering pension bill.

Mr. James P. King said he was proud to meet the men who fought for their country, and made us what we are today, and as he thought of them he knew we could never pay the debt due them, and the moment such a law as Mr. Patch had spoken of is passed you would have to offer a premium to get a vote against it. The speaker regretted there had not been a larger attendance at the lecture. It seemed as if in every comer of the town everyone brought out their hobby horse to ride to keep people away, although the lecture had been annonnced six weeks before, but the people will never forget the men who fought for my country. Forget not when I am gone that while I lived I lived in the interest of the soldier. We can never pay the debt we owe them.

Mr. J. Howard Fallon said he was too young for the army and had no experience to relate, and again he was not eloquent enough to talk at a gathering the same evening that Mr. King and Mr. Patch did.

Capt. W. F. Wiley spoke against lotteries as a means of raising money and was glad there was a probability of a law to aid the charity fund of the G. A. R. He reviewed the fairs held by the Post in this town in the past, and hoped there were other ways of replenishing the charity fund. We should all put our hand as deep in our pocket as possible for the G. A. R.

The rest of the evening was spent in listening to the experience of Comrades Benj. Beckett, Jr., Wm. A. Smith, John H. Tibbetts and W. M. Ward. They were full of interesting situations and their tale of prison life and suffering on the battle field held the interest of the audience till twelve o'clock, when the company adjourned. Had we room we should like to publish the story of each.

One of the most grasping and merciless monoplies of the present day is the American Bell Telephone company, the parent and head centre of the whole telephone business. It owns or controls all the patents, and licenses subsidiary companies to do the work of operating exchanges. While most business men are content to sell or manufacture merchandise at a profit of from one-tenth to one-third the cost, this company charges a royalty of three or four times the cost of the instruments. But this is not the worst—this royalty is an annual affair. The company gets each year several hundred per cent on the cost of its goods. This seems to be but little short of extortion but even this does not tell the whole story. No subsidiary company can get a license to do business without giving to this powerful tyrant one-half of all its capital stock. The demands of this greedy monopoly are so great as to make the narration of them read like some highly imaginative tale, but the story is a true incident of daily business.—Southbridge Journal.

COME AND GET THE DOG.—If any gentleman in town misses an enormous Newfoundland dog dyed with a black and white speckled nose and a beery eye, he can find him during the day time sleeping under a desk in the counting room at the Day office, and during the night season howling blue murder in front of the office door. The dog is too homely to win affection, but is big enough to command respect particuarly as no one in the Day office is on sufficient terms of intimacy to more than suggest that he get out. The owner is requested to call him off before some timid compositor double leads him and a proof of him is taken in the ash heap. It might not be possible to conform to his notions of display, but if he doesn't leave pretty soon we promise him a position top of column and next to pure reading about good dogs that go home before dark and catch the beef bone.—New London Day.

THE RAYMOND EXCURSIONS TO CALIFORNIA.—The transcontinental excursions under the management of Messrs. Raymond & Whitcomb are deservedly very popular. They furnish a greater amount of comfort and luxury than the individual tourist can provide for himself, and provide, also, many, special sight-seeing advantages through special train service, stops at interesting points, etc. The enterprising firm makes its fifth annual announcement of spring trips to Colorado and California, and it is more inviting than ever before. There are to be three days of departure—April 16, 23, and 30,—each party following the same programme. The outward journey will be by the Southern route, through Kansas, Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona, and Southern California, and the homeward one by the Central route, through Nevada, Utah, Wyoming, and Nebraska. A detour of over one thousand miles will be made in Colorado in order to visit some of the most wonderful scenic points in the Rocky Mountains. A circular gives full details of these magnificent excursions, and this may be had by addressing W. Raymond, 240 Washington street, Boston.

Mr. Frank A. Wendell, the well-known plumber has increased his room and facilities at his establishment on North street, that he may be better able to meet the demands which his increasing business necessitates. There is now connected with his plumbing department a large work-shop, which will greatly add to his means of doing work rapidly and in the best manner. Mr. Wendell gives his personal attention to all work intrusted to his care, and by careful and persistent efforts to give satisfaction to his patrons, he has built up quite a business.—Observer.

OIL FROM NATURE'S WELLS.—The skin on the head is kept soft and flexible by a secretion from the oil glands. When these are clogged the hair dries and falls off. Parker's Hair Balsam renews their action, restores the original color to the hair and makes it soft and glossy. It also eradicates dandruff. Not greasy, not a dye, deliciously perfumed. Delightful for a lady's toilet table. The best of dressings. Preferable to all similar articles because of its superior cleanliness and purity.

Mrs. J. R. Vincent's anniversary benefit occurs at the Museum April 25, and two great comedy performances are to be given on the occasion, which marks also the re-entrance of the company after the Booth engagement in Philadelphia. Elegant souvenirs with a portrait of "the dear old lady" will be distributed. Already the greatest interest is shown in the event both by the public and the profession generally, and distinguished actors have offered their services.

SKATING RINK NOTES.

The game of polo last Thursday, between three of the Salems and three of the Peabodys, to settle a dispute and give the public a chance to see a scientific game of polo, was well attended. But those who looked for such a game were doomed to disappointment. The Salem hissers were out in large numbers and did lots of work. James Brennan of Salem was referee. He evidently never saw a game of polo before and he left all important decisions to the audience. Hill of the Salems began to slug, and this got Sullivan of the Peabodys on his ear and he did some good work in that line. Felton and Sullivan neglected to play together and left all the work of defending the goal to Morrill. The Salems had a trick of having an accident to their skates every time the ball came near the goal, or when they wanted to get a little breathing spell. However this interesting game of scientific (?) polo came to an end after a play of about twenty-five minutes, by manager Reed of the Salems claiming that it was forty-five minutes the club had been on the floor. The referee did have brains enough to declare all bets off and say that he had been instructed to have forty-five minutes of actual playing time as advertised The score stood seven in favor of the Salems and four for the Peabodys. When the result was declared the audience jumped over the rail on the floor of the rink surrounding the players. What the result would have been no one knows or cares, but the public have seen all the scientific polo of that kind they want this season.

The Peabodys and Salems have arranged to play a series of seven games of polo. The first was played at the Salem rink last Friday evening. Manager Reed announced that the game would be given to the club getting the greatest number of goals in thirty minutes. Bullard of Somerville was referee. The first goal was given to the Peabodys on fouls in eight minutes. The Salems secured the second in five minutes, also the third and fourth. The whole, inside half an hour. The next will be given in the Peabody rink next Saturday night.

The finest game of polo ever played at the rink took place last evening, between the home club and the Bay States of Chelsea. The game was called at 9.05 by referee O'Mally. The first rush was secured by Felton of the home club and at once the boys settled down to work, and for one minute there was seen some polo playing, the goal was secured by the visiting club. The second rush was also obtained by our rusher and during the goal there was some fine passing by both clubs, our boys seemed to understand themselves and out played the Bay States at every point, this goal was secured by the Bay States through Murray's accidentally putting the ball into his own goal, this play was a costly error but was an excusable one. At the stage of the game things looked rather blue for our boys but they seemed to make up their mind that play they must and secured the next goal in six and one-half minutes by Felton. The fourth rush was obtained by Felton, amid great applause. Morrill made some of the finest stops ever seen in any polo game here. The ball was taken several times to the Peabodys goal but was lost. This goal was taken in eight minutes by Foy of the Bay States. Our boys never played as they did last evening and it seemed her hard after playing such a game o be obliged to succumb to a defeat. Goulding did not play, his place being filled by Murray. It would be a hard task to mention all the fine plays but both clubs won great applause from the large audience present. The Bay States are a fine set of gentlemen and during their short stay here won many friends. They came in a special horse car from Chelsea. The Peabodys meet them on Thursday evening at Chelsea.

On Thursday evening manager Reed of the Salem rink is to have a three mile race for a set of gold medals, the winner winning them this time is entitled to them.

The Salems are playing a great game and by such playing are sure of securing the gold medals in their league. They play to-morrow night at the Gloucester benefit at the latter's rink and Saturday evening here in the second game of the series.

The polo game on the ice last Monday between the High school club of Salem and the High school club of Peabody, resulted in the first game standing 3 to 2 in favor of the Salems and the second game was three straight for the Salems.

This hasn't been a good week for the Peabodys at polo.

The Maldens have withdrawn from the League.

Rink, rink, rink. Not an exchange comes to our tables but heralds glad rinkles from Coloseum rinks, Casino rinks, Union rinks and rinks. The entire population seems to be whirling on rollers, and the rink rules the roost. Verily we marvel not that this is a dizzy world.

SOUTH PEABODY.

We regret to learn that Mr. Luther Oliver has had a relapse of his sickness and is now very sick at his home on Lynn street.

The L. & B. R. R. Co., have been very busy the past week digging the ice from the track.

Mr. Geo. Davis had a very sick horse last week, but he is now able to work him.

The carpenters have the new house of Mr. Joel Needham's on County St., raised and shingled. It is a story and a half house and very pleasantly located. It will be occupied by his son, Frank O. Needham. Mr. H. Wesley Williams is doing the work.

The February meeting of the Ladies' Aid Society will be held at the house of Mrs. Emily Dakin on Lynn street, Thursday evening. A full attendance is requested.

The second crop of ice in Brown's pond is fourteen inches thick and of excellent quality.

Mr. J. B. Newhall is mentioned for surveyor in this part of the town and we hope to see him elected.

Don't forget the meeting at the school house hall this evening. A full attendance is requested.

A party of twenty-five called on the pastor, Rev. J. W. Colwell, Monday evening, and took him by storm, after the surprise the party were invited in, and a general good time was indulged in by all present. Supper was served about 10 o'clock after which the party broke up all departing to their respective homes.

Mr. John Tapley, has gone to New York, and will remain with his daughter, Mrs. H.C.Chesley, for the present.

Mr. Orlando F. Newhall had a number of the products of his green house on exhibition at Horticultural Hall, Boston, last week.

Last chance, if you want to get an article in the warrant, hand it in before Friday.

Mr. Thomas Clothey took the second prize at the Beverly Skating Carnival at Beverly last night, and Willie S. Ward, Eddie Pierce and others were present in costume.

Last Saturday as Willie Clifford, eight years of age, was sliding down Oak street hill, with one hand on the point of his sled runner, he came in contact with another sled and the ends of his fingers were badly cut and bruised.

A fellow was around selling rubber stamps last week. Nearly everybody got their name in a pencil holder, and others got a full set of envelope, letter and bill-head stamp all of which will be useless in a short time as there is no durability to the things.

Undismayed by the failure of the tremendous storm that he predicted for last month, but which did not come off at the time, Wiggins is now reported to have set the 17th-19th of next March for the performance. It is to be a sort of tornado-blizzard-typhoon-hurricane-cyclone arrangement.

An act has been passed by both branches of the Legislature, and has received the Governor's approval, by which the use of the new ballot boxes is dispensed with at meetings held for the election of town officers. Therefore the old ballot boxes will be used as usual at the next town meeting.

The wife of Mr. Frank Upton, brother of Mr. Edgar Upton, lost his wife a few days ago, her death occurring after confinement. They resided at Mento Park, N. J. Relatives in this town were notified and attended the funeral. The deceased leaves a husband and three children.

PEABODY.

A party of thirty came over from Lynn last night accompanied by music and gave Miss Lucy Shackley a surprise party. A collation was served and the usual good time enjoyed.

The polo game between the Peabody High School and the Salem High School resulted in two goals for the Salem. Time 35 and 45 minutes respectively, and the game was given up on account of the poor condition of the ice.

The shipments of leather for the past week ending Feb 21, were 4142 rolls, 433 bundles, 200 sides, 64 bags and 15 barrels of leather and 77 rolls of skins, one hide and three calfskins.

Mr. Phillip Carbrey died last Saturday after a short illness of Bright's disease. Mr. Carbrey was well known and about 24 years of age. He was a member of several local societies and had many friends. His funeral took place from St. John's Church Monday and was attended by over 200 men in line. The different organizations contributed many beautiful flowers including a cross, pillow and other emblems beside bouquets.

Mr. Wm. F. Sawyer has an anouncement of unusual interest to our lady readers to-day. The bargains Sawyer offers are all genuine and can be relied upon. Doing his own buying, and paying cash puts him on equal footing with the largest firms in the country.

Mr. and Mrs. N. M. Quint and Mr. and Mrs. David Lord have returned from Washington, D. C. Mr. Quint met with an accident there spraining his ankle.

For years past, when comparatively little snow had fallen, the man with the notched stick was constantly heard from through the daily papers, stating the number of snow falls. Where is the idiot this winter, that he don't twitter and enlighten the yearning public?

The town has received a proposition from Mr. C. C. Rollins of Boston to furnish a stone crusher for the use of the town at a reasonable rate, and thereby avoiding the necessity of purchasing one.

Mr. B. D. Hill of the Boston Globe has recovered from his recent illness and resumed his duties.

Ex-Mayor Houston of Portland, Me., spent Washington's birth day with his brother, Mr. Wm. Houston, of this town.

Mr. James P. King presided at the Farmers's Institute at Ipswich yesterday.

A delegation from the town were present at Salem last Monday, when the three degrees of masonry were exemplified by the Grand Officers.

A citizen's caucus will be held at town hall next Saturday evening for the purpose of nominating town officers.

The Unitarian fair is postponed until next Wednesday, Mch. 4th.

The Spiritualist have another masquerade party tonight at Essex Hall.

An exchange says: "We throw away too much money." Jes so! All newspaper men do it. You see they have great gobs of money—more than they know what to do with, and being generous-hearted they scatter it around promiscuously. It is principally scattered around among delinquent subscribers.

The Mason & Hamlin Organ & Piano Company have just issued its first of a series of plates, which when completed will embrace the photographs of all persons in this country occupying important positions in the various departments of the musical profession. The first plate, now out, contains excellent likenesses of fifty-three of the most prominent pianists in New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore and the West. The next plate will be devoted to the pictures of prominent organists. Copies of the first plate will be sent by mail pre-paid to any address on receipt of $1.00. Address Mason & Hamlin, Boston.

A petition with a large list of names appended, goes from this city to the legislature asking that church property, like all other property, may be liable to taxation. We hope the prayer of the petitioners may be granted. The state has no soul to save and therefore has no religion of its own, and no right to tax the people, indirectly, for the benefit of organizations in which they have no public or political interest. Everybody should be protected in their right to worship God according to their own consciences; and there the action of government in religion should end.—Merrimac Valley Visitor.

Some young ladies called our attention the other evening to the practice too common among our young men of not wearing gloves, at dancing parties, thereby soiling their dresses. They wish the young gentlemen to wear gloves, or at least use some precaution, not so much for style as to save their dresses.

I was thoroughly disgusted at the rink last Thursday night at the conduct of the audience. Salem turned in a lot of "plug uglies" and they congregated on one side of the rink and kept up a continual racket with their S-A-L-E-M rah! rah! and again when the opposite side made a point the hisses came as strong. There was no police discipline and the managers of the rink could say nothing as they had leased the rink to outside parties. Such things can but injure the tone of the rink, and disgust those who would enjoy a game of polo, with proper restrictions.

My little report of a conversation last week concerning the editor of the Salem Gazette caused that distinguished individual to exhibit a degree of life surprising to his acquaintances. He tried to recognize in my bray and long ears the editor of this paper. Now as long as I write this column, I shall say what I please and I would advise the Gazette to fill up the space devoted to me with patent medicine cuts or use it to air his own chances of getting an office by giving "taffy" to the farmers.

I did not see in your last issue an account of the scalding accident not far from Washington street. There was quite a singular coincidence connected with it. Ten years ago a little sister was playing around the stove, when a tea-kettle of boiling water was knocked off and the child was badly scalded. It was just ten years from the time of the first accident to that of the other and the family had been speaking about it that day and when the accident happened the frantic agony of the mother might be imagined. It was a singular co-incidence.

When the leader of a flock of sheep jumps any obstruction, that may be in the way, the whole lot follow. If the leader jumps at a certain place, the flock will all jump at the same point. This was clearly illustrated last week when the Evening Telegram copied from the Salem Gazette an article in reply to what appeared in this column. But the Telegram apes the Gazette in everything, why not in this?

One of my friends, upward of forty years of age and married besides, hands me the following, called "hugging bees as a winter pastime" and suggests that it be used as an offset to the skating rink, and the proceeds to be given to the poor. He fixes the scale of prices as follows: Girls between the ages of 17 and 18, thirty-five cents per minute, between 18 and 20, 50 cents per minute, schoolmarms 40 cents per minute, widows from 10 to 50 cents, grass windows (young) $1.00, old maids 3 cents or two for five, time not limited. Ministers to come in free and editors to pay one half in advertising, neither being allowed to participate until the rest are through.

Lena—Yes your uncle is a mean man. Any man who is able physically to support his family, but who allows his wife to work in a paste shop to support herself, and do her washing nights, or Sundays, while he loafs abou the street is a very mean man.

From sheer force of habit, I presume, one of our oldest citizens went into Pickering's store the other day and repeated the stale falsehood about the number of fish he caught through the ice. It was the same story he told in the same place last year. As there is no competition in fish stories, what is the use of burdening one's soul in that way?

There was a lively circus in a certain business office the other day not half a mile from the square. "Why don't you pay that bill?" asked B., peremptorally. "This is my office and I would like to know who you are talking to in that style," said C. "You," was the reply. "You're a—puppy," shouted C. Then they fit and gouged and would have gouged and fit and swore, but for the interference of friends. Slow music and no arrests.

A clergyman at Dundee, remarked, a few evenings since, that it would be well for all the churches to unite and hold Thursday evening prayer meeting at the rink—most of the congregations being usually found there.

Since Cleveland's election the horny-handed Dr. Loring appears to have lost his interest in the proposition to elevate the agricultural bureau to the level of a cabinet place.—Brockton Gazette.

The Woburn Journal is jubilant over the prospect of a new railroad, or rather an extension of the Lowell road to Wilmington, making a through track. It has been talked of for a long time. The Journal says last week: The construction of the extension is a sure thing—no doubt about it. The Railroad Company see now that the people of Woburn want it—heretofore they have had some doubts about the condition of the public pulse on the subject. We beg to remind the Journal that the Lowell road now has a manager in the person of Lucius Tuttle, Esq., who is always alive to the wants of his patrons, and unless we are greatly mistaken, the road will be more popular than it has for years.

DARK DAYS.

ing of recollection of what her wrong, her frenzy, had prompted her hand to do unknowingly, I dared to hope that any chance which remained of a revelation of the truth was reduced to a minimum. These results of my investigations and inquiries gave me immense relief, and my heart was all but gay as, armed with the proofs of the first Lady Ferrand's death, I hurried back to Seville, Philippa, and the happiness which I vowed should be mine.

We were married. Philippa and I were married! Married; and a few months ago I sat lonely, miserable and heart-broken, deeming that the one I loved was lost to me forever! What matters the things which have filled those months, and made them the most painful of my life? To-day we are man and wife, joined together till death us do part!

I said no word as to the result of my inquiries in Liverpool. I had no difficulty in persuading Philippa, who in some things was as simple and trusting as a child, that it was necessary, or at least advisable, she should be married under the name which her first certificate of marriage affected to bestow upon her. She signed her name for the last it may, for aught I know, have also been the first time, as Philippa Ferrand; and I noticed that she shuddered as she formed the letters.

Although my bride was by birth half a Spaniard, and although I had by now in many ways conformed to the Spanish mode of life, we were still English enough to look upon going away somewhere for a honeymoon as indispensable. It would be but a short trip; and as my mother in our absence would be left at Seville alone, or with the servants only, we did not care to go very far away. It so happened that, although so close to Cadiz, we had not yet paid that town a visit, and thought the present a capital opportunity for so doing.

To Cadiz we went, and stayed several days at the Hotel de Paris. We liked the white walled town, rising and shining above the dark blue sea, like, as I have so nowhere seen it described, a white pearl in a crown of sapphires; or, as the Gaditanos call it, tazita de plata, a silver cup. We liked the rows of tall terrace topped houses. We liked the movement and bustle on the quays and in the port. We liked the walks on the broad granite ramparts, and the lovely view of the busy bay and country beyond it; but all the same we agreed that Cadiz bore no comparison to our beautiful Seville, and the sooner we returned to that gay city the better.

Now that I had gained my desire, was I happy? After all that had passed, could I have been happy during those early days of our wedded life? As I look back upon them I sit and muse, trying in vain to answer the question to my own satisfaction. Philippa loved me—she was my wife; come good, come evil, she was mine forever. In so much I was happy, thrice happy. Could I have lived but for the present my bliss would have known no alloy.

But there was the past! I could not altogether forget the path which had led to such happiness as now was mine. I could be thankful that I alone knew all the horrors and dangers with which that path was studded. I alone knew the secret of that one night. Although I could keep it forever, would it be always a secret?

Yes, and there was the future. Behind the happiness which was mine at present lurked a dread as to what the future had in store for me—for us. It was a dread which day by day grew stronger. The greater my happiness the more dreadful the thought of its being wrecked. The feeling that my house of joy was built upon sand was always obtruding on my most blissful hours, and not, I knew, without good reasons.

Philippa's very avoidance of speaking of her past life lent some justification to my gloomy forebodings. Not once did Sir Mervyn Ferrand's name pass between my wife and me. Not once did she ask me for any further particulars concerning the events of that night upon which, in the height of her short lived mania, she reached my cottage. True that upon becoming my wife, and beginning a new and happier stage of life, it might be but natural for her to wish to consign to oblivion the wrong, the shame, the suffering wrought by a villain's craft; yet I was so mixed up in the catastrophe that silence on the subject seemed strange. Her reticence alarmed me. I fancied it must be caused by some vague uneasiness connected with that night—some doubt which she dared not seek to set at rest. It is, I know, not unusual for women, after their recovery from that mysterious disease which had for a while driven my poor girl distraught, to be able to recall and accurately describe the delusions which had afflicted them during those wandering hours. I myself had in one or two cases noticed this peculiarity, and the authorities which I had studied during Philippa's illness mention it as an indisputable fact. My great dread was that at some moment, perhaps when our happiness was as perfect as it could be, some simple chance, some allusion to certain events, even the bare mention of a name, might supply the missing link, and the fearful truth would be revealed to my wife.

Our return journey to Seville was made by water. Although the Guadalquiver is not a very interesting river, we thought travelling by steamer would be a pleasant change from the journeys in the hot, stuffy, slow trains, full from end to end with the odor of garlic and tobacco; so early one morning we left Cadiz, and were soon steaming up the dull, sluggish, turbid river, with the great flat stretches of swamp land on either hand.

There were not many passengers on board the steamer. The boat itself was a wretched affair, and before an hour was over we wished we had chosen the train as a mode of transit. Mile after mile of the level deserted land through which the river flows passed by, and presented no objects of interest greater than herds of cattle or flights of aquatic birds. Save that Philippa was by my side, it was the dullest journey I ever made.

Of course there were English tourists on board; no spot is complete without them. Two of them, young men, and apparently gentlemen, had seated themselves near us, and after the usual admiring glances at my beautiful Philippa, commenced a desultory talk with each other.

From the unrestrained way in which they spoke, and from the strength of some of their unfavorable comments on the scenery, or lack of scenery, it was clear that they took us for natives, before whom they could speak without being understood. Philippa of course looked a thorough Spaniard, and my own face had become so tanned by the sun that I might have been of any nationality.

The young fellows chatted on, quite oblivious to the fact that two of their neighbors understood every word they spoke. For some time I listened with great amusement; then the lulling motion of the steamer, the sluggish muddy flow of the stream, the monotonous banks past which we stole, exercised a soporific effect upon me, and I began to doze and dream.

Through my dreams I heard a name, a hated name, spoken clearly and distinctly. I started and opened my eyes. Philippa's head was stretched forward as if she was intent upon catching some expected words spoken by another.

"Sir Mervyn Ferrand," I heard one of our fellow-voyagers repeat. "Yes, I remember him—tall, good-looking man. Where is he now? He was a bad lot."

"Surely you read or heard about it?" said his companion in a tone of surprise.

I touched my wife's arm. "Come away, Philippa," I said.

I touched my wife's arm. "Come away, Philippa," I said.

She made a motion of dissent. Again I urged her. She shook her head pettishly.

"Ah! I forgot where you have been for months," said the second tourist, laughing; "out of the pale of civilization and newspapers. Well, Ferrand was murdered—shot dead!"

"Philippa, dearest, come, I implore you," I whispered.

It was too late! The look on her face told me that nothing would now move her—nothing. She would hear the dreadful truth, told perhaps with distorted details. I groaned inwardly. The moment I had so long dreaded had come. If I dragged her away by force—if I interrupted the speakers—what good could it do? She had heard enough. She would force me to tell her the rest. I could only pray that she would in no way associate herself with the man's death.

"Murdered! Poor fellow! Who murdered him?" I heard the first speaker say.

"No one knows. He was shot dead on a country roadside just as that fearful snow storm of last winter began. It seems almost incredible, but the snow drifted over him, and until it melted the crime was not discovered. In the interval the murderer had, of course, got clean away."

"Poor devil! I never heard any good of him; but what an end!"

I was not looking at the speakers. I was noting every change in my wife's face. I saw the color fly from her cheek. I saw her lips and throat working convulsively, as though she was trying to articulate. I saw her dark brows contract as in anguish. I knew that she was clasping her hands together, as was her way when agitated. Suddenly she turned her eyes to mine, and in her eyes was a look of horror which told me that the very worst had come to pass—that the dread which had haunted me was realized! Then, with a low moan, she sank white and senseless on my shoulder.

Though in a whirl of despair, I believe that I assumed a kind of mechanical calm. I seem to remember that the two English tourists offered their assistance, that, as we bore Philippa to an extemporized couch in the shadiest and coolest place we could find, I smiled, and attributed my wife's fainting fit to the heat of the sun, the smell of engines, or something of that kind. Little did those young men guess what their chance words had wrought. Little could they think that in speaking of Sir Mervyn Ferrand's death they had, perhaps, wrecked the happiness of two lives. My heart was full of grief and fear, but I believe I bore myself bravely.

In spite of such restoratives as we could administer, Philippa's swoon lasted for a considerable time. I troubled little about that fact. Indeed, to me it seemed well that syncope should have supervened, and, for a time, banished the dreadful memories which had so suddenly invaded her brain. Could such a thing have been possible, I would almost have wished that her insensibility would continue until we reached Seville. But it was not to be so. By and by she sighed deeply, and her eyes opened. Consciousness and all its dreaded sequence was hers once more.

I spoke to her, but she made no reply. She turned her eyes from mine; she shunned my gaze; she even seemed to shrink from the touch of my hand. During the remainder of that dreary journey not one word passed her lips. She lay with her face turned to the side of the vessel, heedless of the curious glances from fellow-passengers, heedless of my whispered words of love; heedless of all save her own thoughts—thoughts which led her, I trembled to picture whither.

Through all those long sultry hours, while the wretched steamboat plowed its way up the broad muddy stream, I sat beside her, trying to find some way out of our sorrow. Alas! every road was stopped by the impassable obstacle of Philippa's knowledge of what she had done. For she knew it, I was certain. That look in her eyes had told me so much. The duration of her insanity had been so short that I could gather no comfort from the fact that by some merciful arrangement maniacs who recover their erring senses are troubled little by the deeds they have done in their moments of madness. I felt that in my wife's case my only hope was to endeavor by argument to bring her to my own way of thinking; that is, to consider herself unaccountable by any law, human or divine, for her actions at the time. But I doubted if her sensitive, impulsive nature could ever be induced to take this view of her act. I doubted, had she not been the woman I loved with a passionate love, if I could have quite absorbed her from the crime, with the remembrance of her words, "Basil, did you ever hate a man?" still with me.

Yet, strange anomaly, I would, in fair fight, of course, have shot that man through the heart and have gloried in the deed. But then Philippa was a woman, and had she not been the woman I loved I might have shrunk from the one who, even in her madness, was urged to take such fearful vengeance.

I smiled bitterly as I thought how a chance breath of wind had tumbled my house of cards to the ground. I smiled almost triumphantly as I told myself that, come what might—misery—shame—death—I had won and held for a week the one desire of my life. Nothing could deprive me of that memory.

Home at last! Still silent, or answering my questions by monosyllables, Philippa was brought by me to our once happy home in Seville. My mother with arch smiles of welcome on her comely face, was at the gate of the patio ready to receive us. As she saw her a kind of shiver ran through my poor love's frame. She let my mother embrace and caress her without any display of reciprocal affection.

"Philippa is ill," I said, in explanation. "I will take her to her room."

I led her to the apartment which my mother had in our absence fitted up for us. It was gay and beautiful with flowers, and there were many other careful little evidences of the hearty welcome which was waiting us. Philippa noticed nothing. I closed the door and turned toward my wife.

She looked at me with those wondrous dark eyes, which seemed to search my very soul. "Basil," she said, in a low, solemn voice, "tell me—tell me the truth. What had I done that night?"

CHAPTER XI.

SPECIAL PLEADING.

It was over! She knew! The hope which may have buoyed my spirits that Philippa's agitation at learning of Sir Mervyn Ferrand's death was but due to the fact that she once loved the man entirely vanished. I could see no loophole of escape, no possibility of persuading her that she was fancying horrors which had never taken place. Moreover, although I would have given my life to have saved her from the knowledge of this thing, I could not meet the eyes of her I loved, and lie to her.

I did indeed, if but for the sake of gaining time, attempt to stammer out some evasive answer; but she interrupted me before I had spoken five words.

"Why do I ask?" she echoed. "I knew it all—all—all! In dreams it has come to me—the whitened road—the dull, dead face—the whirling snow! In dreams I have stood over him, and said to myself, 'He is dead!' But, Basil, my love, my husband, I thought it was but a dream. I drove it away. I said, 'It must be a dream. I hated him, and so I dreamed that I killed him.' Basil, dearest Basil, tell me, if you can, that I dreamed it!"

Her voice sank into accents of piteous entreaty. She looked at me yearningly.

"Dearest, it must have been a dream," I said.

She threw out her arms wildly. "No, no. It was no dream. Even now I see myself standing in the night over that motionless form. I can feel the cold air on my cheek. I can see myself flying through the snow. Basil, I hated that man and I killed him!"

The tears were streaming down my cheeks. I seized her hands and strove to draw her to me. She tore herself from my grasp, and throwing herself wildly on the bed, broke into a paroxysm of sobs. As I approached her she turned her head from me.

"I killed him! killed him!" she whispered in awe-struck tones. "Oh, that fearful night! It has haunted me ever since. I know not why. Now I know! He wronged me, and I killed him! killed him!"

I placed my arm around her neck and my cheek against hers. As she felt my touch she started up wildly.

"No, no!" she cried. "Touch me not! Shun me! Shrink from me! Basil, do you hear? Do you understand? I have murdered a man!"

Once more she threw herself on the bed, her whole frame quivering with anguish.

"A shamed—a ruined woman!" she muttered. "A villain's forsaken toy, and now a murderess! You have chosen your wife well, Basil!"

"Sweetest, I love you," I whispered.

"Love me! How can you love me? Such love is not holy. If you love me, aid me to die, Basil! Give me something that will kill me! Why did you save my life?"

"Because I loved you, then, as I love you now."

She was silent, and I hoped was growing calmer. I was but waiting for the first shock of her newly-born knowledge to pass away, in order to reason with her, and show her that by every moral law she was guiltless of the fearful crime. Suddenly she turned to me.

"How did I kill him?" she said, with a shudder.

"Dearest, rest. We will talk again presently."

"How did I kill him?" she repeated with vehemence.

"He was found shot through the heart," I answered, reluctantly.

"Shot through his heart—his wicked heart! Shot by me! How could I have shot him? With what? Basil, tell me all, or I shall go mad? I will not have the smallest thing concealed. I will know all!"

"He was shot with a pistol."

"A pistol! a pistol! How did I come by it? Where is it?"

"I threw it away."

"You? Then you knew!"

I bowed my head. I felt that concealment was useless. She must know all.

I told her everything. I told her how she had promised to come to me; how, as she did not keep that promise, I went in search of her. I told her how she had swept past me in the snow storm; how I had overtaken her. I repeated her wild words, and told her how the fatal weapon had fallen at my feet, and how I had, on the impulse of the moment, buried it away into the night; how she had broken away from me, and fled down the lonely road; how, excited and terrified by her words, I had gone on to learn their meaning; how I had found the body of Sir Mervyn Ferrand; how, without thought of concealing the deed, I had laid the dead man by the roadside; how I had rushed home and found her, Philippa, waiting for me, and in the full height of temporary insanity. I told her all this, and I swore that from the moment I discovered that her senses had gone astray I held her, although she had done so dreadful a deed, as innocent of crime as when she slept, a babe, on her mother's breast.

She listened to me with fixed, dilated eyes. She interrupted me neither by word nor gesture; but when I had finished speaking she covered her face with her hands, and great tears trickled through her fingers. "No hope! No hope!" she cried. "Oh, Basil, I dared to hope that something you would tell me would show me it was not my hand which did this thing! My love, my own love, we have been so happy while I could persuade myself all this was a dream! We shall be happy no more, Basil!"

Although she still shrank from me, by force I drew her to me, and laid that poor head on my shoulder. I stroked the smooth black silky hair, I kissed the white forehead, and used every endearing and soothing expression that love such as mine could suggest. In vain! The moment I loosened my hold my wife fled from my side.

"Basil," she cried, "you knew it! You knew the blood of a man was on my hands! Again I say such a love is not holy!"

"Dearest, again I tell you that in my eyes—if the truth were known, in the eyes of all—you are innocent as a babe."

She shook her head hopelessly. I saw that nothing at present could move her. Perhaps it was more than I had a right to expect. So for the time I gave up arguing. I begged her for my sake to retire to rest. I gave her a soothing draught. I sat by her for hours, and held her hand, until at last her eyelids fell, and, worn out by grief, she slept.

Oh, how right I had been in choosing flight! Although a cursed chance had revealed what I fondly hoped would be forever buried in oblivion, how right I had been! Had the hands of justice grasped my sweet wife, although she might no doubt have been found guiltless, the trial, the exposure, would have killed her. Thank heaven, she was safe, and amenable only to the tribunal of her own sensitive conscience!

When I heard her breathing grow regular and knew that she was in a deep sleep, I pressed my lips gently to her fair cheek and left her. I went in search of my mother, and made the best tale I could think of to account for Philippa's indisposition. I forced myself to wear a smiling face, and to listen with a show of interest to the account my mother gave me of certain difficulties which had during my absence arisen with some of the native servants. But there was nothing which could really interest me when I thought of my poor love lying there sleeping, to wake, alas! to sorrow and remorse. No wonder that, as soon as I had spent with my mother the smallest portion of time which filial duty and gratitude exacted, I fled back to Philippa's bedside.

I watched beside her until she awoke—until her splendid dark eyes unveiled themselves. I leaned over and kissed her passionately. Between sleeping and waking, while consciousness was yet in abeyance, she returned by caresses. Then came back memory and its terrors.

"Leave me," she said; "I am a murderess!"

Once more I denied it; once more I told her she was innocent. My only hope was that by continued argument I might in time ease her mind. She listened almost apathetically. I grew eloquent and passionate. Was I not pleading for my own sake as well as hers? If I could but persuade her she was unaccountable for what she had done, some remnant of the happiness which a few days ago I had promised myself might even now be left.

"Basil," she whispered, "I have been dreaming horrible things. Will they try me—and hang me?"

"We are in Spain, dearest. Even if you were guilty, the English law could not reach you."

She started. "And it was for this you hurried to Spain? To save me from a felon's death?"

"To save you from what, in your state at the time, you could not bear. I say again you are innocent, but I dare not risk the trial."

She was silent for some minutes; then she spoke.

"I am proud, passionate, wicked," she said; "but I could never have meant to do this. I was mad! I must have been mad! Basil, you could tell them I was mad. They would believe you and forgive me."

She looked at me imploringly.

"I could stand up," I said, "and state on oath that you were at the time in a raging delirium. I could pledge my professional reputation that your actions were the result of madness. Fear nothing on that score, my wife."

I spoke boldly, but as I spoke a thought shot through me—a thought which blanched my cheek and brought the beads of perspiration to my brow. I knew enough of law to be aware that a husband could not in a criminal case give evidence for or against his wife. My marriage with Philippa had deprived her of the benefit of my testimony as to her insanity. I trembled like a leaf as I pictured what might happen in the event of her being tried for the murder of Sir Mervyn Ferrand. The very nurses had but seen her sane. No one but myself and perhaps my servant had seen her in her madness.

My dismay was such that I was bound to leave the room in order to recover my presence of mind. Again and again I thanked heaven that we were on foreign soil. The thought that my unreasoning love might have destroyed her I loved was almost more than I could bear.

I fancy I have lingered long enough over that terrible time when my wife first learned that the dream which had haunted her was reality—that her hand had unknowingly avenged her supposed and premeditated wrong. Let me but say that the mental anguish into which the knowledge plunged her was not unattended by physical evil. In fact, for many days my poor girl was ill, very ill. My mother and I nursed her with every care, and by and by youth and a splendid constitution reasserted themselves, and, a shadow of her former self, she was able to leave her bed. My mother was tenderness itself to her daughter. She knew nothing of the true cause of her illness; indeed, she blamed me roundly for not having taken proper care of my beautiful bride, and vowed laughingly that for the future nothing should induce her to trust Philippa out of her sight.

Now that Philippa knew all she had done, I thought it better to tell her that, although he had no intention of so doing, Sir Mervyn Ferrand, in causing a mock marriage to be celebrated, had by a strange chance really made her his wife. This gave her little comfort. "It makes my crime the greater," she said, bitterly. "I have killed my husband instead of my seducer! I am not fit to live!"

Weeks went by. Philippa gradually grew stronger, and, what was even more a cause of joy to me, calmer and more reasonable on a certain subject. With all the power I could bring to bear I had never ceased to impress upon her that morally she was innocent, and I believed my words were bearing fruit. Her fits of mental anguish and self-reproach grew of less frequent occurrence. She did not, whenever we were alone, continually harp on her crime. Calm seemed to settle upon us once more, and I ventured to hope that the great physician, Time, would one day bring to my wife's heart something that might be called sorrowful happiness; but I knew I must wait years and years for this.

She was changed, greatly changed. Her lips seldom smiled; her eyes never brightened, unless when she saw me drawing near. She seemed older and graver. But I knew, in spite of all, she loved me with a deathless love.

Although at last we had ceased to discuss the sorrow of our life, I suspected it was seldom absent from her mind. Sometimes as I lay beside her I heard her moaning and talking in her troubled dreams, and too well I knew the cause. As my arm stole round her, and assured her of the safety and certainty of my great love, in my heart I cursed the dead man whose evil deed had brought such lasting woe on the fair head pillowed on my bosom. Ah me! what life might have been for us two, now that love reigned between us!

Once—it was shortly after Philippa began to creep, a weak invalid, about the fragrant patio—she said to me, with evident meaning in her voice:

"Basil, do you see the London papers?"

"Basil, do you see the London papers?"

"Sometimes—not always. I have almost forgotten England."

"Promise me you will see them every day."

"I will, if you wish; but why?"

Her voice sank.

"Can you not guess? Basil, listen. I have consented to be guided by you. I am praying that the day may come when I shall think as you think. But what if an innocent person were accused of the crime I have committed? Then there is but one course; you could urge nothing against it. Promise me you will see the paper every day as soon as it reaches here. I shall have no peace unless you do."

I promised fearlessly. Justice does sometimes make mistakes, but not such a mistake as the one hinted at by Philippa. No; Sir Mervyn Ferrand's death was a mystery never to be solved. So, to set my poor wife at ease on the matter, I wrote and ordered that The Times should be posted to me every day.

CHAPTER XII.

TEMPTED TO DISHONOR.

I hate looking back and re-reading words which I had written while the impulse was upon me; but I fancy I have somewhere called this tale a confession; if not, I should have done so. It claims no more to be ranked as a work of art than as a work of imagination. How could it? It holds only two characters—a man and a woman. It treats but of their love and of a few months of their lives. Nevertheless, in telling it I have endeavored to conceal nothing. I have tried to describe my thoughts, my hopes, my fears, my sorrows, my love and my joys, as they really were. I have, I believe, suppressed nothing which could lead any one to condemn my actions more strongly than, it may be, they now condemn them. My wish has been to show myself as I was then—no doubt am now—a weak, selfish man; yet, for the love which he bore a woman, one willing to risk fortune, life, even honor. If I have failed in my attempt to represent myself as such a one, believe it is not from intention, but from sheer inability.

But whether I have so far succeeded or failed in my purpose I know not; but I know that in this chapter I must, perforce, fail. The language rich and powerful enough to serve my needs has yet to be invented. The writer who could in any fitting way reproduce my thoughts has yet to be born.

And yet the chapter will be a short one. It will be but the records of a few hours; but such hours! Hours during which I struggled against a temptation to commit, not only crime, but base, cowardly crime; a temptation stronger, I dare to think, than poor human nature has as yet been subjected to. My words sound bold; but listen.

Oh, that one morning! How well I can remember it! Our breakfast was just over. The quaint-shaped little table, with its snowy cloth throwing into relief the deep colors of the luscious fruit upon it, still stood in the awning-roofed patio. I was alone, my mother and Philippa having retired indoors to see about some domestic economy. I lounged lazily and at my ease. I rolled and lighted a cigarette, blaming myself as I did so for my barbarity in profaning the blossom-scented air with tobacco smoke.

Then I took from my pocket The London Times, which had arrived by the last post, and listlessly set to work to skim its lengthy columns.

I had no fear as to what the paper might contain. It was not from newspaper reports that I apprehended danger. I had, however, noticed that Philippa, when she saw me with a newspaper in my hand, eyed me anxiously and inquiringly, so that generally I contrived to glance through it when she was absent. I never permitted her to touch it until I had read it; but my only reason for this prohibition was that I feared lest some chance allusion to the mysterious and undiscovered crime might distress her. Her own far-fetched fancy that another might be accused of it gave me not a moment's uneasiness.

So I turned and doubled back the broad sheets. I ran down the topics of the day. I skimmed the leading articles. I glanced at the foreign news; paid scant attention to law reports, and disregarded altogether the money-market intelligence. At last I turned my attention to the provincial news column. A name caught my eye; a cold shiver of dread ran through me. My cigarette fell on the marble pavement, and lay there unheeded, as, with agitation which no words can describe, I read a short paragraph placed under the heading of the principal town of the county in which Roding was situated. Read!

"William Evans, the man accused of the murder of Sir Mervyn Ferrand, Bart., in January last, will be tried at these Assizes, which open on the 20th. The case, which excites considerable interest, will be taken on the first day. It is reported that although fresh evidence against the prisoner will be orthcoming, it will be of a purely circumstantial nature."

Every word of that accursed paragraph seemed like a blow falling upon my head. For some minutes I sat as one stunned. I felt my teeth chattering. I knew that my cheek was blanched. Philippa's fanciful dread had come to pass! Another—an innocent man—was bearing the blame of her own mad act! Dazed, stupid, scarcely able to comprehend what must be the full effect of what I had just read, I sat motionless, with my eyes fixed upon that fatal sheet.

The sound of my mother's pleasant voice calling to Philippa at last awoke me from my stupor. They were coming. I could not face them. I doubled up the newspaper, thrust it into my pocket, and rushed out into the street. As yet I had not dared to imagine what this intelligence might mean to us. I must have long hours of solitude, in order to decide what course should be adopted to face this, the last, the worst peril.

I passed swiftly through the iron gate. I went up the narrow street at a pace which must have made all who saw me think me mad. Whither did I go? I scarcely remember. I think it must have been to one of the public gardens, but in that hour all sense of locality left me. I went instinctively in search of solitude. I found, I know not how or where, some shady deserted spot. There, in the anguish of my heart, amid the wreck of my sand-founded happiness, I threw myself on the ground, and dug my finger nails into the dry soil.

At first I thought I was going or had gone mad.

At first I thought I was going or had gone mad. The thoughts which rushed through my mind were disjointed, and wanted coherence. An innocent man accused of the crime! To be tried on the twentieth! The twentieth! and now it is the sixteenth! Fresh evidence forthcoming! The fools—the utter fools! This the boasted detective skill! To arrest on suspicion, to bring to trial a man who must be ignorant of everything connected with the murder! What is to be done? What can be done? Oh, my wife! my poor, darling wife!

Then, I believe, I cried like a child. It seemed to me that all was lost. There was but one thing to be done—one course to be taken. My darling must give herself up to justice, and by her confession free this luckless wretch who now stands in peril of his life. She must bear the shame of the trial, and trust to human justice and the mercy which she had a right to expect. Oh, it was pitiful, pitiful! For a long while no alternative course suggested itself to me.

Human justice! What is justice? See how it can err! It can arrest, try, and—oh, horrible thought!—perhaps condemn to death an innocent man! How then would it fare with Philippa? Who, now that marriage has sealed my lips, was there to prove her madness when she slew that man? I raged at the thought. It seemed to me that we were hard and fast in the toils. I might, it is true, call William, my servant, to swear that her manner was strange and wild upon that night. I might call the nurses to prove that when first they saw her she was recovering from an attack of mania. But would they be credited? Would not a clever lawyer soon convince twelve ordinary men that it was not her madness which prompted the crime, but the crime which produced the madness? We were indeed meshed and bound; hemmed in on every side; helpless and, it seemed, hopeless!

And Philippa must be told this! I must tell her! How could I nerve myself to make the truth known to her—now, of all times, when her health was all but restored; when a kind of sad but placid acquiescence in what fate had wrought seemed to be gradually coming over her; now, when I was once more building up hopes of happiness for her as well as for me! For I knew—ah! think of this, and pity me—that before another half year should pass there might be given to my wife and me a gift which would go far toward sweeping away the memories of gloom and horror which had of late spread over our lives. I even dared to hope, to feel certain, that as she gazed into baby eyes, as she pressed a tiny head to her bosom, some, nay, much of the lost sweetness and glory of life might return to my love.

Think of this, and picture me lying on the ground that day, with the damning intelligence fresh on my mind! Think that in a few hours I must return to my home and tell my wife that the bolt had fallen! There was no alternative!

No alternative? Stay, there is an alternative! The blood seemed to course wildly through my veins, my heart beat fiercely, my lips grew dry, and a choking sensation came over me, as for the first time the simple yet certain way of cutting the knot of my difficulties flashed across my mind. So simple, so easy it at first appeared, that I laughed at my stupidity in not having seen it at once.

Tear that accursed paper to pieces, Basil North! Scatter those pieces to the winds. Forget what you have read. Go back to your luxurious, flower-bedecked home. Meet the one you love with a smile upon your face—you have forced smiles before now! Greet her as usual. Say nothing of this morning's news. Keep your own counsel; bury all you have learned in your secret heart. Do this, and be happy forever more!

But the man—the man who in a few days' time is to be tried for another's act? Well, what of him? The fool will doubtless be acquitted. Fool! Yes, it is the right term for one who can bring himself under suspicion. But if justice runs on the wrong track until the end—if that man dies?

What then? What is this miserable life, what are a hundred lives, when weighed against Philippa's happiness? What is conscience? What is right and wrong? What is the phantom which men call honor? What, after all, is crime? Be silent, and forget. You are asked to do no more. You have riches, youth, health and strong wil

42d. To see if the town will so amend Article 4 of the Town Orders as that it shall require a larger number of voters to appropriate money at a special meeting than is now required by said article; agreeably to the petition of James P. King and others.

Poet's Corner.

Deacon Jones' Experience.

Ye'r right when you lays it down, Parson,
  Thet the flesh is weak and a snare;
And to keep yer plow in the furrow
  When yer cattle begins to rare,
Ain't no sure thing. And, between us,
  The same may be said of prayer.

Why, I stood the jokes, on the river,
  Of the boys, when the critters found
Thet I'd jined the church, and the snicker
  Thet, maybe ye mind, went round
The day I set down with the mourners
  In the old camp meetin' ground!

I stood all that, and I reckon
  I might at a pinch stood more—
For the boys, they represents Baal,
  And I stands as the Rock of the Law;
  And it seemed like a moral scrimmage
In holdin' agin their jaw.

But thar's crosses a Christian suffers,
  As hezn't got that pretense—
Things with no moral purpose,
  Things ez hez got no sense;
Things ez, somehow, no profit
  Will cover their first expense.

Ez how! I was jest, last evenin',
  Addressin' the Throne of Grace,
And mother knelt in the corner,
  And each of the boys in his place—
When that sneakin' pup of Keziah's
  To Jonathan's cat giv chase!

I never let on to mind 'em,
  I never let on to hear,
But driv that prayer down the furrow
  With the cat hidin' under my cheer,
And Keziah a whisperin' "Sic her!"
  A mother a sayin' "You dare!"

I asked for a light for the heathen,
  To guide on his narrer track,
With that dog and that cat jest waitzin',
  And Jonathan's face jet black,
When the pup made a rush, and the kitten
  Dropped down on the small of my back.

Yet, I think, with the Lud's assistance,
  I might have continnered then,
If, gettin' her holt, that kitten
  Hedn't dropped her claws in me—when
It somehow reached the "Old Adam,"
  And I jumped to my feet with "Amen."

So, ye'r right when you say it, Parson,
  Thet the flesh is weak and a snare;
And to keep yer plow in the furrow
  When yer cattle begins to rare
Ain't no sure thing. And, between us,
  I say it's jest so with prayer.

Lotus Land.

CHARLOTTE E. RICKER.

Last night a moment I felt your hand
  clasp mine,
Only a moment—you understand
How swift time flies in the Lotus land
    Divine,
Where beautiful lilies idly grow,
And musical rivers softly flow.
    O eyes! that shine
    As you look in mine.
O lips that murmur, sweet and low,
It was but a dream, my child, you know
You were turning a page of the Long ago,
Aye! maybe so!
    For dreams are the pages
    Torn from the ages
Of Long ago.
    O happy hand
    In the Lotus-land
To hold against thy palm
    A memory of the olden ways
    The beautiful, the vanished days.
When life was like a psalm.

  Now the merry sleigh bells jingle,
  And there's not a girl that's single,
But will make her lover take her out to ride;
  And he'll set within the cutter,
  Filled with bliss he can not utter,
With his elbow crooked around his future bride.

  But when she is his bride,
  In a sleigh she'll never ride,
Or enrich the man who keeps the livery.
  But at home her husband—maybe—
  Will gently hold the baby,
While she blithely brews the gladsome catnip tea.

ARE YOU TIRED OF BEING SICK?—We want to say a word to the men, women and girls who work in stores, offices and factories. There are hundreds of thousands of you in the country. Very few of you are well. You are shut up too much and exercise too little. In this way you get sick. Your blood is bad, your digestion poor, your head often aches, you don't feel like work. Your liver, stomach and kidneys are out of order. Parker's Tonic has cured hundreds of such cases. It is pure, sure and pleasant.

Every business man should use printed request return envelopes in all correspondence. If everybody used them the dead letter office would wind up business. We will furnish to order envelopes thus printed, for less money than you pay elsewhere for blank ones.

WELLMAN OSBORNE, Lynn, Mass.

Dear Sir.—In answer to your request as to the amount of your purchases for this season's trade would state that to this date they foot up sixty-six thousand one hundred and eighty-three dollars and fifty-one cents, ($66,183 51) of which $21,679.50 was purchased during November, and $11,194.74 during the present month. Truly yours,

WOONSOCKET RUBBER CO.

IS IT POSSIBLE that the little dealers, taxed by the profits which they are obliged to pay to the Jobbers from whom they buy their goods, and encumbered by exorbitant rents, (one of them on the principal business street of the city and only doing business enough to employ one clerk, being reputed as paying one of the highest shoe rents in the city) we repeat, is it possible that they can compete with a wholesaler whose wholesale and retail business combined amounts to upwards of three hundred thousand dollars ($300,000) a year, and who buys direct from the rubber companies in the enormous quantities indicated above, and who, with four stores, has to pay rent only on one, the other three being on his own remises? No person of common sense can for a moment believe it. And now for a

JOHN P FERNALD, ALBERT VITTUM,
Editors and Publishers

THE WARRANT this year contains forty-two articles, most of them however of the usual nature. There are a few special articles which deserve favorable consideration and to which we desire to call attention.

Articles 33 and 34 have reference to the taking of a new valuation of the assessed property in town, and the publication of a new valuation book. Of the need of a valuation there is scarcely a doubt. One has not been made for twenty years according to the admission of the Board of Assessors. It is not to be wondered at therefore that the property of some persons is taxed too high and others too low. A new valuation would doubtless reveal the fallacy of the claims of our West Peabody friends, but in justice to them and the other portions of the town it ought to be done. It will be some extra expense to the town, but we think if the Board of Assessors is a separate board from the Selectmen there will be an abundant opportunity to have the tax on property carefully and equitably adjusted. And when this is done, it is but fare that the citizens of the town should see the result of the work, and that a valuation book such as has been published in Marblehead and other towns for years should be given to our citizens. We hope both of these matters will receive favorable consideration from the meeting.

Article 37 calls for an appropriation to build a new Primary School House in Dublin, and in regard to its necessity there can be but one opinion. The Primary Schools of the Center, Wallis and Bowditch districts have been uncomfortably crowded for several years, and experience shows that this overcrowding is especially confined to the lower grades. A remedy has been sought for by our committee for some time, and this appears to be the most feasible plan. Another advantage will be gained in the location of the building as proposed; by removing from the smaller children the danger of crossing the track several times a day on their way to and from school. It will also be a matter of greater convenience to the scholars, and as something of this sort must be done, we know of no better plan than the one suggested by the committee.

Article 39 calls for the appointment of a town auditor, agreeably to the petition of Mr. Spaulding. There certainly can be no objection to this, although its wisdom may be a matter of opinion at the present time. As the books of the town are kept by our present town Clerk, the matter of auditing would be simply a formality unless the auditor were a more expert accountant than nine-tenths of our citizens are. But the principal is a good one and probably the town can as well afford to create the office this year as at any future time.

Article 42 calls for the amendment of the Town Orders, so that it shall require a larger number of voters to appropriate money at a special meeting than is now required by said article; we have no doubt of the wisdom of this proceeding. The growth of the town and the large increase of voters has made the number proportionally small required at a special meeting, to appropriate money. It gives too great an opportunity for a special clique or organization to carry through a measure which may not be for the best interests of the town. We think it will be wisdom on the part of the town to amend

THERE IS an excellent opportunity for the Committee of Thirty to-morrow evening to report in favor of a separate Board of Selectmen and Assessors. If the town should vote, as we hope will be the case, in favor of a new valuation for the entire town, the duties of the Assessors will be arduous enough without having those of Selectmen added to them. Mr. Poor testified at the West Peabody hearing that a complete valuation of the property of the town had not been made for twenty years. It surely is time we had one.

Since we made the suggestion, a few weeks since, with reference to this change, we have heard many expressions in its favor, and from citizens of all parties. At the caucus to-morrow evening, the preliminary steps towards the election of two separate boards can be taken. We should like at all events to see the matter brought up, that the feelings of our citizens can be ascertained.

THE NAMES of the gentlemen selected for town officers to be presented to the Caucus to-morrow evening will be found in another column. The names are selected in such a way, that the different parts of the town are represented. The ticket, while not the strongest that could have been selected, seems to conciliate a number of different factions. It may be true that the representatives on the board of Selectmen from the South and West part of the town are not in the opinion of some, the strongest names that could have been brought forward, but if they are the choice of the residents there and they can vouch for their ability, etc., it is not but fair they should say by whom they should be represented As a whole, the ticket is one that could well commend itself to the voters of the town.

THE EDITOR of the Gazette is greatly in error in thinking that the appearance of its paper causes us any mental disturbance. On the contrary, there is no paper which we read with more pleasure, and we never enjoyed anything better than its last issue. Indeed we begin to believe the boot is on the other leg. When its editor calls to mind a little reference to that sheet six months or more ago, something that had entirely escaped our memory, and so vividly as to compare it with our last issue, it is very evident that the little shots in this paper have hit and "hit hard."

THE DIFFERENT papers in Northampton, recently bid for the city advertising for the current year, and the contract was awarded to the Daily Herald office at twenty-three cents an inch of space. A newspaper that will take a contract at such a figure (about the cost of composition) must have a poor opinion of its own work, or else is on the verge of bankruptcy.

THE AMOUNT of drunkenness in this town during the past year, as shown by the number of arrests, has been forty-four per cent, less than last year and this too when the rumseller "filled up" their men and turned them loose on the street to give the impression that there was more people drunk under prohibition than license.

THE CHOICE of Hon. William C. Endicott, of Salem as a member of President Cleveland's Cabinet, gives universal satisfaction in this section. While he has always been a Democrat, he is a man of broad and liberal views, and if the incoming President has made as wise a selection for the rest of his Cabinet, he has certainly excellent advisers.

Almy, Bigelow & Washburn are now preparing plans for a most extensive remodeling of their building which will give them the handsomest front, it is claimed, of any store in Essex County. It is proposed to take the entire width of the building into the store, closing the entrance to the West yard, and also that to the upper stories. The store front will be entirely of iron with mammoth panes of plate glass. There will be one grand central entrance, with vestibule twenty feet wide and seven feet and a half in depth. The window sashes and doors will be of cherry. Mr. W. D. Dennis is the architect.—Gazette.

It may be of interest to know how the leading candidates stood on an informal ballot at the meeting of the committee last night. W. S. Osborne 17; T. J. Relihan 17; Lewis S. Peabody 12; B. H. Taylor 12; Levi Preston 13; W. W. Reed 5; John E. Herrick 10; Lyman Osborn 6; S. A. Southwick 11; and Nathan H. Poor 11.

"Old Sol" is getting a trifle more sociable now-a-days. He gets up a little earlier in the morning and that seems to make him warmer natured during the day.

The Salem Cadet Band at the Salem Skating rink to-morrow evening will play among their selections the grand march dedicated to Major E. W. Abbott of this town.

MUSICAL NOTES.

The Heroes of '76, a Dramatic Cantata of the Revolution, was given last Wednesday evening in the new town hall for the benefit of the Benevolent Society. The piece was produced by a chorus of about forty voices, nearly all local talent, under the direction of W. P. Clark, Esq. The ladies of the Society had been very earnest in the advance sale of the tickets, resulting in the largest audience that has been seen in the hall this season. The Cantata was a success both musically and financially. The piece itself was descriptive of the war of the Revolution. Beginning with the home of the Farmer, in the village of Auburn, to the appearance of the messenger announcing the invasion by the British, the departure of the soldiers to war, the scenes of the battle, the victories of our soldiers, and their return home at the close of the war. These acts are necessary to portray all these scenes. And upon the chorus is put the work of a good share of the movement of the piece. It was therefore in many portions considerably slow. The music of the piece was very monotonous, and with a few exceptions, notably the duet between Roger and Anna, there was little of melody to please a popular audience. Had not the parts, both solo and chorus, been exceptionally well done, had not both the acting and scenic effects been unusually fine, we venture the assertion that the piece would have been voted a "bore" by the audience. So much for the piece itself; the performance of it was in pleasant contrast to this. The choruses were well balanced, were familiar with the words and music of their parts, and did justice not only to themselves but to their leader. The cast of the solo performers was mainly as has been given in these columns, with the exception that Mrs. T. O. Bartlett took the part of the Farmer's wife, originally assigned to Mrs. Ferguson, and the addition of Clover, the negro servant, in the person of Mr. A. A. Farrington. Mr. Frank W. Taggard as the Farmer and Mr. E. W. Merrill, of Salem, as Messenger had a large part of the solo work to do, acquitting themselves very creditably, the dramatic voice of Mr. Merrill being heard with excellent effect. Mr. Warren Wilson, Jr., who took the part of Roger, has a clear tenor voice, which he used with a great deal of expression, not only in his song at the campfire but in the duet with Anna, on the departure of the minute men to war. This latter piece was given so effectively that a recall was demanded and given. The lady soloists had very little to do. That little was done well. Miss S. P. Clemens of Salem, who is the soprano singer of the Baptist choir, kindly volunteered to take the part of Ruth. She has a mezzo soprano voice of great purity, and her enunciation is unusually distinct. Miss Nellie M. Bartlett presided at the piano and Mrs. J. C. Foote at the organ.

The last Symphony Concert in Mechanic Hall, Salem, Thursday evening, was the best yet given in that place. Miss Agnes Huntington was the soloist, and her reputation alone should have been sufficient to fill the hall. She appeared in an Aria from Handel and in two songs with piano, all of which were given with splendid effect. The parts given by the Orchestra were of course as near perfection as possible.

The Thalia Concert Company will make their second appearance in Salem Wednesday evening, March 11th, under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A., at their hall on Central street.

Miss Marguerite Hall, daughter of Mrs. Edna A. Hall of Boston, will give a concert at Chickering, Hall March 18, assisted by Camilla Urso and Arthur W. Foote. Miss Hall will be remembered by those of our readers who heard her at the Concert of the Salem Schubert Club a few weeks since.

The anniversary of the birth of Handel was observed by the Handel and Haydn society of Boston Sunday evening, Feb. 22, in Music Hall. Only works of Handel were given and some of them rarely if ever heard in public. The soloists were announced to be Miss Medora Henson, a pupil of Mr. Henchel, Miss Emily Winant of New York, Mr. W. J. Winch and M. W. Whitney. Mr. Winch was unable to appear on account of loss of voice, (something by the way that happens quite frequently of late,) and Mr. J. C. Parker was called in to take his place at short notice, so had a little consideration as he had not worked up his solos sufficiently for the demands except the Aria, "Waft ye Angels" and "Deeper and Deeper Still" which were rendered with much smoothness and delicacy. Miss Henson had a very pure, rich soprano voice, and she sang "Let the bright Seraphim" with fine effect, although the opening showed a little nervousness on her part, still the general rendering was satisfactory. Miss Winant sang with her accustomed vigor, and was equal to the occasion. Mr. Whitney does not seem to come up to his old time enthusiasm, but was well received and sang acceptably.

NO. VII. MONTANA CHARACTERS.

Every business has its peculiar characters and to a certain extent its own nomenclature. As Montana is a mining, grazing and farming territory, its characters and phrases are both numerous and mixed. I will only speak, in this connection, of such characters and terms as I have learned in connection with the horses and cattle of this country, which may be designated as Bucheros, Cow-boys, Mule-skimmers, and Bull whackers. These are not classic terms I am aware, but they are nevertheless the terms which designate their respective classes of the genus home in this country. Bucheros are young men whose business is to break horses. It is a distinct business in its season, the same as sheep shearing or any other legitimate occupation. The word is pronounced buckero, is of Spanish origin and goes with a "bucking" horse. I do not exactly know the origin of the latter term, but I know what a bucking horse is. Put a cat on the fence then set a dog at her and the position of her back is the exact position of a bucking horse in this country. Now imagine a pilgrim, or a tenderfoot, as new comers are called, seated in the saddle on said back and then picture that horse rising straight into the air and coming down with his legs stiff and straight as iron bars and doing this about once a second, meanwhile whirling round and skipping about, and you have a pretty correct idea of what is here called a "bucking horse." I am told that it is much more interesting to witness just what it is, than to experience it. "Bucking" is I think, a peculiarity of the horses of this country. At all events they all do it. I am informed that horses imported from the East, after remaining all winter in a barn of horses, will buck when taken off in the Spring

The native horses of this region are a cross between the Mexican mustang and the Indian pony. They partake of the hardihood of the one and of the "cussidness" of the other. They are called "Cayuses"—whence the term, I do not know—perhaps it is a corruption of "cuss." I know they get more "cussing," than anything else They are also called bronchos, strictly speaking, however, Bronchos, I believe are a cross between Spanish and American horses. Many of the terms and names used in connection with them and their trappings are of Spanish origin. In May and June occurs the Spring "roundup" where horse owners gather up their stock for "branding." "Stock" in this country is not bank shares but horse flesh. A "stock tender" is the man who takes care of the horses at a stage station. Each owner of a band of horses has men in the saddle, at this time, night and day, for two or three weeks. They visit the ranges and separate the horses of the different owners. They are then driven into a "corral"—we should call it a yard or pen. The young, of course, follow their own dams and all of them, young and old, are wild as hawks. The colts are caught and thrown for branding. They must be caught of course with a lariat. A skillful lassoer will whirl the coil of rope round his head and then throw the noose over the neck or round the foot of any horse you may select. Several men then draw the rope until the animal is choked and thrown. Sometimes though rarely, he kills himself before he will submit, but usually when down, and his feet are lassoed he becomes quiet. Then the iron which has been heating, is taken from the coals and he is marked with his owner's brand. Meanwhile the rest of the poor brutes are racing round and round the corral until they are wearied out. At this time the horses sold or those to be driven to market are separated from the others. Now comes the bucheros part. He mounts and breaks the horse to the saddle. A Mexican bit is put into the animal's mouth which is an instrument of torture at best and which becomes all the more so when the poor beast is refactory. Then a great Stock saddle is thrown on to his back. Saddles in this country are much more of an institution than in the East. Fifty pounds and upwards is a light saddle for a stock man. The wooden tree surmounted with the high horn is the most conspicuous part of them. They are covered with leather in various shapes and ornamentations more or less elaborate. The saddles are fastened under the horse with the stout hemp cinchas from six to eight inches wide. Each end of these cinchas terminate in a large ring. These rings are fastened to similar ones in the saddle by stout leather thongs called latagos, doubled many times and then tied in a knot, no buckle or single strap would be stout enough to hold a bucking horse which will sometimes tear a saddle to pieces, stout as it is. The stirrups are very large and stout, made of hard wood, bound with iron and often covered with ornamental leathers extending nearly to the ground and called "tapaderas." The stirrups are fastened to the saddle inches wide. These saddles are expensive, often more so than the horse they cover. It is not unusual to see a horse carrying a saddle worth twice as much as himself and with a Mexican horse hair bridle you have an outfit that is far from cheap.

The poor Cayuse, remember is perfectly wild, has been caught with the lariat, the cruel bit thurst into his mouth and several men have held him while the thick folded blanket has been put under the stout Stock saddle and the whole fastened to his back as tightly as the cinchas can be drawn. Now the buckero armed with heel spurs, with rowels from an inch to an inch and a half long, mounts the trembling beast, who of course begins to buck. It is in his nature, and his first resort is to throw his rider and resent this sudden invasion of his freedom. It is the business of the bronchero, in the language of this country, to "stay with him" though it sometimes brings the blood from the nose, eyes and ears of the broncheros and sometimes ends in a fatality. But it is soon over and the horse is then broken to the saddle though it may buck at intervals through life. The life of the bronchcros is fraught with danger and can not be long followed. Intemperance and vicious associations would necessarily abreviate it if its dangers did not. Strange that so many horsemen are immoral in character when fondness for the horse should be enobling and refining.

How different the business of civilizing the horse on the frontier and in the East. It was our privilege last summer to visit the celebrated horse farm of J. C. McFerren, of Kentucky. We saw hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of horse flesh, young and old; one, the celebrated Nutwood, for which the owner paid $12000 and a colt of the same which was sold before it was born for $1000, the purchaser taking all the risks.

We were taken to a stable of half a hundred yearling colts which were led out one by one by their two attendants for our inspection. Every one of them came up to us freely, stood on its forefeet as squarely and held its head as finely as a well trained horse. Their forms were as shapely as if drawn by an artist's hand and their coats as smooth as glass. They were turned out at night to feed on clover and kept by day on a dirt floor and in darkened stalls away from the flies and sun. Never did we see a better illustration of the adage "Blood will tell," nor could there be a greater contrast in the treatment of animals than that between a western roundup and a Kentucky farm.

The Cowboy is an institution of himself. He is sometimes a rich man's son from the East and a college graduate, but his surroundings and associations are far from elevating in character.

His horse and equipments are the same as the broncheros. His own trappins are peculiar to his occupations. His leather overalls are called chaparegos, his belt holds his pistol holters and sheath knives. His hobbles for his horse and his blankets for himself are strapped upon his saddle. His short leather whip is called a Quirt.

His duty is in the saddle looking after his employers' cattle. There is not much to be done for them except in the Spring and fall roundups. Cattle on the ranges are not fed, as this would cause them to hang about the haystacks and prevent their rustling for themselves. Hence a few cow boys are adequate for many thousands of cattle. But in the roundups they are riding violently and incessantly for many days, often exhausting their horses and requiring fresh ones.

The branding and separating of horned cattle is done in the same manner as in the case of horses—they are corralled, lassoed and thrown. Calves follow their mothers of course. Sometimes they are separated and then they are called "mavericks," i. e., unknown. They are so called from a man named Maverick, in Texas, who used to claim all cattle he could find having no brand thus illustrating how character (be it good or bad) will survive the man and knowing that "a good name is better than great riches."

Once there were fortunes acquired in a few years on the frontiers, from the gleanings of the flocks and herds, but now there are stock growers associations and when one stock grower finds cattle in his bands and droves belonging to another owner (as is indicated by the brand) they are turned over to the proper authorities and when any are found having no brand they are sold accordingly to associations as mavericks and the proceeds go into the general fund with which to develop and profit the interests of the association and secure legislation in its favor.

The cattle valuation of Montana stock men, as reported last spring was $32,000,000 with a gain of 250,000 head during the year, notwithstanding the winter of unusual severity in which many thousands perished. It will be seen therefore, that the cowboy represents a very important part of Montana

NOTICE.

March 11, 1885.

EDITOR PEABODY PRESS:—A year ago or more I lost two children by diptherea, caused by sewer gas. The Board of Health came and looked over the place. A Mr. Relihan, a member of said board, now goes before the Committee on towns and states that they found my grounds clean but I had slicked up &c., but inside the house was in a filthy condition. Now if I had slicked up outside why did I not inside. He also says he ordered me to paint and paper. As he saw three men at work smoking off paper and cleaning paint and getting ready to paint and paper, why should he give any such orders and as he was not chairman why should he give any at all. The truth is that the Board of Health found everything inside and outside perfectly satisfactory. This Relihan was very complimentary at the time. The house was all washed from garret to cellar a week before Board of Health came up. Not because they were coming, but for the interest of my family who were then at the seashore. Any one but a fool knows that poultry in large quantities must be kept clean in order to be made profitable. My place is always clean. I have had uninterrupted success for 16 years with an average of 2000 fowl. I understand that this Mr. Relihan has no unmortgaged property but I shall sue him for slander nevertheless.

Yours truly,
D. W. ANDREWS.

Peabody, Feb. 26, '85.

MR. ANDREWS:

Dear Sir,—In the official visit of the Board of Health, I saw nothing but what could be seen in any house in town under the circumstances. I am also pleased to say that the surroundings of the house we found in a very satisfactory condition. Yours truly,

WM. S. OSBORNE.

Peabody, Feb. 26, '85.

MR. D. W. ANDREWS:

Dear Sir,—Your letter dated the 23d inst. was received last evening. I am very much surprised at contents of it. I can say my first official visit at your house was at a particularly critical time, you having had sickness and death in the family, and of course one would hardly expect to find time for any extra cleaning, and even under those circumstances I can truthfully say I saw no evidence of any lack of proper sanitary effort either around the grounds or within the house, but found every thing in first class order.

Yours truly,
F. S. WORCESTER.

CAPT. D. W. ANDREWS.

Dear Sir,—Your letter was received to-day, I hasten to answer it. If Dr. Shannahan made the statement which you aver, he did so entirely upon his own authority, and so far as I can see, is alone responsible for the same. For reasons which I have never been able to understand you seemed quite dissatisfied with our efforts to exonorate you from the charge of maintaining a nuisance. But that I do not care to discuss. We found no nuisance, and so stated in our report, and there the matter should have dropped. I exceedingly regret your annoyance and will do anything in my power to correct the same. With regards for you and yours, I remain, Yours truly,

C. C. PIKE.

PROBATE NOTICE.

Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

ESSEX SS. PROBATE COURT.

To all parties interested in any of the Real Estate of JOHN DODGE, late of South Danvers, (now Peabody), in said county, blacksmith, deceased, intestate: GREETING:

WHEREAS, Harrison A. Dodge, of Peabody, in the county of Essex, has presented to said Court a petition, representing that he is interested in the real estate of said deceased, lying in this State, and praying that partition thereof may be made among the parties interested in said real estate; said petitioner claiming as an heir of said deceased, and also under an heir of said deceased, and the other parties claiming under heirs of said deceased.

You are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court to be holden at Salem, in said county of Essex, on the third Monday of March, next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause, if any you have against the same.

And said Harrison A. Dodge is ordered to serve this citation by delivering a copy thereof to each person interested, who can be found within the State fourteen days at least before said Court, and if any one cannot be so found, by also publishing the same in the Peabody Press, a newspaper printed at Peabody, once in each week for three weeks at least before said Court.

Witness, George F. Choate, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this twenty-fifth day of February, in the year eighteen hundred and eighty-five.

J. T. MAHONEY, Register.

A true copy,

HOME HAPPENINGS.

The annual reports are in the hands of the printer, and will soon be issued. The valuation of the town is $6,671,200, of which $4,319,350 is real estate and $2,351,850 personal. The number of polls is 2484. The assessment for the year was:—Poll tax, $4968; town tax. at $16.40 on $1000, $109,407.68; tax on bank shares owned by non-residents, $4321.40; additional assessments, $278.18; total, $118,975.26. The amount voted to be raised by taxation was $95,700; the State tax, $8040; county tax, $8156.50; surplusage, $2757.36. The amount of taxes paid Town Treasurer was $104,750.90; abatements, $1144.13; total, $105,895.03. The taxes outstanding, uncollected are:—For 1884, $13,080.23; 1883, $3582.61; 1882, $711.76; total uncollected, $17,374 60. The total amount of indebtedness and liabilities is $468,864.49, of which $458,000 represents the funded debt in town notes. The liabilities are:—For interest accrued to Feb. 1, 1885, $4396.44; town orders outstanding, $2180.35; balance of appropriation for schools, $505.70; balance for high service, $1000; poll taxes to be refunded, $120; amount due firemen to May 1, 1885, $1962; outstanding bills of Selectmen, $200; of Poor Department, $200; of School Department, $200; and of Fire Department, $100—total, $10,864.49. The resources are as follows:—Balance in treasury, $16,443.67; taxes unpaid, estimated as good, $16,000; sinking fund, $90,952.01; claim on State for State aid paid, 1884, $2098.37; amount due Poor Department, $1200; rents due, $227—total, $126,921.05. The abatement of the debt is therefore: Gross indebtedness, $468,864.49; resources, $126,921.05; making net debt, Feb. 1, 1885, $341,943.44, against $356,579.80, Feb. 1, 1884. Decrease of indebtedness, $14,636.36. The expenditures for the year have been:—Selectmen, $121,782.20; Poor Department, $12,680.82; schools, $51,146.67; Fire Department, $7719.88; total, $173,329 57. The receipts were: Water Department, $23,740.94; Poor Department, $4895 58; town property, $2213.80; bank and corporation taxes, $4804.74; rent of Town Hall, $1361; police, $445.76; State aid account, $1932 92; other sources, $2404.08; total, $41,798.82, which deducted makes the net expenditures of the year, $131,530.75. There was paid on account of State and county taxes, $16,196.50; on improvements around the Town House, $4611.50; on water extension, $14,852.63; on special appropriation for streets, $4768.96; on account of special appropriations, $5563.79; total, $45,993.38, which deducted from the total sum expended gives $85,537.37. To this amount is added $107 for poll taxes refunded, making the ordinary net expenditures for town purposes, including interest on the town debt, $85,644.37.

Another hearing on the Proctor freight railroad was given in the Selectmen's room last Thursday. Mr. Wardwell opened the case, siteing the Statutes under which the request was made. C. A. Putnam of Salem, explained the plans of the proposed track and Mr. S. F. Blaney spoke in opposition and advanced the same argument as at previous hearings. The use of a flat rail was strongly urged, and it was decided to amend the report of M. Russell so that it should read that the road be built with flat rails from the first curve, after leaving the main line to the last curve on Upton street, a distance of about 350 feet. The speed and time of shifting freight was left with the Selectmen

The Union of the grocers and provision dealers of this vicinity, is a branch of what is known as the American Creditors Association, to protect themselves against parties that do not pay their honest debts. Each member furnishes a list of the parties that are indebted to him, and they are rated as too slow, or dead beats, as he may think best. Every dealer has a list and can see at a glance who does not pay his honest debts, and to what class of trade they are indebted.

The liquor cases against J. E. Millea, Patrick Ellis and Daniel Manning were called for sentence in the Supreme Court at Lawrence last Thursday. Millea was defaulted for not putting in appearance. Patrick Ellis was fined $120.43 and three months in the house of correction. Daniel Manning was $117.43 and given three months in the house of correction. The liquor seized from Billy Hayes place last August was confiscated by order of the court.

The hall was crowded last Saturday night in response to the call for a Citizen's Caucus. Mr. F. E. Farnham called the meeting to order, and W. G. Cook was elected chairman and James H. Thomas, Secretary. Mr. S. C. Bancroft made a speech in regard to the unsatisfactory results of former citizen's caucuses, and introduced the following resolution which was adopted by a vote of 51 to 31:

Resolved that the candidates for town officers be nominated in the following manner: The present meeting shall elect a nominating committee of thirty to be apportioned around the several parts of the town as follows: Five to So. Peabody and five to West Peabody, and the balance twenty from other parts of the town. Said committee to meet and organize and make the necessary nominations and report to an adjournment of this meeting to be held next Thursday evening at 7.30 o'clock.

A committee of seven was appointed by the chairman to retire and nominate the committee of thirty and they reported the following names and they were accepted by the meeting:—Jacob Osborne, S. S. Littlefield, Henry Lufkin, Eugene T. McCarthy, Frank E. Farnham, James H. Thomas, Albert Vittum, Leverett Poor, James Sherry, Wm. S. Osborne, Edward Trask, C. M. Poor, Arthur Elliott, John Murray, Daniel J. Conroy, Joseph H. Swett, Merritt Cook, P. H. O'Connor, James Rodie, Wm. J. McCarthy; From West Peabody, John G. Walcott, W. Spaulding, Jr., E. C. Farwell, Wm. O. Donnell, and James Flint; From So. Peabody, Geo. E. Parker, Alonzo Raddin, Wm. T. Mitchell, J. B. Newhall, and Lewis Putnam. The committee was given power to fill vacancies. A committee of three was appointed by the chair to report the names of nine persons to constitute the Citizen's Committee for the ensuing year. Adjourned till Thursday night.

Mr. Eben W Ferren died of typhoid pneumonia at his home on Chestnut street last Monday, after a brief illness. He came to this town from Madison, N. H., where he was born in 1845, and has followed the occupation of carpenter, and has been janitor at the Unitarian church. He was a quiet and peaceable citizen and respected by those who knew him. He served in the war of the rebellion and was an Odd Fellow, belonging to a Maine lodge, and also a member of Jordan Lodge F. & A. M., of this town. His funeral took place from the Universalist church this afternoon and was attended by Jordan Lodge in a body. He leaves a widow and one child.

From May 1, 1883, to March 1, 1884, under the license law, there were 226 cases of drunkenness before the police court, and 76 assaults and other cases caused by drink. Under the no-license law, from May 1, 1884, to March 1, 1885, the number of drunks before the court was 119, and the number or cases arising from the effects of liquor was 50, and during this time 183 seizure warrants were issued and 51 seizures made.

Mr. Hubbard W. Tilton, Treasurer of the Ames Automatic Coupling Co., has invented a coupler that meets the demands of railroad men, and answers all the requirements. It has fixed links, but as the cars meet, one or the other is displaced and the remaining one couples. It will be a vast saving of links and pins, the annual loss of which is estimated to be $3,000,000. It would seem that this coupler must meet with universal adoption.

A couple of Shea's, Maurice and Thomas, who have been on bad terms, had a fracas on Washington street this morning. Thomas had his head split open by Maurice with a piece of iron pipe. They were employed at Wilson's tannery and were cousins. Dr. Pike made an examination of the wounded man and pronounced his case a serious one, and his assailant has been arrested and held to await the result of the injuries.

At a semi annual meeting of the Father Matthew C. T. A. Society held in their hall last Monday evening, the following officers were elected: President, Thomas H. O'Shea; Vice Pres., Peter Black; Rec. Sec., Daniel Mullane; Treas., Edward O. Roach; Lib., John Daley; Col., Daniel O'Connor; Board of Directors, Daniel Rahilly, William Kirby, John Bresnahan, Michael Gleason, Jeremiah Sheehey; Board of Investigation, Timothy Griffin, Charles Carlin; Spiritual Director, Rev. John E. Hickey.

The Salvation army under command of Captain Bailey and wife and Happy Alice, will hold a meeting at the town hall, next Friday evening. The meeting will be addressed by Harry Willard, the saved opera singer of Leavenworth, Kas., a hallelujah Fiddler and a number of blood washed warriors.

The W. C. T. Union will sell hot coffee and refreshments at the Town Hall next Monday, at noon and night. Donations for the table will be gratefully received, and will be sent for after 9

SOUTH PEABODY.

A party of the relatives and friends of Mr. David Lee, mostly from Salem, surprised him at his home on Lynn street last Thursday evening. Mr. Lee opened his house to the intruders and a general good time was had, especially among the younger ones. About 11 o'clock the party were invited to the dining room where a baked bean supper was served and by appearances was relished by all present. After supper Mr. Lee was invited into the parlor when Mr. Luther French presented him in behalf of the company a large easy rocker, a suit of clothes and hat, about $15, in cash besides several smaller articles and groceries enough to last a month. Mr. Lee accepted them with a short speech. The party broke up about 1 o'clock all pleased with the evening's call.

Mr. Joseph Wiggin has accepted a position as conductor with the L. & B. R. R. Company and commenced his work last Monday.

Miss Fannie Baker, who has been stopping at the house of Mr. Wesley Williams all winter, returned to her home in Maine last week.

Mr. David Phillips, of Swampscott, has an ice boat on Humphrey's pond in Lynnfield, and during the past week several large parties have enjoyed a spin over the ice in it.

About twelve dollars was realized from the entertainment at the vestry last night.

We would suggest the name of Rev. J. W. Colwell for School committee in place of Alonzo Raddin, resigned.

The Ladies' aid Society met at the house of Mrs. Emily Dakins last Thursday afternoon and evening. After the usual business the party was invited to the dining room where a splendid clam chowder and baked bean supper was served and Mrs. D. knows how to serve it. After supper the company were entertained by vocal and instrumental music by members present.

An exhibition was given in the school room of Miss Emery last Friday afternoon by the scholars of the school. The exercises consisted of dialogues and recitations and music. A large number of the friends and parents of the children were present.

Conductor Morgan was married to a lady of New Jersey last Wednesday night. Mr. Morgan and bride left for that State Thursday. He has accepted a position as station master on one of the steam R. R. in that State. We wish Mr. and Mrs. Morgan a happy, prosperous married life.

The L & B R. R. commenced the running of all the Peabody trips last Monday.

The painters have nearly finished the outside work on the house of Mr. Joel Needham on County street.

A sleigh containing a party from Lynn, broke down near the ice houses one night last week, and the party numbering about 30 walked home, while the horses pulled the damaged sleigh.

Mr. Jesse F. Barrett, while repairing the filter box at Brown's pond, lost his balance by the slipping of the instrument, and was treated to a bath in five feet of water.

We extend thanks to Mrs. J. E. Osborne and to the Knights of Labor, for the use of their lamps last Wednesday evening. The frost having worked down to the gas pipes, it affected the supply, and when the lights in the town hall were lit, those who were dependent upon gas were left nearly in the dark. The engine house, Catholic Church and PRESS office seemed to suffer the most.

A number of horses are at present suffering from a disease known as equine small pox, which, however, bears no resemblance to the terrible disease that, under a similar name, afflicts humanity. It is merely a soreness of the heels, and sometimes the head, and is the result of changeable weather and the alternate thawing and freezing of the roadways.

One of D. T. Winter's patent door springs is in successful operation at Bushby &Co.'s store. This has been so perfected that by simply turning the cylinder the speed with which the door will close can be regulated. It can also be made to shut nearly too if desired for warm weather. So easy does the spring work that a small child can open the door with ease.

This is the year for our state census, which by law will begin May 1st and be completed in two months. This legislature will re-district the state for senators, and the commissioners will district the several counties for representatives. Essex county will be likely to hold her own.

A two year old child of David Larrabee while playing on the floor recently, picked up a partially popped kernel of corn and put it in its ear. It became moistened and swelled causing the child much pain. Dr. Frost removed it last Sunday, but was obliged to put the child under the influence of ether.

CONSULTATION FREE.

[Dr. Lighthill can be found at his office, 115 Boylston street, Boston, from 8 until 12, daily.)

FROM REV. E. W. WHITNEY,

Formerly Pastor of the Universalist Church, Peabody, Mass.

For several years I have been troubled with Catarrh, which seriously interfered with my public speaking, and which baffled all my attempts to get permanent relief. Experienced surgeons operated upon me, and I was under the care of a Boston physician for two years, but obtained no lasting benefit. I applied various medicines, but failed to get relief. I was lead by the advice of friends, to consult Dr. Lighthill. My faith was at the lowest ebb, but I am happy to say that after a few months' treatment no trace of my old trouble appears, and I have every reason to believe that the cure is permanent. I cordially recommend Dr. Lighthill to all who may be afflicted in a similar manner.

E W. WHITNEY,

Peabody, Mass., June 27. 1879.

AN INTERESTING CASE.

A statement of Mr. Clement A. Thorndike, of the firm of L. A. May & Co., 127 Union street, Lynn, Mass.

To the Public:—Having been raised almost like one from the dead by the skillful treatment of Dr. Lighthill, and to benefit similar sufferers, I make this public statement of my case. For years I was troubled with Catarrh in my head, seriously affecting and almost destroying my nasal bone; the discharge was very profuse, requiring constant blowing and hawking for relief; gradually the irritation passed into my throat, producing hoarseness and a hacking cough, and finally it affected my bronchial tubes and lungs, leaving me a victim to consumption. The cough now became distressing and almost constant, and debilitating night sweats made their appearance. I lost flesh and became greatly emaciated. I consulted medical men and used various remedies, but all efforts for relief utterly failed. In that condition, and greatly disheartened and discouraged, I applied to Dr. Lighthill, whose able and thorough examination of my case proved to me that I was in the right hands. Convinced that he fully understood my condition, and, inspired with new hope, I placed myself under his care, and very soon experienced the benefit of his treatment. One after another of the symptoms of Catarrh left me. I gained in strength and weight, my cough and night sweats disappeared, and now I am only too thankful and delighted to be able to call myself well again. Hoping that this statement may give new courage and confidence to such as may suffer as I have,

I remain, respectfully,

CLEMENT A. THORNDIKE.

CATARRH CURED.

FROM REV. E. C. BUTLER,

Beverly, Mass.

I most heartily recommend any one afflicted with that troublesome disease, Catarrh, to Dr. Lighthill. I have full confidence in him. His treatment has had the most gratifying results in my own case, which was severe and of long standing.

E. C. BUTLER,

Beverly, Mass., Oct. 29, 1879.

CURE OF DEAFNESS.

FROM RT. REV. T. F. HENDRIKEN,

Bishop of Providence, R. I.

My Dear Dr. Lighthill: Permit me to thank you most heartily for your kindness to the Sisters of our Convent. I had no idea when I consulted you on Sister Demonica's deafness that you could so quickly restore her back to hearing, but she tells me that she hears now better than she did before. For this, and your kind and successful treatment of my own deafness, I thank you. Now I would be glad to have you refer your patients to me. You know I can recommend you as a physician and surgeon, thoroughly accomplished in those departments of medicine in which you practice. I owe you a debt of gratitude, and would be glad to pay it.

Very truly and sincerely yours

Rt. Rev. T. F. HENDRIKEN.

A complete and permane

ASTHMA.

REPORT FROM MR. C. F. BOYNTON, 31 MILK STREET, BOSTON, ROOM 35.

TO THE PUBLIC.

After having spent large sums of money, and found no relief, I was induced to apply to Dr. Lighthill, at 115 Boylston street, for treatment, having suffered from asthma in the worst form for six years, and I wish to say, for the benefit of others suffering as I did that DR. LIGHTHILL'S TREATMENT HAS MADE ME A WELL MAN, and I now can enjoy life, when before it was a dread to me. This cure was performed on me over a year ago, and I can confidently pronounce it a permanent one. I hope all afflicted with that dreadful disease will avail themselves of Dr. Lighthill's skilful services, for I feel morally sure he can cure them.

TESTIMONIALS.

"I regard Mr. Eddy as one of the most capable and successful practitioners with whom I have had official intercourse."
CHAS. MASON, Commissioner of Patents.

"Inventors cannot employ a person more trustworthy or more capable of securing for them an early and favorable consideration at the Patent Office."
EDMUND BURKE, late Com. of Patents.

BOSTON, Oct. 19, 1870.

R. H. EDDY, Esq.—Dear Sir: you procured for me, in 1870, my first patent. Since then you have acted for and advised me in hundreds of cases, and procured many patents, re-issues and extensions. I have occasionally employed the best agencies in New York, Philadelphia and Washington, but I still give you almost the whole of my business, in your line, and advise others to employ you.

Yours truly, GEORGE DRAPER.

WHAT THEY ALL MEAN.—There are flirtations carried on more or less extensively in every skating rink in the country, but as many persons do not know the latest rules as to how, the rink reporter slashes them from an exchange nearly as follows:

One leg in the air—'Catch on.'

Two legs in the air—'Head me off.'

Making a back somersault and lighting on your neck—'I'm mashed.'

Smashing one's self and partner into the wall—'Let us expire together.'

Casting yourself headlong on the floor—'My despair is great; ye love me not.'

To make a rush for the banister and fall down—'Fly with me, my tue nlove.'

Punching your neighbor in the tomach with your foot—'Beg a thousand pardons.'

Remaining on the floor in a sitting posture—'Will some gentleman please assist me?'

A backward flip of the feet and a sudden adhesion of the knees to the sroo—'I adore you.'

Squatting down and causing the skaters to be piled three feet deep on top of you—'Excuse me.'

Suddenly placing your legs horizontally on the floor like a letter V—'You make me tired.'

Springing quickly from a sitting posture on the floor to your feet—Don't trouble yourself.'

Catching your feet in your partner's dress and tearing the trimmings off—'Please don't tell mother.'

Also:

One skate in your mouth indicates that you are too full for utterance.

To kick with one leg toward Dakota while the other leg winds around your neck, indicates that you are off your proper base.

To make a flying leap, land on your back, and some one sit down on you means that you will be carried home on a shutter.

To do some strange acrobatic feat just as you ask a young lady for a skate, indicates that she will be very tired if she accepts.

To make a public exhibition of yourself seven times in three laps is a sure sign that you had better go home and saturate your cranium.

Having your lady partner get tired and sit down on the floor, while you run your head into the wall, indicates that she is to be picked up and led to the nearest esat.

After-Dinner Speakers.

The after-dinner orator whom I now have in mind, is on his legs before the company, digging his fork into the table-cloth, his lips quivering, his eyes wandering and blinking, and an observant doctor would say that with a little more strain upon him the poor man would go off in a fit. As to what he did blunder out, the least that is said the better. The poor fellow finishes and falls into his chair, glaring wildly—he has made his after-dinner speech.

Mr. John Bright is conspicuously one of the very best public speakers in England, and this is what he once said about after-dinner speaking at a banquet in London:

"I must confess that since dinner terminated I have been actuated by something like a feeling of envy. I have envied the speakers who have gone before me the facility, the fluency, with which they have been able to perform the task that has been allotted to them. I believe there is no task so severe to which a speaker can be put as to make a speech which is not absolutely uninteresting on an occasion like this." Now, mark, the great speaker speaks of "speakers." How, then, about the great bulk of us, who are not speakers at all? If Mr. Bright can with difficulty do it, what is to become of you and I, dear reader, who have not the gift of gab?—Howard Paul in San Francisco News Letter.

A young gentleman from Higbee, while calling on his girl here, asked for her hand and heart, and was accepted. He told her that he had something on his mind for a long time, but was afraid she would get mad. She wanted to know what it was then, and he made her promise not to get mad. Says he: "I have two brothers in the penitentiary." "That is nothing" replied she. "I have two brothers in the Arkansas Legislature." — Boonville (Mo.) Topic.

MAYO'S

Compound Vegetable Anæsthetic.

A safe and pleasant substitute for gas and ether.

Discovered by Dr. N. K. Mayo of Boston, April 1883, subsequently administered by him in nearly two thousand cases, producing perfect slumber, being applicable to the child the delicate sentitive woman as well as the hardy man. No ill effects have followed its use in any case, it acting rather as a vegetable tonic.

It controls the patient one-fourth longer than gas giving us time to remove from three to twenty teeth. It is with great confidence we have introduced it into our practice, giving very successful results.

A THRILLING STORY.

AS TOLD BY A MERCHANT IN TROY, N. Y.—A SURGICAL OPERATION AVOIDED.—HOW A FATHER, WIFE AND DAUGHTER ESCAPED AN AWFUL DOOM.

Of the hundreds of accounts of remarkable cures wrought by DR. KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY, none have appeared so purely astonishing as the following: The persons mentioned are among the most highly respected in the city of Troy, and the story as told by the father will prove interesting to our readers.—ED.

TROY, N. Y.

DR. KENNEDY, RONDOUT, N. Y.:—

Dear Sir: My daughter was afflicted with a severe growth of Fungus. To remove it we had resorted to almost every remedy and consulted the most prominent surgeons and physicians. Dr.—— of Troy, said that a surgical operation would be necessary, but fearing fatal results I hesitated. Some of the physicians claimed that it was caused by one thing and some by another. The Fungus was prominent and disfigured her looks. Having heard of Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE working so thoroughly on the blood I determined to try it, to see if this medicine could do what doctors had failed to do and surgeons had hardly dared to undertake. I can say in truth that the result of this trial was the complete cure of my daughter of this dreadful malady. Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY alone effected it. We used nothing else, for other things had completely failed. My daughter to-day enjoys vigorous health and to Favorite Remedy alone is the credit due. My wife also was very poor in health, due to some liver difficulty with which she had suffered a long time until she became very much reduced in flesh. A trial of Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy has resulted in the complete restoration of her health, which she had not enjoyed for years. She has gained in flesh and strength, and thus secured perfect health, and this is due entirely to DR KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY. As for myself, being engaged in the grocery and commission business, which makes it necessary for me to test the quality of different articles, like butter, etc., my sense of taste and my stomach were seriously injured. Everything seemed to nauseate me, and fearful of dyspepsia in its most severe form, I tried DR. KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY. The first bottle afforded immediate relief, and from that day to this I can say that Favorite Remedy has restored me to perfect health. These are facts which I claim prove that Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy is the best medicine in the world for those afflicted with the above difficulties. If any one in the city of Troy doubts the truth of these statements let him come to me and I will prove them. I have recommended Favorite Remedy to hundreds and with the same good results. Yours, etc.,

WILLIAM WINDSOR.

MALARIA.

As an anti-malarial medicine

DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S

has won golden opinions. No traveler should consider his outfit complete unless it includes a bottle of this medicine. If you are exposed to frequent changes of climate, food and water, Favorite Remedy should always be within your reach. It expels malarial poisons, and is the best preventative of chills and malarial fever in the world. It is especially offered as a trustworthy specific for the cure of Kidney and Liver complaints, Constipation and all disorders arising from an impure state of the blood. To women who suffer from any of the ills peculiar to their sex Favorite Remedy is constantly proving itself an unfailing friend—a real blessing. Address the proprietor, Dr. D. Kennedy, Rondout, N. The Story of a Humorist.

Williamstown, where Williams college is situated, lies snugly nestled in among the cluster of purple giants known as the Berkshire Hills. After the college commencement is over the town is filled during the summer by a crowd of pleasure-seekers, and has quite a reputation as a summer resort. I had gone up to attend a class reunion, and, having a week or two to while away until I went back to my desk, concluded to spend them loafing around where I was. The college halls were empty, and but few of the summer visitors had arrived, so I spent the greater part of the time under the large trees in front of the library. As I lay there one afternoon watching the jaunty sparrows flit in and out the ivy on the chapel walls I saw, shambling along the walk, a man who was evidently strongly charged with New England rum. He seemed conscious of my scrutiny, as he suddenly wheeled around and stared steadily back at me.

"George Kane," I cried out, half to myself and half to him. "George!"

"How are you, Browne?" (in a sheepish tone). "What'r you doing here?"

If you were in Washington five years ago you surely remember George Kane. He was the wittiest and brightest man in the ranks of the pencil-pushers. He never wrote anything that was not eagerly read and laughed over. A merry sprite seemed to dwell in his quill, and he always had a joke at his tongue's end. He was Momus on earth again.

And it was this happy laughter that stood on the walk near the steps of the library with blinking eyes and shaky knees, looking like a dreary tramp just risen from a bed in the gutter; stupid, swaying from side to side, with his head tilted on one side; this was George Kane, whom we considered a giant of journalism, and a word from whom would send us youthful journalists into the seventh heaven of delight!

"I suppose you're seeking inspiration from the grand old h-hills," he said with a lurch; "so'm I—inspiration with a little sh-sugar 'n it."

And then seeing my look of astonishment at his plight, "Come, come, youngster, is this the first time you've seen a man full? Haven't you any place to get myself decent in?"

I took him to my room, and tried the usual remedies is such cases, but he seemed to grow only more maudlin. He wept over me, and called me a "a zemplery fren'," and as a last resort I made him come out with me and walk up one of the mountain roads. He talked incessantly, cursed the dusty roads, laughed at the buds, whistled to the chipmunks, cried about the pine giants, and admired the sunset, and when we reached the top of the mountain road he stopped abruptly and sat down by the little mountain brook under a grand old pine, and told me his story.

He had come to Washington with a young wife whom he loved madly, and whose slightest wish was his law. Newspaper work kept him away from her the greater part of the time, and she found other company. One day he came home and found an empty house. He saw her once afterward, as she whirled past him behind a magnificent pair of horses along one of the avenues. "I tried hard to find her, Browne," he said. "Indeed I did. I loved her too much to let her go." But he never had found her, nor seen her face again. And yet, with his awful sorrow always by his side, he laughed his heartiest, and kept his world of readers in a constant grin. "I couldn't cry, so I had to laugh. I would have gone mad if I hadn't. I tried to keep the blue devils away with my pen. I wrote and wrote, but I was in hell all the time. I suppose they laugh all the time there. I have tried drinking lately, but it's no use, and I think I shall try water, soon," with a horribly significant gesture toward the river, lying far down below us in the valley. So he rambled on in an aimless way, with many, horrible, almost blasphemous jests until the valley lay in darkness beneath us and the dark arch above us twinkled with a thousand stars. We descended in silence until we neared the hotel. A stylish dog-cart just then passed us, in which sat a lady alone. George Kane ran from my side to the horse's head and stopped it.

"Mary!" he cried: "for God's sake Mary listen to me!"

The woman half rose at the sound of his voice, and then with her whip upraised, in a hard voice, brazen and loud, answered him:

"O, get out of my way, George Kane!"

He let the rein go, and stood there irresolute and miserable. The light from a hotel window fell on his face. There was no laughter there now. White, distorted, haggard, and weary of life, a face I can never forget, and when the whip descended with a hiss and the frightened horse sprang forward, it went down, and was crushed in the dust of the road. The horse, with a furious gallop, rushed along the rough road; the dog-cart pitched this side and that, and finally was overturned, and two days afterward George Kane lay in the college cemetery buried beside his wife.—G. A. Copeland. in Washington Hatchet.

His Wife Was Good to Him.

He had failed for half a million, and his assets would not pay 2 cents on the dollar. He gave up everything he had to satisfy his creditors, not even reserving the watch in his pocket. And yet they growled. An old friend called to see him. He met him at the depot with a $5,000 span of horses and conveyed him to a $200,000 residence, where he dined and wined him like a prince, on the finest of china and costliest of plate.

"Why, Jones," said his old friend, "I thought you had failed!"

"So I have—given up everything, absolutely everything, to my creditors, as an honest man should," replied the bankrupt, in a tone of self-abnegation.

"Why, you appear to be living pretty well," remarked the old friend.

"Ah, my dear sir, how mistaken you are!" returned the 2-cent-on-a-dollar failure. "Everything that you see is my wife's—absolutely everything. But she is too tender-hearted to deprive me of their use on account of my misfortune."—Pittsburg Chronicle.

WIT AND HUMOR.

Shylock—I will have my bond.
Portia—Not if it's Wabash.—Puck.

Our Pat says he prefers watermelon to any other kind of fruit; the green above the red ought to please an Irishman, surely.—Boston Courier.

"What is the 'silent partner' of a firm?" asked a youngster of his father. "The silent partner is the one who when called upon for money, makes a great deal of noise about putting it up."

"It's a cold day when I get left," observes the ice-cream man softly to himself as he pours out another pan of skim milk and drops an extra lump of oleomargarine into the freezer.—Lowell Citizen.

"Horribly dry work, speechifying in this weather," said a great orator last week to a humble but gushing admirer. "Dry!" returned the satellite, wishing to overflow with wit. "It oughtn't to be dry, for I've been drinking in every word you uttered." "Ah, indeed!" replied the great one; "then I suppose you've been making a draught of my speech."—Punch.

The boys tell a good joke on Billy Carter. While at the Moberly Fair he was trotting Joe Stanhope in a race and lost the first heat. Frank James came to him and said: "Carter, I have bet $500 on your horse. He can win this race. Do you hear? He can win this race." He won the next three heats and the race.—Mexico (Mo.) Ledger.

"My husband is very little help to me about the house," remarked Mrs. Smith to her friend. "He never does any of the marketing. He always forgets to bring anything home with him." "How different he is from my husband," responded her friend sadly. "In what way?" "Mr. Jones comes home loaded every night."—New York Graphic.

"Why," he pleaded, "our very circumstances bind us together; our similar tastes, our friendship, long acquaintance—" "Yes," she replied, "even age could bind us together." "What age, dearest?" he asked. "Mucilage," answered she, gloomily. A minute later, as he paste up and down the room alone, he realized that his failure was gumplete.—Life.

It is stated that just before a Hindoo woman dies a cow is brought in that she may take hold of its tail as her life passes away. Anybody who has been yanked over a two-acre lot of newly-plowed ground, deathlessly gripping the tail of an impulsive cow, can understand how the heathen rite is supposed to typify the longing of a person to die.—Rockland Courier.

Herbert Spencer, with all his philosophy and fine figure of speech, is only a man, after all. He declares that he will never marry a woman who is "convex" in the back, concave in the bosom, and sentimentally drooping in the shoulders.

The Aztecs, before the conquest of Mexico by the Spaniards, recognized the value of trees for the maintenance of moisture and the promotion of irrigation. Prescott tells us that their law contained severe penalties against the destruction of forests.

"Steve Meek, the pioneer hunter and trapper of California," who first went out to that state in 1832, is now at Reading, Colorado, seventy-nine years old, full of rheumatism, and, like most of the California pioneers, not overburdened with this world's goods.

An anecdote is related that Mr. Emerson would pay Mr. Alcott a visit in the morning, when they would converse, and in the afternoon Mr. Alcott would return the visit and repeat the words Mr. Emerson had said to him in the morning, when Mr. Emerson would exclaim after his departure, "Wonderful is Alcott!"

Governor Begole has received, through George M. Gowan, formerly a major in the Confederate army, the flag of the Twenty-third Regiment of Michigan Infantry, which it lost during the war. The governor will turn it over to the veterans at their reunion. His own son died while a member of that regiment.

An erratic peach tree in an orchard at Sunnyside, Ga., full-grown, will never yield fruit when the other trees are bearing. When, however, the early peach trees produce nothing, as happens to be the case this year, then the peculiar tree in question is sure to be full of fruit, and gladdens its owner with a lavish yield.

Shorthand is an accomplishment now quite generally demanded in London of clerks and bookkeepers. For £100 per annum the merchant often expects to hire a clerk who understands both bookkeeping and shorthand writing. It is more common in England than here for young ladies to hold the position of private secretary.

A curious nee e, says the Toronto Globe, is in posse sion of Queen Victoria. It was made at the celebrated needle factory at Redditch, and represents the Trojan column in miniature. Scenes from the Queen's life are depicted on the needle, so finely cut and so small that they are only discernable through a microscope.

Mr. Mather, the Commissioner sent here by the English government to examine and report upon the condition of technical education in this country, reports that there is generally greater consideration shown here for the comfort of workers in iron, "while at work" than in England, but that the hours of work are longer. He gives high praise to the sobriety and efficiency of American workmen.

OIL FROM NATURE'S WELLS.—The skin on the head is kept soft and flexible by a secretion from the oil glands. When these are clogged the hair dries and falls off. Parker's Hair Balsam renews their action, restores the original color to the hair and makes it soft and glossy. It also eradicates dandruff. Not greasy, not a dye, deliciously perfumed. Delightful for a lady's toilet table. The best of dressings. Preferable to all similar articles because of its superior cleanliness and purity.

From the report of Chief Engineer, D. S. Littlefield, for the year ending Feb. 1. 1885, we gather the following facts. The department consists of two steam fire engines, manned by fourteen men each including engineers and firemen. Five hose carriages manned by fifteen men each, with the exception of Hose 1. which has twelve men. Hose 1, 3, and 4 are fitted, and are run by horses while 2, and 5 are hand carriages. There is one Hook and Ladder Truck, run by two horses and manned by fifteen men. The whole force of the department including engine men, hosemen, engineers and firemen of steamers, drivers, janitor and the Board of Engineers is just 125 men. The Chief Engineer has department property under his charge to the amount of $56,430. There is 8400 feet of cotton hose and 1250 feet of leather hose owned by the department. There were 19 alarms of fire for the year, 8 of them being for working fires. The losses by fire during the year were $192,236.83 upon which there was an insurance of $143,210.22 leaving a total loss above the insurance of $49,026.61. The Chief says "at the present time, as a result of the requirements of the New England Insurance Exchange, an additional expense to the town is being incurred for the maintenance of an extra pair of horses in order that both steamers may respond to every alarm. Whether it is advisable or necessary to continue this expense, or to add to it by purchasing another pair of horses, the town must determine; but considering the excellent water service possessed by the town, it would seem that ample protection would be afforded by keeping one pair at all times in the stable ready for immediate use on a Steamer, and by having the horse used by Hose No 1, whenever at work for the Highway department, within one quarter of a mile of the brick house." The Chief takes occasion to return thanks to Chief Osborne and assistants and the Salem fire department for the prompt assistance rendered at the Pinder & Winchester's fire. Also the officers and members of the Peabody department for the courtesy shown him in his official position and for their faithful and ready performance of their duty.

In his remarks in relation to the need of the extra pair of horses, we beg to differ with him. It is certainly advisable to run out both steamers on the first alarm, as was demonstrated at Upton's fire, where it was clearly seen that the second steamer should be on the spot in case of accident to the other. As to the excellent water facilities, we have the finest, but the pressure is apt at times to fluctuate, and at a time when it is needed most sometimes, while with steamers at hand a steady and powerful stream can be brought to bear in a few minutes, time. The cost of horses and the keeping of them is as nothing compared to the value of having the engines on the spot at the time when they are wanted.

The Chief recommends that all the Newport hydrants be taken out and hydrants of an improved pattern be substituted. This is a good idea as all the hydrants should be of one make and style instead of having several styles as at the present time.

The report is a good fair and candid statement of the departments under his charge.

Captain John H. Tibbets one of Peabody's ex-foremen, will undoubtedly take the helm of that town's department the ensuing year. John P. Sumner and Harvey Buxton are being urged to accept nominations for assistant engineers. George O. Pierce and Captain Reed of the present force will also be re-nominated.—Sunday Globe.

The Globe speaks as though the above was a foregone conclusion, and that a very radical change would be made in the Board. It is a little previous for that paper to assume that there will be any change, until after the new Board of Selectmen are elected, as the appointing of the Engineers lays with that Board. Foreman J. A. P. Sumner, while he would make a good Engineer, says that as far as he is concerned, nothing has been said to him about the matter. It will be time enough to talk about who shall be on the Board after the new town government is inaugurated.

Alfred Currier, ex-driver in this department, has a position as teamster for one of the large grocery firms in Boston. All he is obliged to do is the driving, having men to do the loading and unloading; his teams are all taken care of for him.

"Watch" an old Newfoundland dog owned by Foreman J. A. P. Sumner was killed Saturday. He was thirteen years of age and was a regular fire dog, always hearing a fire alarm, and attendding as regular as any member of the department. He could always be found near the steamers of late years, although his first line was the Old Volunteer hand engine. The dog could distinguish a fire bell when all the bells in town were ringing.

Since the swing harness has again been put in position several trials of quick hitching have been made, and the best time was made last Saturday, when the horse was in the stable. The gong was struck and in just 35 seconds the carriage was out in the street. This is pretty good time for a beginning, but with a little practise it can be beaten. The horse has to be led in from the stable nearly 75 feet distant, and this takes up a number of seconds. If the stalls were turned around, and changes made in the house so that the horses would always face the apparatus, this time could be got down to less than half that number of seconds. The other apparatus should be supplied with the swing harnesses as it would be not only a great saving of time, but it would be a great relief to the horses who now have to stand in the stables all day and night with the heavy collars on.

Fred Carleton was elected a member of Hook & Ladder No. 1, at their meeting Monday night, in place of Edward Flynn, resigned.

The Board of Engineers will hold a meeting this evening.

There is one thing which should be done this coming year, and that is to put new locks on the doors of the Central station. There are too many keys held outside the department at the present time. The first door on the side should be fastened up and not used at all, as it is a bad thing to have that door thrown open in the faces of the horses, as is done time and again when an alarm of fire is given and the horses are being hitched upon the steamer. z

SKATING RINK NOTES.

The polo game at the rink last Saturday night between the Salems and Peabodys, was largely attended. The game was called at 9.30 and was continued half an hour. Felton secured the rush in the first, second, fourth and fifth goals, and the third and sixth were taken by Hill of Salems. Waterhouse and Felton played together and the usual brilliant plays were made by Morrill of the Peabodys and Reed of the Salems, while the neat way in which Sullivan raised the ball from the floor, and sent it to the other side of the rink was very commendable. The first goal was won by the Peabodys in 3 m. 5 s., the second by the Salems in 2 m. 10 s.; the third by the Peabodys in 2 m. 35 s. and the fourth by Salems in 2 m. 45 s, the fifth by the Salems 2 m. 30 s., sixth by the Salems in 35 s. The game was called while the 7th goal was being played.

Gen. Daniel Pratt says that a thousand dollars would be no temptation for him to put on roller skates. You see he is averse to placing his beauty in jeopardy. Some men are over proud of their shape.—Chelsea Telegraph.—Daniel was in town Monday, and says the above is strictly true, and nothing would induce him to risk his valuable life on roller skates.

Quite a number of the friends of the Peabody polo team accompanied them to Chelsea last Thursday evening to see the second in the series with the Bay States of that city. The game was interesting and finely played. The Peabodys were however defeated, the score standing three to two.

Now is the winter of the rink manager
Made glorious summer by this roller craze;
And all the clouds which low'red on his house
Sunk, silver-lined, into his treasure box.
Now are our brows bound up in Arnica;
Our bruised arms hung up in bandages.
Unstable man has changed his wrinkled front,
And now, instead of driving bony steeds
To fill the coffers of the livery keeper,
He bobs serenely o'er the rink's enclosure,
To discordant braying of a loud brass band.

The Peabodys met the Globes of Haverhill. last evening, and defeated them in just 22 minutes by the score of 3 to 1. The game was finely contested, the home club outplaying the Globes at every point. The third game in the series with the Salems will be played on Friday evening next at Salem.

Manager Reed of Salem, is to have a grand fancy dress carnival on Thursday evening, May 12th. He has placed some fine lithographs about town advertising it.

The Salems are still in the lead in the New England League and are to be the winner of first place.

The following is the report of the Engineer of the pumping station. Whole number, 19,368,030 gallons pumped last month, average per day 691.715 gals. Pounds of coal used 47,477; average pounds per day, 1695. Gallons of water pumped per pounds of coal 407. Average running time 7 hours and 59 minutes per day.

Representative Moseley, editor and proprietor of the Hyde Park Gazette, has presented in the Legislature a petition of the Suburban Press Association for legislation relative to the publication of tax collectors' sales, sheriffs' sales and probate citations. THE DRAMA.

At the Boston Theatre "Francesca da Rimini," was welcomed on Monday by an overflowing audience. Every succeeding representation has been seen by appreciative throngs, who have applauded the acting and admired the elegant and elaborate stage setting provided by Mr. C. S. Getz and his associates. Barrett's fine impersonation of Lanciotto, marked by care, study and intelligence from first to last, thoroughly consistent in every detail, needs at this time no words of praise. Louis James makes as effective a Pope as ever; Marie Wainwright is a very good Francesca, while Mr. Mosley is seen to advantage as Paolo. The tragedy is acted with care throughout, and the betrothal scene is one of the most striking stage pictures which has been seen here. "Francesca da Rimini" is to have its last performances during the current engagement at the Boston in the course of the present week.

Janish, The Austrian Star, will appear at the Park Theatre the coming week.

Next week Maggie Mitchell will play a short engagement, appearing in her favorite plays.

This week and next, Edwin Booth returns to the Boston Museum, with the stock company that has been supporting him in New York. To-night Booth will play, "A New Way to Pay Old Debts." Two performances are to be given of the play, and Booth's Sir Giles Overreach is likely to make a great impression upon his auditory. For Friday and Saturday evenings "The Apostate" is announced, the star appearing as Pescara. The Saturday matinee will be particularly interesting. "Don Cæsar de Bazan" will be the play given for the first time in many years in its entirety and with all the incidental music. Booth is to take the title character in the romantic drama. Monday and Tuesday of next week, he plays Richard III.

Popular favor has been accorded to "Apajune," at the Bijou, and there are many indications that the opera will round out very prosperously Mr. McCaull's lyric season. Milloecker's melodies are all given to advantage, and the orchestra does entire justice to a score that is by no means easy to perform. Miss Lily Post appears to advantage as Natalitza, and all the company give their best endeavors to make the representation bright and effective. "Apajune" will be given at the Bijou all the week.

The many friends of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. S. Knight, will be pleased to learn that they will appear this week at the Globe Theatre, in "Over the Garden Wall."

"Julius Cæsar," with Barrett as Cassius, Louis James as Brutus and Mosley as Marc Antony, will be an event at the Boston next week.

A boy employed by Whiton & Knight, Bromfield Street, Boston, was given a package for the PRESS recently to be delivered to Munroe & Arnold's express, and the bill was sent with orders to collect of the expressman, the amount $1.50 the boy increased to $1.60. A few days later he had another package for us and this was increased 60 cents. After inquiring at the office of Whiton & Knight to know why the increase of price had been made without notifying us, they were surprised to learn of it, and last Friday a decoy bundle with the bill was sent to the express office, which was raised by the boy $1.00. The bundle was detained and the progressive youth handed over to the police.

A great deal of interest centered in the all-day of prayer for prohibition, held in the South Church vestry on Tuesday. The talk from Mrs. A. J. Gordon, of Boston, was listened to with pleasure, as was also Rev. Mr. Sperry's talk upon the work of the Law and Order League, and the cheering words from Rev. Mr. Colwell. The following resolution was unanimously passed:

Resolved, that the women gathered in this meeting desire to most sincerely give thanks to the members of the Law and Order League, the Town Officers, Selectmen, and Policemen more especially, for so grandly enforcing the law against violators of the liquor law.

At this meeting it was proposed that all women of the town be invited to come to the Town House, at the Chestnut street entrance, on the afternoon of town meeting day, and deposit a ballot for or against license. The W. C. T. Union will have a box in readiness. This vote will not be counted with those cast by the men, but is only to be an expression of moral power. If unable to come, a paper bearing the name of the lady, with a yes or no, can be sent to the box.

A No-License Rally will be held in the school house hall at West Peabody, Thursday evening, March 5th, at 7.30, and will be addressed by Rev. W. G. Sperry, Rev. J. W. Colwell and Mr. Charles A. Haskell. Let all the people rally.

The police raided the Washington House, owned by Mrs. William Hayes this afternoon and captured in the bar room a quantity of rum, whiskey and ale.

YES OR NO.

To give in their votes, on a ballot separate from all others, Yes or no, in answer to the following question: "Shall licenses be granted for the sale of intoxicating liquors in this town?"

Next Monday the citizens of this town will be called upon to settle this question. What the result has been in the year past is already familiar to your readers and is a reason of congratulation to the town. Shall we continue the good work begun, or shall we assist in placing a sign over the doorway of every rumshop which shall say, "licensed," in other words "in partnership with the town." Do the young men of this town to whom we are to look in the future for her prosperity, do they want to see the rum shops re-opened? They want to take a sensible view of the question and deal with it with deliberation. Don't vote for license because some friend asked you to, nor because you have cherished a little animosity toward the St. John party during the last election. That has nothing to do with our town affairs, it is a question with you whether you want these places of temptation to your friends and relatives kept closed as they are now, or whether you will assist in opening them by voting for license. Licensing a wrong don't make it right, and voting for license, only puts the responsibility on your shoulders and makes you an abettor of any crime and all the misery that will surely follow the re-opening of the rum-shops. I often hear men say, to license is the easiest way out of it. If your boy disobeys rules you have laid down for him and if he is wilful and in a fair way to make you and himself miserable, would you give him license to do as he pleases? It certainly would be the easiest way out of it, if it does ruin the boy and you too in the end. I could give you hundreds of reasons why the vote should be "No" on this question, but space will not permit and they are familiar to you as to me. War has been declared and you are forced to be in the ranks, shall it be to defend your honor and to conquer? Ask your conscience.

The Gloucester Advertiser, a pronounced temperance paper formerly, seems to be utterly opposed to Mayor Parsons' execution of the law against rum selling and houses of prostitution in that city. Why?—Beverly Citizen.

STREET GOSSIP, AS GLEANED BY Mulcahy
NOTES

I want to tell you readers this week, of a little piece of gossip I heard the other day and how a young miss got a sealskin sack. There is a woman living not half a mile from Tremont street who has figured in our police court for keeping liquor with intent to sell. Recently two of our officers whom we will call the "Two Johns" for short, visited her place, and among other rooms entered a parlor, which had not been inspected by the officers at their previous visit. Now this room was where the woman kept her supply. When the officers entered, two jugs which contained her stock were concealed behind the door. The officers began to search the room, and while the woman engaged them in conversation, her young daughter entered the room and unnoticed by the officers carried off the jugs, one in each hand, to a place of safety, while the "Two Johns" searched in vain for liquor. As a reward for her faithful service the mother presented her daughter with a sealskin sack, spending the amount it would have cost her had she been convicted in the police court.

There is a pretty smart female book agent canvassing this town at present, and with remarkable success. She is good looking, has a very pleasing address and lives in Boston, coming out nearly every day as she has a season ticket on the railroad. Her method of introducing herself is to ring the bell, ask if Miss So and So is at home (giving the name of the lady of the house,) and receiving a favorably reply, she enters, and on meeting the lady she represents that she has been recommended to her as one who would be likely to subscribe to her book, the merits of which she very fluently explains, and at the same time carefully gathers all the information she can concerning the neighbors, while not seeming to ask any pointed questions at all. This information is carefully treasured and a few days later she calls upon the neighbor, to whom she repeats the same story and at the same time gets more information.

GEORGIE, you are correct. I have heard several people denounce roller skating and in terms neither polite or grammatical, but it has always been about the first time they tried it.

A young man employed in a store on the square made his usual visit to West Peabody last Sunday night. He has been in the habit of making these visits but without the knowledge or consent of the other boys in the store. But the rain last Sunday kept him all night, and this gave him away. Of course he don't go there to see Lizzie———he goes to play "old sledge" with his old friend Plaisted, the junction ticket seller.

I have in my mind's eye a young lady teacher in one of our public schools who will reach distinction one of these days and has approved herself as abundantly competent to get married and manage a husband. A young hoodlum having defied her authority and questioned her ability to correct him, was brought to a realizing sense of the situation when he found himself laid over a front desk, and the part of his pants where the most wear comes was being thoroughly dusted. There is no question now in his mind as to who was victorious.

I went to the caucus last Saturday night expecting to use this whole column in describing it, but it was the tamest Citizen's Caucus I have attended for years. Everything was harmonius, everyone seemed so satisfied with himself, and the speakers were a regular mutual admiration society, and the presiding officers made no mistakes and there want a bit of fun anyway. But then as I looked over the hall, I noticed a large number of veterans in town politics, some were chuck full of patriotism, with no chance to fire it off, some were just as full of poor whiskey who would have been greatly relieved to have fired it off, while the fellow who had my sympathy the most was the one who sat on the front seat with his pockets stuffed with ballots for which there was no demand, and to add to his discomforture the glass in the hall was 102 in the shade, and he didn't dare to take his coat off for fear of giving himself away.

I learn that one of our Democratic brothers is putting himself in training for the post office here. He is a Grand Army man, and has the Hon. Richard Spofford, late candidate for Congress from this district, enlisted in his service, and it is expected that the latter gentleman will control the patronage in this vicinity under a Democratic administration.

WILMOT'S

Grand Triumphant Sale of New York Clothing,

Purchased by us at less than 33 per cent. of the actual cost, and now being sold by us to our retail trade on the same basis, has thoroughly waked up the people of Essex County, and at the same time has disturbed the somnolence of our Copper Colored Competitors who are now making unusual efforts to meet us by trying to palm off on the public a visionary sale of clothing, bought from a retiring Boston Wholesale Clothing House. (???)

But its no use, we always have and always shall undersell all competitors, and at this special sale we guarantee to sell you goods at less than half the prices our competitors ask for the same grade of goods.

Don't be deceived by sham advertisements. Come direct to us and we will prove to you that what we state are facts and not fiction.

Clothing Dealers' Bargains

In the Rear.

We have just purchased a large part of the stock of a well-known retiring wholesale Clothing firm of Boston, at a great discount from the first cost. To the above stock we have added all of our last spring's goods that were packed away, and shall offer to our patrons a stock of Twenty thousand dollars ($20,000) worth of good style, perfect and well made clothing, at such low figures that it would seem almost impossible to credit it. You will never believe it until you see for yourselves. This is no gammon about this sale.

Remember this is not a Bankrupt Stock of Clothing, neither is it a New York racket, both, we think, are about played out.

We give honest goods for honest money and at honest prices and agree to give better bargains from this stock than was ever given from any Bankrupt Sale ever started in this section of the country. This stock comprises the following lots, and is only a small part of our immense stock.

800 Men's and Young Men's Dress and Business Suits.
1500 Pairs Men's Pantaloons. 300 Boys' Long Pant Suits. 600 Men's. Young Men's, Boys' and Children's Overcoats.
600 Children's Suits, ages 4 to 12.

READ THE LOWEST PRICES EVER BEFORE NAMED FOR GOOD RELIABLE CLOTHING.

Eight hundred Men's and Young Men's Business and Dress Suits, comprising over 40 different styles to select from, made in single and double breasted Sack Suits and cutaway Frock Suits, will be sold as follows:

Fernald and Daniel J. Conroy.

DARK DAYS.

The fairest woman on the earth adores you. Why hesitate? Why let one boor's life weigh in the scale?

Argue the matter in another way. Are not thousands of men slain every year by the whim of a monarch or a statesman? The thought of their deaths troubles not those who send them forth to fight. Men kill each other for revenge, for money, for a point of honor, and the killer lives on like other men live! Trust this man to the vaunted array of justice. He is innocent, and will come from the ordeal unscathed. If found guilty, let him die. He will not be the first innocent man who has died, nor will he be the last to die. It is but one live! He is nothing to you; think of him no more. Come what may, you will always have your sunny home and the woman you love. Her children will grow up around you. Why hesitate? A life's happiness is to be won by simply sealing your lips. Its cost is but, supposing Justice blunders, to bear the burden of one man's death. A paltry price!

This was the temptation with which I wrestled during those long hours. Again and again I was on the point of yielding. Once or twice I rose to my feet with the fixed determination of destroying that paper, and letting things take their own course. Once or twice I even forced my steps some distance in the direction of home, but each time I turned, went back to the sheltered spot, threw myself again on the ground, and fought the battle anew.

No, I could not do this thing. I was a gentleman and a man of honor. Paltry as the price was when compared with what it might buy, I could not pay it. Although my whole soul was merged in Philippa's welfare, I could not, even for her sake, suffer an innocent man to be done unjustly to death. The crime was too black, too base, too contemptible! I felt sure that, with the man's blood morally on my head, the supremest joys which life could give would not lull my conscience to rest. I knew it would not be long before remorse and shame drove me to commit suicide.

Let the preachers say that sin is easy; that wrong is more alluring than right. There may be some sins which are easily committed, but I dare to say that there are others which the average man, educated by the code of honor, and dreading shame and cowardice, finds it far easier to avoid than to bring himself to commit. No, every sin is not easy!

But all the same my struggle was a mortal one. At times I fancy—it may be but fancy—that even now my mind bears some traces of that conflict; a conflict in which my victory meant ruin to my nearest and dearest. Was I not right when I said that my temptation was an all but unparalleled one? Yet in reasserting this let me humbly disclaim all credit for not having yielded. I strove to yield, but could not.

It was only when I had conquered and put the temptation from me that I was able to see how utterly useless such a crime as that urged upon me would have been. Doubtless Philippa, sooner or later, would have learned that Sir Mervyn Ferrand's supposed murderer had paid the penalty of the crime. How would it have fared with us then—then, when reparation was placed out of the question? Knowing as I did every thought of my wife's, every turn of her impulsive, sensitive nature, I was fain to tell myself that such news would be simply her death blow.

But what was to be done? Finding that I could not compass the treachery which I dared to meditate, I cast about for another loophole of escape. What if I were to return to England and accuse myself of the crime? To insure Philippa's safety I would right willingly give away my own life. It showed the state to which my mind was reduced when I say that I considered this scheme in all its bearings, and for a while thought it furnished a solution to my difficulties! I wonder if my brain was wandering?

I laughed in bitter merriment as the absurdity of my new plan forced itself upon me. I had forgotten Philippa, and what the effect of such a sacrifice would be upon her. I had forgotten that she loved me, even as I loved her; that my dying for her sake—for the sake of saving her from the consequences of that gruesome night—would make an expiation, if any were due from her, the most fearful which human or diabolical ingenuity could devise.

No! Neither by sinning against my fellow-man nor by a voluntary sacrifice of my own life could I save her. After all my protracted mental struggles, all my lonely hours of anguish and wild scheming, I was forced to return to the point from which I started. Philippa must surrender herself, and free this innocent man. There was, indeed, no alternative!

And a day gone, or all but gone! The trial on the 20th! To reach England—to reach Tewnham in time to stop that trial we must travel day and night. Day and night across sunny or starlit Spain—across pleasant France—we must speed on, until we reached our own native land, now lying in all the rich calm of the early autumn. I must lead my wife; my love, to her doom!

I rose from the ground. I felt weary, and as if I had been cudgeled in every limb. I dragged myself slowly back to my home. "She must be told; she must be told. But how to tell her?" I muttered as I went along. My appearance must have been wretched, for I received the impression that several grave looking Sevillanos turned and looked after me as I passed by. Even as a cowardly felon who drags himself slowly to the scaffold I dragged myself to the gate of my pleasant home, and on tottering feet passed into that fragrant space in which the happiest hours of my life had been spent.

As I entered, the remembrance of some tale which once I had read flashed through my mind—a tale of the ferocity of a bygone age. It was of a prisoner who was forced by his captors to strike a dagger into the heart of the woman he loved. I know not where the tale is to be found or where I read it.

But it seemed to me that mine was a parallel case.

Pity me!

CHAPTER XIII.

THE LAST HOPE.

They were sitting in the courtyard, my mother and my wife. They looked the embodiment of serene happiness. Their large fans—the use of the fan came like an inspiration to Philippa, my mother acquired it after much practice—were languidly waving to and fro. Philippa's rounded arm was outstretched; her fair left hand was in the clear water which fell from the fountain and filled a white marble basin, in which the gold carp darted about in erratic tacks. She was moving her fingers gently backward and forward, startling the timid fish, and half smiling at their terror. It seemed to me that my mother was remonstrating at the uproar she was creating in the brilliant coated republic.

That picture is still in my mind. That picture! I can sit now in my chair, lay down my pen, and call up every picture of that time. Nothing save the grief has ever, or ever will, fade from my memory.

It was well for both of us that I had fought out the battle with myself in solitude, where no eye could see me, where I could see no one. Even as it was, knowing what a change my news must work, I paused, and a ghost of the day's temptation rose before me. But it rose too late. The die was cast. Philippa had seen me, and my mother's eyes followed hers. I braced myself up and went towards them with as jaunty a manner as I could assume. My mother began a mock tirade on my shameful desertion of Philippa and herself. Her words carried no meaning to my ears. My eyes met those of my wife.

With her I made no attempt at concealment. Where was the good? The worst, the very worst, had come. My eyes must have told her the truth.

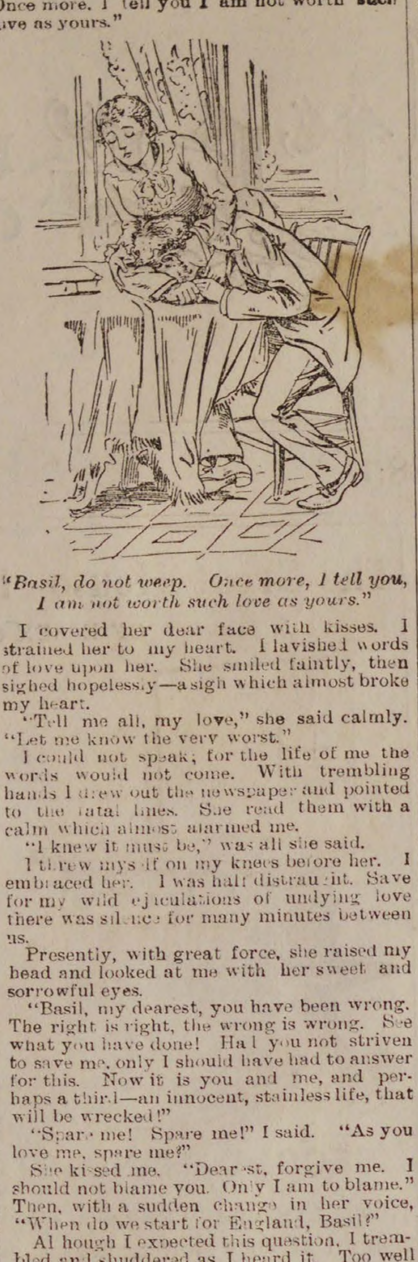
I saw her sweet face catch fire with alarm. I saw her lips quiver. I saw the look of anguish flash into her eyes; yet I knew that I was helpless, utterly helpless.

She rose. I made some conventional excuse and went to my room. In a moment Philippa was at my side.

"Basil, husband, love," she whispered, "it has come!"

I laid my head on the table and sobbed aloud. Philippa's arms were wreathed around my neck.

"Dearest, I knew it must come. I have known it ever so long. Basil, do not weep. Once more, I tell you I am not worth such love as yours."



"Basil, do not weep. Once more, I tell you, I am not worth such love as yours."

I covered her dear face with kisses. I strained her to my heart. I lavished words of love upon her. She smiled faintly, then sighed hopelessly—a sigh which almost broke my heart.

"Tell me all, my love," she said calmly. "Let me know the very worst."

I could not speak; for the life of me the words would not come. With trembling hands I drew out the newspaper and pointed to the fatal lines. She read them with a calm which almost alarmed me.

"I knew it must be," was all she said.

I threw myself on my knees before her. I embraced her. I was half distraught. Save for my wild ejaculations of undying love there was silence for many minutes between us.

Presently, with great force, she raised my head and looked at me with her sweet and sorrowful eyes.

"Basil, my dearest, you have been wrong. The right is right, the wrong is wrong. See what you have done! Had you not striven to save me, only I should have had to answer for this. Now it is you and me, and perhaps a third—an innocent, stainless life, that will be wrecked!"

"Spare me! Spare me!" I said. "As you love me, spare me!"

She kissed me. "Dearest, forgive me. I should not blame you. Only I am to blame." Then, with a sudden change in her voice, "When do we start for England, Basil?"

Although I expected this question, I trembled and shuddered as I heard it. Too well I knew what England meant. It meant Philippa's standing in open court, in a prisoner's dock, the centre of a gaping crowd, self-accused of the murder of her husband! And as I pictured this once more, and for the last time, the temptation shook me.

I spoke, but I averted my eyes from hers. I could not meet them. My voice was husky and strange; it sounded like the voice of another man. A sort of undercurrent of thought ran through me, that if Philippa would but share it, I could bear any burden, any dishonor.

"Listen!" I said, in quick accents. "We are far away, safe. We love each other. We can be happy. Let the man take his chance. What does anything matter, so long as we love and are together?"

I felt that her eyes were seeking mine. I felt a change in the clasp of her hand. I knew that she was nobler and better than I.

"Basil," she said, softly, and speaking like one in a dream, "it was not my husband, not the man I love, who said that. I forgive you for the sake of your great love, for the sake of all you have done, or tried to do, for me. Tell me now, when do we start for England?"

Her words brought back my senses. Never in the wildest height of my passion had I loved Philippa as I loved her at that moment. I besought her pardon. She gave it, and once more repeated her question.

With the calm of settled despair I consulted the railway-guide, and found that if we left Seville to-morrow morning by the first train, we might, by travelling day and night, early on the morning of the twentieth reach the town in which the trial was to be held. I made the result of my researches known to my wife; and upon my assuring her that we should have time to spare, she left all the arrangements of the journey to me.

After this, another painful question arose. Was my mother to be told? Philippa, who may, perhaps, in her secret heart have craved for a woman's support and sympathy in her approaching trial, at first insisted that my mother should be taken into our confidence—a confidence which, alas! in a few days' time would be gossip to the world. I besought her to waive the point, to spare my mother's feelings until the very last moment. We could not take her with us on our hurried journey. We were young; she was old. The fatigue, combined with the grief, would be more than her frame could endure. I could not bear to think of her waiting lonely in Seville for the bad news which she knew must come in a day or two from England. Let us say nothing respecting the wretched errand on which we are bound. Let us depart in secret, and leave some plausible explanation behind us.

To my relief Philippa at last consented to this. Then, after a long, tearful embrace, we steeled ourselves to join my mother at the evening meal, and to bear ourselves so that she should suspect nothing of the tempest within our hearts. We did not very long subject ourselves to this strain upon our nerves. It seemed to me now that every moment spent otherwise than alone with my wife was a precious treasure wasted, a loss which I should forever regret. So very early we pleaded fatigue, and retired to our rest. Such rest!

Philippa bade my mother good night with an embrace so long and passionate that I feared it would awaken alarm, especially when it was succeeded by my own veiled, but scarcely less emotional, adieu. For who could say that we should ever meet again? I do not believe it struck Philippa that in accompanying her I was running the slightest risk. Had she thought so, she would have insisted upon going alone. But I knew that the part I had played in that night's work would probably bring a severe punishment upon my own head. What did I care for that?

Silently and sadly in the retirement of our room we made our preparations for the journey, which began with the morn. There was no need to cumber ourselves with much luggage. We should rest in no bed until the trial was over. What resting-place might then be Philippa's, Heaven only knew! So our package was soon completed.

Then I wrote a letter, to be given to or found by my mother in the morning. I told her that an important matter took me post-haste to England; that Philippa had determined to accompany me; that I would write as soon as we reached London. I gave no further explanation. I hoped she would attribute my sudden flight to the erratic nature which she often averred I possessed.

After all, the deception mattered little. In a week's time nothing would matter. Grief, overwhelming grief, would be my portion; a portion which, by her affection for me and for Philippa, my poor mother would be forced to share.

All being now ready for our start, we strove to win some hours of sleep. Our efforts were mocked to scorn. Through that, the last night we could spend together, I believe neither my wife nor myself closed an eyelid. Let me draw a veil over my wild distress and Philippa's calm acquiescence in her fate. Some grief is too sacred to describe.

Morning! Bright, broad, clear, cool, odorous morning! Our sleeplessness had at least spared us the anguish of awaking, and, while for a moment glorying in the beauty of the world, to remember what this morning meant to us. Giving ourselves ample time to reach the railway station, we crept from our room, and, with eyes full of blinding tears, crossed the pleasant patio. I paused in the centre, and plucking a lovely spray from the great orange tree, kissed it and gave it to my wife. Without a word she placed it in the bosom of her dress. As she drew her mantle aside to do so, for the first time I noticed that she wore the very dress which clad her on that fatal night. Although it was utterly unsuited to the almost tropical heat through which we should have to travel, I dared not remonstrate with her. Now, of all times, her slightest wish should be my law.

Noiselessly I undid the massive studded wooden gate, which at night time closed the entrance to the patio. Unseen, we stepped into the shady, narrow street. Our luggage was light. I could carry it with ease to the station, which was only a short distance off. We were there only too soon.

We had to wait some time ere the train, which, following the example of the true Spaniard, declines on any consideration to be hurried, made its appearance. We took our seats in silence. At last the dignified train condescended to move onward. We sat side by side, and gazed and gazed in the direction of the beautiful city from which we were flying; gazed until we saw the very last of it, until even the great towering Giralda was lost to view. Then, and only then, I think we fully realized to what end we were speeding.

The next three days and nights seem now little more to me than a whirling dream. On and on we went to work out our fate, over the same ground which I had traversed, with scarcely less agitated feelings, some months ago. I ground my teeth when I thought how little my strenuous and seemingly successful efforts had availed. Now, not from any omission of precaution; not because the law compelled; not by the exercise of force; but simply on account of the great dictum of right and wrong, we were, of our own accord, retracing our steps to face the danger from which we had fled. Oh, bitter irony of destiny!

What was money to me now? Nothing but so much dross! It could do one thing, only one, that gold which I lavished so freely on that journey. It could assure that Philippa and I might travel alone. It could give us privacy for the time that journey lasted, that was all!

Yet although alone, we spoke but little. Our thoughts were not such as can be expressed by words. Her hand in mine, her head on my shoulder—sleeping when we could sleep, waking and looking into each other's faces—knowing that every mile of sunny or starlit country over which we passed brought us nearer to the end. Ah! I understood then how it is that lovers who are menaced by some great sorrow can kill themselves, and die smiling in each other's arms! We might have done so; but our deaths would have left to perish that stranger whom we were speeding to save.

So, as in a dream, the hours, the days, the nights, went by. We might have been travelling through the fairest scenery in the world, or through the most arid desert. I scarcely troubled to glance out of the carriage window. The world for me was inside.

It was after we left Paris—Paris, which to-day seemed almost within stone's throw of London—that I aroused myself and braced my energies to discuss finally with Philippa our proper plan of action. I felt that my right course would be to go straight to some solicitor, tell the tale, and ask him to put matters in train. But I could not bring myself to do this. Our secret was as yet our own. Moreover, through the misery of those hours, one ray of hope had broken upon me. If Philippa could be brought to yield to my guidance, to follow my instructions, it was not beyond the bounds of possibility that we might be saved, and saved with clean hands.

"Dearest," I whispered, "to-night we shall be in London."

Her fingers tightened on mine. "And at Tewnham?" she said. "We shall be in time?"

"In ample time. But, Philippa, listen——"

"Basil, as you love me, not one word to tempt, to dissuade me!"

"Not one; but listen. Sweetest, if you will be guided by me, even now all may go well. This man——"

"The poor man who is standing in my place?"

"Yes; listen. Heaven forbid that I should tempt you. Think; he is, no doubt, a man of a lowly station in life. Philippa, I am rich, very rich."

"I do not understand you," she said, pressing her hand to her brow.

"Money will compensate for anything. Let him stand his trial. He is innocent. If there is justice in the land, he may, he must be found not guilty."

"But the agony of mind he must pass through!"

"For that I will pay him over and over again. He may be but a country boor, to whom a thousand pounds would be inexhaustible wealth. But, whatever his station, the compensation sent to him by an unknown hand shall make him bless the day which laid him under the false accusation. Reflect, look at the matter in every light. I swear to you that, in my opinion, we may, with a clear conscience, await the result of the trial."

She sighed, but made no answer. Her silence was a joy to me. It told me that my specious argument carried weight. I took her hands and kissed them. I told her again and again that I loved her; that my life as well as hers depended on her yielding.

It was long before she yielded. The thought of a fellow-creature lying in prison, perhaps for months, and to-morrow to stand in shame before his judges, on account of a deed which she herself had done, was anguish to her noble nature. Then, growing desperate at seeing the only plank which could save us from wreck spurned for the sake of what, in my present mood, I was able to believe too finely strained a scruple, I used my last and, as I rightly judged, my most powerful argument. I told her that it would be not only she who would suffer for that unconscious act, but that I, her husband, must pay the penalty due from an accessory after the crime.

Heaven forgive me for the anguish my words caused that loving heart! Philippa, on whom the intelligence of my danger fell like a thunderbolt, sank back in her seat, pale and trembling. Had I ever doubted that my wife's heart-whole love was my own that look would have dispelled the doubt.

She prayed and besought me to leave her at the next station; to let her finish the journey and make her avowal alone. My reply was short, but sufficiently long to put all hope of my consenting to such a course out of her head. Then, for my sake, she yielded.

"On one condition—one only," she said.

"Be guided by me in this. In all else you shall do as you like."

"I must be in the court, Basil. I must hear the trial. If the worst happen, there must not be the delay of a moment; then and there I must proclaim the truth."

"You shall be at hand—close at hand. I will be present."

"No! I must be there. I must hear and see all. If the man is found guilty, I must, before his horrible sentence is pronounced, stand up and declare his innocence."

"All that could be done afterwards."

"No; it must be done then. Basil, fancy—put yourself in his place! Nothing could atone for his anguish at hearing himself condemned to death for a crime he knows nothing of. I must be there. Promise me I shall be there, and for your sake I will do as you wish."

It was the best concession I could get. I promised. I concealed the fact that if, when sentence was pronounced, a woman rose in the body of the court, and asserted the prisoner's innocence and her own guilt, the probabilities were she would be summarily ejected. This made no difference. Let Philippa be silent; let the man be found not guilty, and the next train could bear [us back to Seville.

Yes, even now there was hope!

CHAPTER XIV.

THE CRIMINAL COURT.

We reached Charing Cross at 4 o'clock on the morning of September 20. The first train by which we could get to Tewnham was timed to leave Liverpool street at seven, so that we had an hour or two to spare for such refreshment as we cared to take, such rest as we dared to allow ourselves. What with the fatigue of continuous travel, and the dread of what this day was to bring forth, it may be easily believed that we were thoroughly worn out. We were, indeed, more fitted to go to bed and sleep for a week than to proceed upon the last stage of our dismal journey.

But there was no help for it. If we meant to be in time we must go on by the early morning train. I begged my wife to lie down, and endeavor to snatch an hour's sleep. She refused firmly. Much of that calm which had characterized her since the moment when I broke the fatal news to her had vanished. Its place was now taken by an excitement, suppressed, but nevertheless clearly manifest to my eyes. The fear that we should not reach Tewnham in time for the trial seemed to haunt her unceasingly. It was for this reason she so peremptorily refused to lie down and court sleep. She feared lest, our eyes once closed, we should, from sheer exhaustion, sleep for hours, and so miss the morning train. She was ever picturing the horror of that poor unknown man being led from the dock, with the death sentence ringnig in his ears.

So the time which elapsed before we started for Tewnham we spent in the hotel. I bespoke rooms by telegram, sent when we reached Folkestone. We made an apology for a meal; in fact, what we could get at that time of night was of itself little more than apology. We sat all but silent, watching the hands of the clock, which told us how fast the precious moments were passing away. We saw the gray morning struggle with, and at last conquer, the yellow gaslight. We heard the hum of traffic growing louder and louder in the streets below us. Then we turned to make what may be rightly called our last adieus. Who could say that to-day my wife and I might not be parted forever?

While at the hotel I tried to obtain the file of the Times. I wanted to look back and see if I could find the account of magisterial proceedings against this unlucky William Evans. He must, of course, have appeared before the lesser tribunal, and could I see the account of his appearance I should be able to judge as to the strength of the case against him. But the file was not forthcoming. Perhaps it did not exist; perhaps the sleepy-eyed Teutonic waiter did not understand what I wanted; so, still in the dark as to why suspicion should have fallen upon this innocent man, we left the hotel and drove to Liverpool street station.

At 9 o'clock our journey was ended. We stood on the platform of Tewnham railway station. My poor wife wore a thick black veil, so her face I could not see; but I knew it was as pale as death. Now and again her hand, which rested on my arm, pressed it convulsively. I think we were the most unhappy pair on the earth!

We were even denied the time for any more farewells or expressed regrets. The hour was chiming from the old cathedral tower. The business of the courts, I knew, always began at 10 o'clock, and considering the crowd which would most surely be attracted by so interesting a case as this trial for murder committed so many months ago, I felt sure that unless we proceeded at once to the Shirehall our chance of gaining entrance would be but a small one. I hailed one of the close cabs which were waiting outside the station.

As I did so I felt a heavy hand laid upon my shoulder and heard a rich, pleasant-sounding and not unfamiliar voice exclaim, "Basil North, as I'm a sinner!"

That any one should at this moment address Basil North in a merry way seemed a positive incongruity. I turned around almost angrily, and found myself face to face with an old friend. He was a barrister named Grant; a man four or five years my senior, but one with whom, before I forswore the society of my fellow-men, I had been on intimate terms. I had not seen him for a considerable time; but had heard, casually, that he was making great strides in his forensic career.

In spite of my distress I returned his greeting and grasped his hand warmly. After all it seemed a relief to find that I had a friend left in the world.

"What brings you here?" I asked.

"The only thing that could bring me to such a place—circuit work. I have an important case on to-day. That's the worst of a place so near London as this one. One is tempted to spend the nights in town, which means getting up at an unholy hour in the morning. But you! Why are you here? I heard you were as rich as Midas, and living abroad in luxury."

"I have been abroad for some time. I hope to go back again very soon."

"Happy man!" he ejaculated. I could scarcely keep the bitter smile from my lips as I thought how ill applied were his words.

As he spoke he glanced at Philippa, whose grace and beauty of form defied the concealment attempted by thick veil and sombre garments.

"But what brings you to this sleepy old town?" continued Grant.

I hesitated for a moment. Then, thinking that truth, or at least half truth, was the best, told him I had come down to witness the trial for murder.

"I should doubt your getting into court," he said. "The morbid interest excited around about here is, I am told, very great. The sheriff is besieged by applications for tickets."

"Couldn't you help me? The fact is, I have a particular reason, not mere curiosity, for wishing to be present at this trial."

"I don't think I can," said Grant. "Does your—the lady wish to go with you?"

"My cousin—yes," I said seeing that he expected an introduction. He raised his hat and made some courteous and pleasant remark, to which Philippa, to my surprise, replied in a calm and fitting way.

Grant knew I had no sister. I called her cousin because I had a wild hope that, if the worst happened, I might be able to conceal the true relationship in which we stood, and so be permitted to give evidence on her behalf. I trusted my wife would guess that I had a good reason for this deception.

"Try and manage this for me, Grant," I said so earnestly that my friend made no further demur.

"Take me in your cab, and I will see what I can do."

During our drive to the Shirehall I asked Grant what he knew about the impending trial.

"Nothing," he said, frankly. "I hate murder cases—hate even to read about them. Of course I know that Sir Mervyn Ferrand was killed and hidden in the snow for days and days. But I know no more."

"Who is the accused?"

"I don't know. I thought, from your anxiety, you must know him."

"Will he be found guilty?"

"I don't know. Stay, I heard some one who ought to be well informed say yesterday that the case for the prosecution was most feeble. He seemed to doubt if the grand jury would return a true bill."

As I heard this I pressed Philippa's hand secretly. I felt that she was trembling.

The drive to the Shirehall occupied only a few minutes. We did not go to the public entrance, in front of which I could see a crowd of people nearly blocking up the street. We stopped at another door, and Grant, after looking around, caught sight of what appeared to be an inspector of police. He entered into a little conversation with him, the result of which was that we were given into his care.

"This is a breach of the law," whispered my friend as he bade me good-bye. "You will have to atone for it by a handsome gratuity."

We followed our guide. Philippa, although walking with a firm step, leaned heavily upon my arm. I scarcely know by what door we entered that palace of justice. The stalwart policeman led us through stone corridors and passages, which reechoed with the tread of our feet, and at last we found ourselves before a double swinging plain oak door, over which in old English letters was written "Criminal Court."

I felt Philippa shudder, and knew that the sight of those words brought the horror of the situation fully home to her. Mechanically I pressed a sovereign in the hand of the venial inspector, or whatever he was; then, holding my wife's hand, I passed through the noiseless swinging door into the all but empty court.

A few policemen and other officials were lounging about. Two or three people, who had no doubt gained admittance in the same way as we had done, were seated in various coignes of vantage. I led Philippa up the broad steps, and pointed to one of the hard wooden benches provided for the accommodation of the general public. These benches were raised step by step, one above another. We chose our position about half-way up, on the right-hand side of the court. Philippa, with her thick veil falling down to her chin, and so defying recognition, sank wearily into her seat. I placed myself beside her; my hand crept under the cloak she wore and held her hand.

Surely, it was all a dream—a dreadful, realistic dream! I should wake and find myself under the great orange tree in that courtyard in gay Seville, my half-smoked cigar and the book which I had been lazily reading lying at my feet; my mother opposite me, laughing at my somnolency, and Philippa's grave dark eyes looking with calm everlasting love into my own. I should wake and find the cool of the evening had succeeded to the glare of the afternoon. We should walk through the merry streets, lounge in the Alameda, wander through the glowing Alcazar gardens, or drive out miles and miles over the fertile smiling plains. Or I should even wake and find myself nodding over my fire in my lonely cottage, the stolid William the only human creature within hail; Philippa's return, the snow storm, the dreadful discovery, the flight, Seville, the marriage—all, all a dream!

In a kind of stupor—the temporary reaction, I suppose, consequent upon such fatigue and trouble—I gazed around me, and wondered where I was.

What is this great empty building, lit from one side by large clerestory windows raised boxes on either side of the building—of ecclesiastical design? What are these dull gray vacant walls, that lofty ceiling, crossed and cut into small squares by dark rafters, this leaded floor on which feet fall all but noiselessly? What are those those small railed platforms all but adjoining them, and all but adjoining that paneled oak structure at the end facing me? What is that rectangular box shaped erection with overhanging carved cornice? Let us away from this dismal, colorless place! Let me wake and find myself amid the flowers, orange trees, the fair sights and surroundings of our Spanish home.

No! I have but to turn my dazed eyes to the centre of space in which we sit to know that I am dreaming no dream; that we must wait here and learn our fates. That oblong wooden enclosure with high sides, topped by a light iron railing, brings reality back to me. It is the prisoner's dock. In an hour's time a man will stand there. He will be brought up those stone steps which lead to it from below, the topmost flag of which I can just see. He will stand there for hours. As he leaves the dock, declared innocent or guilty, so will our lives be declared happy or miserable.

My hand holds my wife's yet closer; for the last minutes which may be ours to spend together are slipping by so fast, so very fast!

See, the clock under the balcony marks half-past nine. The all but deserted court begins to assume the appearance of preparing for business. Policemen and other officials pass to and fro, some arranging papers, some replenishing ink-bottles, and placing quill pens ready for the barristers and solicitors who will soon fill those front seats. Some one, with what seems to me bitter irony, places a magnificent bouquet of flowers on either hand of the judge's vacant chair. What have flowers in common with such a scene as this? Flowers, too, which are beautiful enough to recall to my mind the fair Spanish home, which, maybe, we shall see no more. Flowers in this den of sorrow! Rather should every seat, every beam, be draped in black.

Now the doors on each side of the court open, and remain open. I hear a shuffling of many feet. People, in a continuous stream, pass through the entrance, and wend their way to the portion of the court allotted to the general public. So fast, so thick they come, that in ten minutes this space is thronged almost to suffocation. Philippa and I pressed closer and closer to each other, as every inch of the bench on which we are seated is appropriated. The court is full.

Crowded by respectable-looking, well-dressed people, who have gained admission, as I heard, by favor of the sheriff. Yet, respectable as they are, each man, each woman, rushes in eagerly and strives for the best available seat. And for what reason? To see and hear a poor wretch tried for his life! In my bitter mood I look with hate on these sensation seekers. I hate them even more when I think that their morbid craving for excitement may be satisfied with such food as they little expect; and I clinch my teeth as I picture the scene at that moment when Philippa, in pursuance of her immovable resolution, rises, and makes her effort to proclaim her own guilt and the convicted man's innocence. Although I strive to force the picture from my mind, by telling myself that justice cannot err, that the man will be acquitted, yet again and again the dread of the worst seizes me, and I hate every face in that crowd, which may, by and by, be gaping, with looks of wonder and curiosity, at the woman I love!

As in a haze I see some faces which are familiar to me. A number of gentlemen enter and seat themselves on the benches which counsel usually occupy. Some few of these I knew by sight. They are country gentlemen from the neighborhood of Roding, who are now called to serve on the grand jury. I see also the thin-faced, hawkish-looking woman who calls herself Mrs. Wilson. I am thankful that she takes a seat in front of us and does not see us. She, like ourselves, must know that an innocent man is this day about to be tried.

So for half an hour I sit, gazing now at the crowd of people, now at the empty dock and vacant bench in front of me; listening to the hum of voices which rises from the packed court; longing for the moment to come when this dreadful suspense may end; yet all the same dreading and willing to put off that moment. And all the while Philippa, in her black garb, close to me and, unseen by our neighbors, holding my hand.

Hush! The door at the back of the bench opens, and at ten o'clock to the minute the black-robed judge appears. He bows to the court, seats himself, and by his action signifies that he is ready to begin the business of the day. No trembling prisoner in the dock ever scanned the judge's face with more anxiety than I scan his lordship's at this present moment.

An old man, too old, it seems to me, for such a responsible post; an amiable, pleasant looking man—not, I venture to think, one who can bear the reputation of being a "hanging judge." I breathe a prayer that he may this day be able to direct aright the course of justice.

Hush! Hush! Silence in the court! Oh, my poor, sweet wife, let me grasp that hand yet closer, for the moment which for days and nights has never been absent from our minds has come! What will it bring us?

CHAPTER XV.

THE BLACK CAP.

There is silence, or all but silence, in the court. The buzz of suppressed conversation sinks almost to nothing—absolutely to nothing as the judge's marshal rises, and after gabbling through the mysterious proclamation which begins "Oyez! Oyez! Oyez!" declares the court open.

Philippa, still closely veiled, sits like a statue. Her hand, which ever grasps mine, scarcely responds to the pressure by which again and again I endeavor to bid her hope for the best. I would give much if even now I could get her to consent to my leading her away. I dare not suggest this. I know that doing so would be waste of words.

The court is open. The red judge is perusing letters and papers which lie in front of him as calmly and unconcernedly as if the life's happiness of, at least, one man and woman did not greatly depend upon the view he takes of the case about to be tried. He raises one of his bouquets and inhales the perfume of the flowers. How can one in his position behave like an ordinary mortal? Were we not here he might condemn an innocent man to a shameful death! I wonder if, with such horrible responsibility resting on him, a judge can ever really be a happy man?

These thoughts seem trivial; but my mind is by now in a strange state; it is, indeed, so sensitive that every slight incident, every small ceremonial of to-day seems to be impressed forever upon it.

A bewigged gentleman—the clerk of assizes, the man next me tells his neighbor—rises and calls name after name, until he has fixed the twenty-three gentlemen needed to form the grand jury. They stand up in the

Having had twenty years experience in the Tin and Sheet Iron business, I am prepared to guarantee satisfaction, and earnestly soliciting the patronage of the citizens of Peabody, I hope by prompt and faithful attention to their wants in my line to deserve success.

The following testimonials I am at liberty to publish:

SOUTHBRIDGE, July 30, 1884.

Having done business with P. W. Duffy in this town for ten years or more, and finding him straight-forward in all his deal, reasonable in his prices, though in his work, I take pleasure in recommending him as such, to whom it may concern. Respectfully,

LEONARD CUTLER,
Contractor and Builder.

SOUTHBRIDGE, July 30, 1884.

This it to certify, that having known P. W. Duffy for the past seven years, I do heartily recommend him as straight forward, and upright, and with the thorough knowledge of his business worthy of a large patronage.

LEGISLATIVE HEARING.

Mr. Relihan recalled, stated that he made an error in his previous statement, that the amount given as the West Peabody portion of the School House debt 2-25 of the total amount should be $294.40 instead of $136.39.

Mr. William Blaney, called by Mr. Wardwell. Stated he was in the Rail Road Station at West Peabody five or six weeks ago. Met Mr. Spaulding and Mr. Needham, with whom he had some conversation in relation to town matters, and after they took the cars, he asked Mr. Plaisted if he could tell him how the West Peabody people felt in regard to division.

Mr. Plaisted said that he did not think that the majority of the people were in favor of division, and did not think any other person could have got so many persons to sign the petition as Mr. Spaulding, as he was so persistent, that in his opinion, many would sign to get rid of him.

Since that time Mr. Blaney stated that he had met Mr. Plaisted at a former hearing at which both had been summoned to appear, when he stated that he was not particularly interested in the division, but signed the petition out of compliment to Mr. Spaulding on account of his signing a petition for his appointment as Post Master.

Mr. Poor recalled by Mr. Spaulding. Stated that he could not tell the year when the assessors of Peabody raised the valuations of property to its actual cash value. Thought it was between 1865 and 1870. The purpose was to put it up to its real value as near as they could. Added about 10 per cent. in the village and less outside.

Mr. Littlefield recalled by Mr. Spaulding, said that it was a question of time when water would be asked for from West Peabody. Have guessed that it would cost $100,000. Have laid pipes whenever 4 per cent. on the cost of laying could be guaranteed as income. Thought that the altitude of Stand-pipe sufficient to carry water in most parts of West Peabody. Remembered three times when the Fire Department had been in West Peabody Did not save the Winona Mill, but saved part of the Engine room. When Mr. Spaulding says that no property was saved at the Winona Mills fire, he either states what he don't know or does not tell the truth. Thinks there is only the ordinary supply of water from wells available in most parts of West Peabody to supply an engine in case of fire. This would be enough if used properly to save property. There are ponds which would be available in some parts.

Mr. Herrick, Selectman from West Peabody, first heard of the movement for division last Spring. Did not know how the movement arose. First heard of it from Mr. Spaulding. Some complaint had been heard in the Farmers' Club last winter and spring in relation to town matters. He, Mr. Herrick, circulated the remonstrance in West Peabody the first of the week of the first hearing before the Committee. Did not solicit any person to sign. Had talked with two or three persons who had signed the petition. Talked with Mr. Plaisted after he had seen his name on the petition. Supposed he was opposed to division and was surprised to see his name there, asked him why he had changed his mind He said he had not, but signed because Mr. Spaulding had done him a favor Had talked with Mr. Daniel B. Southwick after seeing his name on the petition. Asked him if he had changed his mind. He said that he had not, but had to sign to get rid of Spaulding. He had been to him several times. Did not attempt to draw those men out for the purpose of giving testimony. Have made an estimate of the population of West Peabody. Went to the Census returns made in 1880 by Mr. Viles and found the numbers to be 468; of this number 35 were persons whom he could not recognize as belonging in West Peabody. 135 have since died or moved away and 81 have been born or moved in since that time, making 413 as the present population, including the 35 doubtful names.

In making Valuation report and take account of all changes in real estate and get the personal estate. Requests for abatement are allowed when cause is shown as where wood is cut off. So far as he knew all requests from West Peabody had been allowed. An abatement was made to Henderson all that he required. The farm was the Daniel G. King place and was considered a good place. Did not think the Valuation high until he heard of the sale. Mr. Henderson told him that he had spent $2200 on the barn and other buildings, assessed at $1600. Samuel Hall lives near the Junction; Mr. Ingraham and Mr. Daniel B. Southwick live near him. Was present at the Town Meeting held for considering the division of the town. A good number was present from West Peabody.

Cross examination of Mr. Spaulding.

Mr. Southwick did not say he was sorry that he signed the petition, but thought he was from what he said. Think the Winona Mills property at one time was taxed for $8000

Amos Merrill testified that the Valuation of real estate in Peabody had been raised twice while he was a member of the board from the year 1870 to 1873, he thought. The first time a general rise was made of ten per cent. and the second of five per cent. on the property in the village, but no general advance was made in West Peabody, only in special cases where the Valuation seemed too low, was any change made.

The number of children between 5 and 15 years of age in West Peabody from 1839 to 1884 was given, showing the number to be much smaller now than in former years.

The brook running through the business part of the town taking the drainage of the factories is walled as far back as the drainage enters. The walling has been done chiefly by the parties owning land through which the brook runs. The lower portion has been done by the town, only about 100 feet remaining at the lower end towards the Salem line to be walled. No other expense is likely to arise except to complete the walling of this portion.

The extension of the town of late has been chiefly on Lowell street towards West Peabody. The land in that direction furnishes the best opportunities for building and further increase is likely to be in that direction.

To Mr. Spaulding. Cannot tell the total amount of increase in Valuation of real estate. Do not know that the increase was $1,400,000 in three years If that is the amount, a considerable part of the increase must have been caused by the building of dwelling houses, factories and other buildings and only a part by increasing the Valuation.

To the Chairman of the Committee.

No unpleasant relation has ever existed between the people in the village and those in West Peabody

All requests for reduction in Valuation coming from that section have been granted so far as he is informed Did not know of any instance where any estate in West Peabody was valued by the assessors above the sum which the assessor from that part of the town placed it; and no desire has ever been shown by the people in the village to disregard the wishes or use unfairly the people in that section, but a spirit of harmony has always prevailed between the two sections

John G. Walcott was called in rebuttal of statements made at the previous hearing.

Had the charge of the roads in the back part of the town for several years past. On those roads, which by the dividing line would be part in each town, the cost, was not correctly given as two thirds of the sum expended in one and 5-7 in the other was required in the West Peabody portion. The average extra amount expended on the roads in West Peabody for the last 15 years less than $100 above the regular appropriations. $1100 would keep the roads of West Peabody in good condition.

To Mr. Wardwell. Remember an appropriation of $300 on Russell street within the time named; also of $1500 expended on Lake and Winona streets, and did not take into account the $800 expended near Mr. Spaulding's residence.

John H. J. Colcord stated that twelve persons met at Mr. Spaulding's house from different sections of West Peabody, and from their knowledge of the people living in that part of the town ascertained the number to be 483 and 113 polls.

Mr. Spaulding stated that Mr. Colcord was wrong in regard to the number of polls and that the number was 131.

Benj. H. Taylor stated that the church in West Peabody has supported itself for the last 14 years except that about $100 has been contributed by individuals from Peabody.

Mr. Spaulding offered letters from three members of the board of health in rebuttal of testimony given by Mr. Relihan in reference to a visit of the board to the house of Mr. Andrews, finding it in a filthy condition. The substance of the contents of the letters was given by the Clerk of the Committee and was a denial on the part of the writers of the statement that the place was in a filthy condition. The argument of counsel was heard yesterday and the case closed.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND TO HIS CABINET, MARCH 4th, 1885.—Gentlemen: In entering upon the administration of public affairs, let us first discuss the question of Policy. No doubt each of you has a policy.

Members of Cabinet: Yes! yes! we all have policies.

President: Your careful consideration will be required in the matter of a Foreign Policy.

Members of Cabinet. No! no! We want a United States Policy.

President: Let us reach facts. What is your policy?

Members of Cabinet: An Accident Policy in the United States Mutual Accident Association at half rates. The best in the world.

President: Gentlemen, I find I have made no mistake. Your Policy is the best one. You have acted with wisdom, fore-thought and prudence. You have protected yourselves, you are capable of protecting the public at large. I know The United States Mutual Accident Association to be a sound institution; its rates are low; it has no valid claims contested nor any unpaid. With this gratifying assurance, we will now proceed to discuss the next most important question, the Spanish Treaty.

Note. The United States Mutual Accident Association of New York is the largest, cheapest, and best mutual accident company in the world. The Membership Fee is $5, payable but once. About $13 a year (which may be paid at one time if preferred or as the assessments are made during the year) will carry a policy that assures to those having a preferred occupation $5,000 in the event of death by accident or $25 a week in case of disabling injury; $10,000 accident insurance with $50 weekly indemnity at proportionate rates.

No professional or business man should be without accident insurance when so small an outlay secures so large an indemnity in the event of serious accident at a time when most needed. Half a million of losses have been paid. All claims are paid immediately upon the receipt of satisfactory proof. For further particulars send for Circular and Application Blank to 320 and 322 Broadway, New York.

A TOUR TO AND THROUGH MEXICO.—The pioneer excursion party for Mexico, organized by Messrs. Raymond & Whitcomb, has just started on its grand round of 44 days. A second party made up in part of persons who could not find a place in the first, their applications coming too late, will leave Boston, Thursday, March 26. The itinerary will be precisely the same, and the second tour will be a repetition of the first in all its details. The management will be the same, and the members of the party will enjoy the same comforts of special trains of Pullman cars, a special dining car, etc. The route is very comprehensive, embracing over 3,000 miles of travel south of the Rio Grande, with special trains everywhere, and special facilities for sight-seeing. Nearly two weeks will be passed in the city of Mexico, the travellers making the Hotel Iturbide (formerly the palace of a Mexican emperor) their headquarters, and a score of other places, including leading cities, ancient ruins, historic sites and picturesque localities will be visited. Full details of the tour are given in a descriptive circular which may be obtained of W. Raymond, 240 Washington street, Boston.

SPLENDID HONORS.—The public should note the fact that the only proprietary medicine on earth that ever received the supreme award of Gold Medal at the great International World Fairs, Industrial Expositions and State Fairs, is St. Jacobs Oil. After the most thorough and practical tests, in hospitals and elsewhere, it has universally triumphed over all competitors, and been proclaimed by Judges and Jurors, including eminent physicians, to be the best pain-curing remedy in existence.

ENGAGED IN FILLING A LONG-FELT WANT.—"How are you, old fellow?" called one friend to another he met on the street, "what are you doing now?"

"Filling a long-felt want."

"Thunderation, man, you don't mean to say you are running a newspaper?"

"Not hardly."

"Then what is it?"

ESSEX SS. PROBATE COURT.

To all parties interested in any of the Real Estate of JOHN DODGE, late of South Danvers (now Peabody), in said county, blacksmith, deceased, intestate: GREETING:

WHEREAS, Harrison A. Dodge, of Peabody, in the county of Essex, has presented to said Court a petition, representing that he is interested in the real estate of said deceased, lying in this State, and praying that partition thereof may be made among the parties interested in said real estate; said petitioner claiming as an heir of said deceased, and also under an heir of said deceased, and the other parties claiming under heirs of said deceased.

You are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court to be holden at Salem, in said county of Essex, on the third Monday of March, next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause, if any you have against the same.

And said Harrison A. Dodge is ordered to serve this citation by delivering a copy thereof to each person interested, who can be found within the State fourteen days at least before said Court, and if any one cannot be so found, by also publishing the same in the Peabody Press, a newspaper printed at Peabody, once in each week for three weeks at least before said Court.

JOHN P FERNALD, ALBERT VITTUM,
Editors and Publishers.

ARTICLES 33 and 34 of the town warrant with reference to a valuation book and a new valuation of the property in town were so quietly and speedily killed in town meeting Monday, that we fear many of our citizens did not fully understand the purport or intent of the articles, or what they were voting for or against.

The article with reference to the book of valuation was inserted in last year's warrant at the request of a number of our citizens and was referred to the Finance Committee, and it is understood that it was favorably received by them, that parties in favor of the publication appeared before the committee and explained the matter to them; that on consultation with the Selectmen, it was agreed to leave the matter over for a year in order that a new valuation of property might be obtained.

The fact of the matter is, the board of assessors did not dare last year to give to the public their assessed valuation, but it was confidently expected that this year they would be ready and willing to do so.

The report of the Selectmen on article 33, was that they had nothing to recommend, and on motion of Mr. Bancroft the matter was indefinitely postponed. Article 34 met with the same fate, and the town has placed itself upon record as neither deserving a new valuation of property, nor the publication of a book of valuation.

Now with reference to the book of valuation there is room for difference of opinion, but there should be no such difference with reference to a new valuation of property in town. It has been stated over and over again in these columns, and admitted by Mr. Poor at the West Peabody hearing, that no new valuation of the property of the town has been made for twenty years, and if it is not time one was made, we should like to know when would be the proper time. It is true that the assessors make a sort of a valuation; that is, they take the valuation of the preceding year, and make a few revisions and connections; they mark some property up and some down, and add what new property they can find. In one sense this is a new valuation, but not such as is generally understood by an entirely new valuation of property. This is what is needed in this town and needed this year, whether the result of such valuation is published or not. But one supplements the other. And in our judgment one is just as necessary as the other.

As it is, the assessors have an excuse and a good one for continuing the old valuation, on the basis of twenty years ago, and the people of the town including West Peabody can find no fault if their property is assessed as it has been for the last twenty years. They have allowed the matter to go by default, and have placed themselves on record to that effect.

IT WOULD seem as if the moral aspect of the Temperance question would emphatically decide any controversy in regard to the expediency of the sale of intoxicating liquor, yet the fact that the "yes" vote at the recent election reached the number of 570 shows that something more is needed with many. Sometimes a few figures are more convincing than any amount of inference, however fairly drawn, and we would call the attention of our readers, to some, it seems to us, unanswerable mathematical arguments in the case; the amount of supplies furnished to families outside our Alms House during the past ten years was as follows:—

1876—$2,984.30 1877—$3,485.13
1878— 3,583.60 1879— 5,553.46
1880— 4,541.78 1881— 4,154.11
1882— 4,882 91 1883— 4,952.00
1884— 4,628.33 1885— 2,694.81

It must be borne in mind that the last year has been one of unusual depression in business circles, and a considerably larger proportion of our working people have been obliged to be more or less idle than in any recent year. Add to these facts the decrease in the business flowing directly from the traffic, and does any one pretend that the money lost under the no-license system is not more than saved to the town in other directions? There is no escape from these figures or their deductions, as no other cause can be assigned by our Overseers of the Poor, or anyone else, for this large and sudden decrease in the expenses of our poor department, than the decrease in the cause of poverty consequent upon the enforcement of no-license during the past year.

We have received the first number of the Milford Times, a paper printed in the interest of the Democratic party. Democrats have not the reputation of giving great support to their papers and the projector of the times may find it like peddling peanuts in a grave yard. However we don't want to discourage the new sheet and trust it will receive a very liberal patronage.

Annual Town Meeting

The annual town meeting was called to order at 9 o'clock last Monday morning by the reading of the warrant by Mr. Nathan H. Poor, town clerk, after which a vote for moderator was taken with the following result:

Whole number of votes	233.
Frank E. Farnham	92
Amos Merrill	141

Mr. Merrill assumed the chair and called upon J. W. Colwell to offer prayer.

In regard to Article two of the Warrant, it was voted to proceed to elect by hand vote, those officers required by law to be chosen in March or April annually, and the following is the result:

Fence Viewers, John F. Pickering, Patrick Kerwin, Abraham C. Osborne, Lewis Brown, Bowman Viles.

Surveyors of Lumber, Charles G. Folsom, John Hackett, Edward Giddings.

Field Drivers, Daniel Haskell, Daniel W. Putnam, Isaac A. Drown, Lewis Brown.

Pound Keepers, Edwin Buxton, Robert P. Brown.

It was moved and carried that the Selectmen have power to appoint the Measurers of Wood and Bark, Measurer of Upper Leather and Sealer of Weights and Measures, Weigher of Hay and Coal, etc.

On motion of S. C. Bancroft it was voted that the polls be kept open from 12 o'clock till 4. 15 and that all business, except voting, be suspended till after the polls closed.

On motion of Mr. Frank Marsh the following articles were re ferred to the Finance Committee:

10th. To determine what sum of money shall be raised by taxation for the usual and necessary expenses of the town, when it shall be paid into the treasury, and the rate of interest to be charged on delinquent taxes.

11th. To see if the town will authorize the Collector to use all means of collecting taxes which a Town Treasurer when appointed Collector may use, agreeably to the Statutes of the Commonwealth.

12th. To appropriate money for the payment of State aid to soldiers and their families.

13th. To determine what compensation shall be paid to town officers and firemen, the ensuing year.

14th. To determine the manner of repairing the highways and bridges.

15th. To determine what sum of money shall be raised for the repairs of highways and bridges, and how it shall be appropriated.

16th. To see if the town will appropriate money for lighting the streets.

17th. To see if the town will appropriate money for a day and night police.

18th To determine what sum of money shall be appropriated for the support of schools.

19th. To determine in what manner the money arising from the surplus dog fund, and the town's portion of the income of the Massachusetts School Fund shall be disposed of.

20th. To see if the town will authorize the Town Treasurer to hire money.

21st. To see if the town will have any of the bells rung at noon and at nine o'clock, P. M.

27th. To see if the town will appropriate money for the purpose of extending, carrying on, and repairing the water works.

35th. To see if the town will appropriate the sum of two hundred and fifty dollars, to assist Post 50 G. A. R., to defray expenses for Memorial Day, agreeably to the petition of George F. Barnes and others.

The list of Jurors as prepared by the Selectmen were read and accepted. Also the report of the Selectmen in relation to guide boards was accepted.

24th. To act on the annual report of the Trustees of the Peabody Institute.

Mr. S. C. Bancroft moved that Article 24 be received and placed on file, and gave as a reason, that he didn't want the town to adopt a report with all its recommendations without reading.

Mr. S. F. Blaney liked the suggestion and wanted to call attention to the last report which he called an interesting document and moved as an amendment that action on the report be deferred till the adjourned meeting, as this would give all an opportunity to read it. Carried.

25th. To act on the annual report of the Trustees of Cedar Grove Cemetery.

As this article called for an appropriation, it was referred to the Finance Committee.

26th. To act on the annual report of the Water Board; also to choose a Water Board for the ensuing year.

This article was also referred to the Finance Committee on motion of S. F. Blaney.

28th. To see if the town will authorize the Selectmen to purchase land for gravel.

29th. To see if the town will appoint the Selectmen its agents to act in any suits that may be brought against the town, with authority to employ such attorneys as they may think necessary in such suits.

These two articles were passed without opposition and the authority given the Selectmen.

30th. To give in their votes, on a ballot separate from all others, Yes or no, in answer to the following question: "Shall licenses be granted or the sale of intoxicating liquors in this town?"

On motion of Mr. Bancroft, it was voted that a ballot be taken on this article at the time the vote was taken for town officers.

31st. To hear and act on the report of the Selectmen laying out Winthrop street as a town way.

The Selectmen recommended the laying out of the street forty feet wide and that an appropriation of $250 be made for the same. Mr. W. N. Osgood moved the report be accepted. Mr. James P. King thought the street should be fifty feet wide and this led to a lengthy discussion of the subject, in which Mr. Bancroft asked the Selectmen to state why the street was laid out 40 feet and whether the houses on it were on the line or set in sufficient to allow of a wide street. Mr. Southwick said there were several houses on one side and one on the other, and he was of the opinion that some of the houses were set on the line. Mr T. M. Stimpson thought it would be a public improvement and would open up a valuable lot of property and should be done without regard to the width. Mr. Bancroft was in favor of referring the matter to the Finance Committee. Mr. W. N. Osgood thought the report as presented should be accepted and he was willing to abide by the judgment of the Selectmen. Mr. John Linehan thought the street should be improved, as it was the worst in town on account of the mud. Mr. Jonathan King favored the accepting of the report as did also Mr. James P. King. The report was accepted by a vote of 87 to 0.

32d. To see if the town will authorize the Selectmen to sell any of the town gravel pits, should it be thought expedient so to do, and to execute deeds therefor in behalf of the town.

Mr. Frank Marsh moved that authority be given the Selectmen. Mr. S. C. Bancroft moved as an amendment that all sales be at public auction. Chairman Southwick hoped the amendment would not prevail and stated that they knew of a purchaser for a pit last year, but the Selectmen didn't consider it best to sell at auction. John G. Walcott thought there were thousands of loads of good gravel in the So. Peabody pit, which he understood the Selectmen to refer to and he hoped the amendment would be sustained. The amendment was carried 20 to 8. Mr. F. E. Farnham wanted to know why they should sell this pit until it was worked out. Chairman Southwick thought there might be several pits worked out, and that the town would realize more by selling the land in house lots than in a whole piece. C. W. Osborn thought we could trust the Selectmen to sell a little piece of property, when they handle thousands of dollars belonging to the town. The vote was then taken and the motion as amended was adopted 34 to 11.

33d. To hear and act on the report of the Selectmen, to whom was referred at the last annual meeting, the matter of publishing a Book of Valuation of the assessed town property.

Chairman Southwick said it was suggested by the Finance Committee, and the Selectmen had considered the matter, but did not feel like making a recommendation. Should the town vote to take a valuation it would be expedient to choose assistant assessors. Mr Bancroft moved that the matter be indefinitely postponed.

34th. To see if the town will adopt measures necessary to the taking of a new valuation of the assessed property in the town, choose Assistant Assessors and appropriate money therefor, or take any other action relating to the same.

On motion of Mr. Bancroft this article met the same fate as article 33. Mr. Farnham then took the floor; he thought that it was a very important article, and that some action should be taken on it, and he moved to reconsider the vote, but it was lost by a vote of 49 to 23.

36th. To see if the town will appropriate money for the purpose of extending the culvert on Central street, from the residence of Franklin Osborn to the junction of Liberty street, at the residence of Isaac Wilson, agreeably to the petition of A. L. Ames and others.

Mr. Frank Marsh moved that a committee of three be appointed by the Moderator to consider the matter and report to the adjourned meeting, and it was carried. The chair subsequently appointed Frank Marsh, Lyman Osborn and James P. King as the Committee.

37th. To see if the town will appropriate money sufficient to purchase land and build a four room Primary School House in that part of the town north of the Essex Railroad and east of Wallis street, and otherwise provide school accommodation for the pupils of the Wallis, Center and Bowditch Districts, agreeably to the request of the School Committee.

Mr. Farnham thought the committee would like to have the matter referred to the adjournment. J. W. Hudson, for the committee, said they were prepared to furnish the desired information concerning it if the meeting chose to take action. He said there is an excess of primary scholars beyond the seating capacity of the schools to the number of 132, and there has been finished a room in the upper part of the Center school which accommodates about sixty, but the room is not suitable for small children. There is no doubt but what more room will have to be had and the committee have in mind the building of a school house of four rooms after the style of the buildings at South and West Peabody.

Mr. Jonathan King thought we should consider carefully the expense of this proposed building and be warned by our experience in the past, and he made a motion that the matter be left to a committee, to report the whole cost and to take into consideration the location, etc. Mr. Bancroft and Mr. Marsh agreed with Mr. King concerning the experience of the town in the past and hoped the matter would be carefully considered, and that time be given for a mechanic to draw plans, etc. Mr. Edgar Upton doubted the ability of an ordinary mechanic to draw plans for a school house, and thought a man of experience should be employed, who would look after the ventilation, etc., and moved as an amendment that the sum of $150 be placed at the disposal of the committee. Mr. Bancroft thought it was not necessary to go to Newburyport and get Mr. Sargent, as there were plenty of mechanics in town competent to furnish them; he could name twenty. Mr. C. B. Farley thought they should report at a special town meeting, as there was not time between now and the adjourned meeting to procure plans, etc., and obtain all the information necessary to vote understandingly on the report. Mr. John Linehan wanted the meeting held in the day time if held. The amendment of Mr. Upton was lost and an amendment by Mr. Farley that the committee report at a special town meeting was carried; also the motion of Mr. King. On motion of Mr. Bancroft, the Chairman of the school committee (J. W. Hudson) and the Chairman of the Selectmen (S. A. Southwick) and Frank E. Farnham, W. P. Clark and Lyman Osborn, (the last three nominated from the floor) be the committee was unanimously carried.

38th. To see what action the Town will take regarding appropriating money to purchase wagon scales, the same to be placed in West Peabody, agreeably to the petition of W. Spaulding and others.

Mr. Spaulding said the Western part of the town needed them as it was inconvenient to bring everything to the square or to Lynnfield and he moved that the Selectmen be authorized to procure and locate them. He thought the expense would not exceed $300. Mr. Bancroft wanted to know what the town would do with the scales in case West Peabody was set off. Mr. J. F. Ingraham moved as an amendment that the West Peabody people locate them. Mr. S. F. Blaney thought it better to let the matter lay over till the adjournment and moved that as an amendent, the others accepting it. Mr. John Linehan thought the scales should be located there, as at present they had to guess at a good many things, and he hoped the question of location would be left to the West Peabody Farmers' Club and give them something to talk about. Mr. W. P. Clark also favored postponing action till the adjournment. The matter was left with the Selectmen to report at adjourned town meeting.

39th. To see what action the Town will take as to creating the office of Town Auditor, to audit the accounts of the Town, and as to what compensation he shall receive, agreeably to the petition of W. Spaulding and others.

Mr. Spaulding commenced to talk in favor of the article when the Moderator said that the town by-laws would have to be amended before action was taken on the article.

At this point Mr. S. C. Bancroft moved that the Moderator appoint a committee of five to present seven names as a Finance Committee to the meeting. Carried, and the following committee was appointed: S. C. Bancroft, George C. Peirce, W. P. Clark, Jas. P. King, S. A. Southwick.

40th. To see if the town will amend Section 7 of the regulations defining the powers and duties of the Water Board, adopted by the town July 24th, 1873; said Section defining the manner of paying the water rates into the town treasury.

The Section in question reads as follows:

Sec. 7. Said Board shall on or before the first day of February in each year pay into the treasury of the town all money received by them for water rates.

Chairman Southwick said in previous years the money from this department had been turned over twice a year to the Town Treasurer, but the present board had left it on deposit at 2 1-2 per cent. interest while the town had to hire money and pay 4 per cent. for it. The collector of the Water Board was not required to furnish bonds and so the Selectmen had brought the matter before the town. Mr. Farley thought it better to refer the matter to the Finance Committee to report at the adjourned meeting and offered that as a motion. Mr. S. F. Blaney said there was hardly time to discuss the matter as the hour for balloting for town officers was so near and he hoped the discussion would be deferred till after the balloting. He was prepared to meet the arguments of Mr. Southwick, and as there was a "cat in the meal" he hoped the people would all come to the hall and see him come out. If the Selectmen are the petitioners, as they say they are, in due courtesy to the feelings of the Water Board they should have been consulted before the article was put in the warrant. The discussion was adjourned till 4.15 it being 12 o'clock. Afterwards the following vote was passed. The Board of Selectmen and Assessors consist of five, the Overseers of the Poor three, the Water Board three, the Board of Health five and the list of Constables twenty.

After the closing of the polls at 4.15 P. M. article 40 was again taken up and on motion of Mr. Blaney its discussion was postponed till after action had been taken on the rest of the articles in the warrant.

41st. To see if the town will appropriate money to rebuild the bridge crossing Main Street, at Poole's Hollow, so called.

This article was referred to the Selectmen to report at adjourned meeting.

42d. To see if the town will so amend Article 4 of the Town Orders as that it shall require a larger number of voters to appropriate money at a special meeting than is now required by said article; agreeably to the petition of James P. King and others.

Mr. James P. King said that it was well known that 100 citizens night or day could raise any sum of money, and he thought that as it was some years since that rule was established and the town had grown one-half larger, it would be better for the town to increase the number, and he believed that when there was anything of importance to come before the town requiring an expenditure of money there would be no trouble about getting out a larger number, and he would move that the number be increased to 125. Mr. Isaac Munroe moved to amend and substitute 200 for 125. Mr. Farley thought 200 should be the number and John Cleary moved to make it 400, but it was lost and it was voted to make it 200.

The moderator said this was a change in the by-laws and would have to be approved by a Judge of the Supreme Court, and S. A. Southwick was elected to attend to that duty.

Article 40 having been taken from the table, Mr. Blaney said the first official knowledge he had received of a change in the articles concerning the regulation of the Water Board was today. He considered it only fair play that the water department be consulted and the Selectmen had sacrificed by their action in bringing the matter before the town in the way they had all claim to courtesy, and he proposed to show the "cat in the meal" and the animous in this matter.

Everything was all right up to the time of the change in the water board; he had examined the books transferred to the present board and compared them with those kept now and was willing they should stand on their merits. For two years everything went all right as the Town Treasurer was clerk of the old Water Board and this department was robbed of any credit for the money received last year. The Warren Bank agreed to take the money at the same rate as paid the town Treasurer, which the board agreed to accept. The next year the Clerk of the board saw the officials of the Warren Bank and brought back the information that the times were hard so they would be able to pay only 2 1-4 per cent. when they had paid 2 1-2 the year before. The board sent the Clerk to the South Danvers Bank and without informing them what the other bank offered, received an offer from them which was satisfactory to the board and the money was transferred. The town report shows that this department received $232 from the Warren Bank and it was an honest item to the benefit of the water department This year from the South Danvers Bank they have received $361.75, while the collections were nearly the same, only $700 different. He would submit the question to the town whether the Board did right or not.

The speaker asked if the members of the Board were not worthy and honest men and if the money was not as safe in their hands as in the town Treasurers. If the Selectmen had done the same as the Water Board the town would have been better off to the amount of the Treasurer's salary at least. All financial results should be credited to their respective departments.

He had heard different remarks at different times, one was that by an official who went into that dusky mine known as the "coal hole" and said, "now that Blaney and Bartlett are on the Water Board something would be done." He would leave it to that man to say whether anything had been done.

He believed that men who frequented that place are malicious and that they were willing to murder the character of others for the sake of killing time. (Mr. B. was called to order.) For the institution from which we changed our deposit I have no love, fear nor favor, and I think their action in this case is not to their credit and will bear them no good fruit. Perhaps I have said enough, the people know what this article means. It means that the money be taken out of the hands of the Water Board and put in the hands of the Town Treasurer. Will it be any safer and will it pay any better? Mr. Littlefield, the chairman of the board is a man whom I believe to be honest, and I have never found him wanting, and he has gained my confidence. You have elected to-day a man who is honest and trust-worthy. I will not refer to the character of the other member of the board. A majority are honest men and will take good care of any money entrusted to them; and the town will loose no money by letting the by-law remain. And without any other remarks I move that the consideration of the articles be indefinitely postponed.

C. Warren Osborne said the Warren Bank is ready to make money, but that is nothing to do with it. The collector of our town has to give bonds also the town Treasurer. The treasurer of the Water Board holds in his hands over $20,000, but don't give any bonds. They are all honest men, if we didn't think so we wouldn't put them there, but he didn't see why the Water Board should not be required to give bonds as well as the others. He thought it best to put the funds in the Town Treasurer's hands. By putting it in the Warren Bank the money is checked out, the money is not payed by the treasurer, but you get a check on the Warren Bank and that institution is responsible for this money and the small sums disbursed by the cashier on these checks represents considerable work. But the money of the Water Board at present simply remains in the Bank until it is ready to turn over to the town and only one check is drawn by the Water Board. We have honest men, but men are led into temptation. We want to save the money to the town and think it best to turn it over to the town Treasurer.

Mr. Blaney replied by saying Mr. Osborne would have the people understand that the money is safer in the Warren than in the South Danvers Bank. The Treasurer of the town would not have any more checks to draw if he had the Water Board's money. There are no large amounts remaining in the hands of the Water Board over twenty-four hours at a time and the question is, whether the South Danvers Bank is less responsible than the Warren. In my mind there is no argument as to the responsibility of either Bank. The money in the past has been used to help out some less worthy department and that was what it was wanted for now.

Mr. C. B. Farley said he was in sympathy with the water board and thought they were entitled to all credit. Should any one read the report they would see how much the receipts exceeded the expenditures, but he thought that as 1-2 was collected in April and the other in October, and in the meantime the Selectmen had to hire money, he favored referring the matter to the Finance Committee to give them a chance to look into the subject. No man questions the honesty of the water board and either bank is safe enough, and the only advantage in turning it over was, that the town could have ready money instead of hiring it.

Mr. Blaney said he had had a chance to free his mind, and as he didn't want to place himself on record as trying to force anything through that would be injurious to the town's interests he would withdraw his motion and favor, referring the matter to the Finance Committee. The motion was carried.

Mr. S. C. Bancroft moved that when the meeting adjourned it be for two weeks from to-day at ten o'clock. Mr. Thomas Lyons amended the motion to adjourn to 7 P. M. which was lost after a short discussion and Mr. Bancroft's motion prevailed.

The following gentlemen were announced as a Finance Committee and were accepted: C. Warren Osborne, Alex. B. Merrill, Leverett Poor, Wm. P. Clark, Rufus H. Brown, Thomas Carroll and J. Fred Ingraham.

THE RESULT of Monday's election, and the defeat of the nominees of the Citizen's Caucus, shows once more the fallacy of such a caucus, unless it expresses the will of the majority of our citizens. At first glance, it would seem that a caucus called as was the one this year, nominating its officers by a committee of all parties, and from different sections of the town, would be successful. Especially so, when such committee had plenty of time in which to look over the field, ascertain the wishes of the people, and report.

The reason for such defeat is not hard to discover. The only contest of any importance was on the election of the Board of Selectmen. There was a feeling in town this year, and it represented different parties and different factions in favor of a change in this body. This feeling the Citizen's Caucus attempted to voice. They did not do it successfully. They made too many trades. They tried to harmonize too many factions on other portions of the ticket. So that when our citizens saw the nominations for Selectmen, even many who were in favor of a change, said at once, "We would rather have the old Board than this," and that settled it.

It was not the liquor dealers alone, as has been intimated, who were in favor of a change. It was not the temperance people alone, as was shown by the difference in the vote on license and the vote for the old Board, who were not in favor of such a change. Different elements entered into the vote. The weakness of the ticket put out by the Citizen's Caucus was so apparent that the other ticket carried everything else with it in the election of the old Board. This successful ticket was not made up with care; in some respects it was as weak as the other. But the contrast in the head of the ticket was so marked as to ensure the success of the opposition ticket almost from the moment it made its first appearance at the polls.

WE FEAR that the gentlemen who made up the successful ticket at the polls Monday have made a grave mistake. On the board of trustees as nominated at the caucus there was one each republican, greenbacker and democrat, the names of the greenbacker and democrat were left off and two republicans substituted, making three republicans elected on that board. While we will say nothing of the merits of the gentlemen on either ticket, we want to ask if those gentlemen who put the ticket in the field, realize the extent of the mischief they have done. They personally have got nothing to loose, but it will tell to the injury of the Republican party, and open threats are already heard of strict party nominations next year, and should such be the case, the Republican party could not elect a representative on any board. These are plain words gentlemen, but true.

HOME HAPPENINGS.

The Salvation Army under command of Capt. Bailey and wife and Happy Alice, who have their recruiting station in Salem, sent out skirmishes and decided to attack this town last Friday night, and a two day's notice that the devil was to be court martialed was sufficient to bring a large number to the town hall. There was a little million of "trundle bed trash" waiting around the square and when the army appeared they volunteered to do escort duty to the hall door, where the ten cent collection kept them from going further. The meeting was conducted in much the same manner as at other places. All of the army displayed some insignia or feature of dress indicative of their military calling, while appeared the letter S in two places on their garments. The exercises were opened by the singing of "Over There" by the army, followed by forcible remarks by Capt. Bailey who said that "if all hell was let loose we would serve God with all our might. If God could save him he could save anybody." This was follwed by prayer and singing while on their knees, including "On the Cross," and as they rose they sang,

I've left the land of death and sin
And the road that many travel in,
And if you ask the reason why,
I'm marching to my home on high.

During the singing members of the Army gesticulate and wave their hands keeping time with the music, and the singing is followed with exhortations from different members, and every few minutes Capt. Bailey would appeal earnestly to those who had not yet enlisted in Christ's Army to do so then. George Washington Bradford, down on the bill as the saved star of the East, related his experience and brought out the buoyancy of his feelings by playing on an accordeon and sung several verses one of which was

I'd rather pray my life away,
I'd rather pray my life away,
I'd rather pray my life away,
Than lay in hell a half a day.

There were more exhortations and more songs and an indorsement from Mr. Isaac Hardy. Some described their feelings when converted, others simply gave their testimony. Capt. Bailey said "it don't make any difference whether you get religion by the drum stick or bell rope, what does it matter whether we are educated or not, we can testify to God saving our souls, and we shall see the fruits in eternity." The experience of Mr. John Lee of this town was very interesting, and a number of his old companions were present to hear it. Earnest efforts were made by Capt. Bailey to induce some of the unconverted in the audience to come forward and seek salvation at the altar, and through the persuasion of Happy Alice one young lady went forward and received the prayers of the Army. The meeting closed with the "Doxology." Frequent visits will be made to this town by Capt. Bailey and his assistants on his return from New York. There was an audience numbering 400 or so present and the company was as respectable a one as is found in our churches.

That Baby Show will take well. There is no county in the State that can exhibit healthier, prettier or better babies than this, and Beverly is not a whit behind other towns in that respect. We are glad there is to be such an exhibition, and shall be glad to be there to see the "little darlings."—Beverly Citizen. We are willing Beverly should boast of her "health and pretty" babies but when it comes to numbers, Peabody will lead by a good many laps—with babies in them.

At the semi-annual meeting of the St. John's C. T. A. Society, the following officers were elected for the ensuing term: President, James A. Buckley; Vice President, John O'Brien; Rec. Sec., James Ryan; Cor. Sec., Dennis P. Gill; Treasurer, John Daley; Collector, William Murphy; Librarian, William Russell; Directors, John Duffey, James Coleman, John McBride, John Russell, William Duffey; Investigating Committee, Dennis Neenan, Michael F. Ray.

One of the oldest adopted citizens in this town died at his home on Midway street last Friday noon. Mr. Wm. Croughwell, who had been sick with liver complaint only a few months. He came to the country when a boy from his native place, Galway, Ireland. He has been a man of great influence for good among his people and will be sadly missed. His funeral took place from St. John's Church last Sunday.

The peach growers of the country again announce that all the buds have been killed by the blizzards of the winter. We shall again be obliged to eat our peaches without buds. You can hardly tell the difference now. The peach buds have been regularly annihilated by the winters ever since the memory of the oldest inhabitant commenced to work.

Daniel Manning, the recent convicted bar tender of Jas. E. Millea, after serving ten days of a three month's sentence, was pardoned out by the County Commissioners through the efforts of City Marshall Hart of Salem.

It is with a feeling of sadness we are called upon to chronicle the death of Mrs Stephen S. Littlefield, who died at her home on Main street, last Saturday night at the age of thirty-five years and seven months, after an illness of several weeks. Mrs. Littlefield was a native of this town. A daughter of the late N. P. C. Patterson. In her intercourse with our people she won all hearts by her many endearing qualities. Her many friends will ever cherish the memory of her noble virtues with fondest love and reverence, feeling that they are better for having known and loved her. Her life was quiet and unassuming and made up not of brilliant deeds which direct the gaze of the public toward her, but by little acts of consecration and kindness, which will keep her memory fresh in the minds of many for years to come. We extend our sympathy to the bereaved husband, whose constant companion and adviser she had been for all these years, even extending back to the days of their childhood. May the example of her pure life be remembered and followed while life lasts, and may her many friends find comfort in the words:

"There is no death! The stars go down,
To rise upon some fairer shore;
And bright in Heaven's jeweled crown,
They shine forever more."

The Spiritualists had another very successful masquerade at Essex Hall, last Wednesday evening, and among the most striking costumes were A. McNeil, as a colored dude; Eben I. Kimball, Robinson Crusoe; William B. Flannagan and Charles H. Stanton, representing Norris and Semons, colored musical artists; John Swanton, ghost; Mrs. Stanton, fancy; Mrs. A. Dodge, Queen of Diamonds; Minnie Darling, Negress; Mrs. Wilkinson, fancy; Lena Higgins, colored, and numerous others.

"Fruit—its Cultivation, Preservation and Sale," will be discussed at a Farmers' Institute by the Essex Agricultural Society, to be held in Lawrence on Tuesday, the 17th inst. Brief introductory remarks will be made by Joseph Howe on apples, Peter M. Neal on pears and small fruits, and G. W. Gage on peaches and grapes; each to be followed by a general discussion. A general attendance of gentlemen and ladies is desired.

One week, commencing March 16th. Every evening, and Wednesday and Saturday afternoons at Mechanic hall. Zolo, the Magic Queen. Greatest spectacular drama now on the road. Represented by 2 car loads of magnificent scenery, a legion of men and women, an army of artisans and auxiliaries, a regiment of beautiful women, and a dramatic, burlesque and musical company. Tickets, 10, 20 and 30 cts. A few front rows on lower floor, 50 cts.

Mr. N. W. Andrews has engaged the universal favorite, Lizzie May Ulmer, who is supported by the eminent actor, George C. Boniface and they will appear at Mechanic Hall to-morrow evening, March 12, in that touching drama, representing New England life, entitled "Dads Girl." Tickets are placed at 25 and 50 cents for the best seats in the hall.

Mrs. James H. Buxton died at her home on Franklin street, last Friday, after suffering for several years with old fashioned consumption. She was a great sufferer during the latter part of her sickness which was borne with Christian courage, and surrounded by sympathizing friends. Her age was 54 years and 10 months.

Lawyer D. N. Crowley of Danvers responded to a toast, "Massachusetts Democracy in Congress," at a supper of the National Democratic club at Salem, Wednesday evening, in celebration of the President's inauguration.

The Essex County Sunday School Union will meet with the Danvers Universalist Sunday school on Wednesday, March 18. Rev. J. C. Snow of Haverhill will deliver an address in the afternoon, and Rev. A. E. Snow of Lawrence will speak in the evening.

County Commissioner Colby's paper says most of the county newspapers gobble down the story that the Salem jail is to cost $150,000. Let them please recollect their figures when they get the facts in less than 60 days.

Why is the town clock permitted to enter into the contest between the town proper and West Peabody, and give that portion of the town spurious time, while the other hands indicate different time? All winter is long enough for a clock to lie that occupies so sacred a position.

On Thursday evening of last week, Miss Bessie Randall was surprised by twenty-four of her young friends, who came to bid her good-bye before going away to Attleboro. They presented her with a handsome silver napkin ring and spent a very pleasant evening.

The evil days draw nigh—Spring cleaning has commenced.

Thursday evening of this week Union Post 50 G. A. R. will present Mr. Leland T. Powers, the dramatic impersonator, in "David Garrick" and "Esmeralda," at the Peabody Institute. As a reader and impersonator Mr. Powers has no equal, and as the Post is trying to replenish its charity fund in this way instead of holding a fair and lottery, they should receive the patronage of every citizen who can afford to attend.

The Marblehead Messenger says: Joseph B. and Amos C. Hathaway have recently sold to J. B. Thomas, wholesale butchers of Peabody, a pair of cattle whose net live weight is 5,215 pounds. One of the oxen weighed just 2,700 pounds. These cattle are the heaviest ever raised by them and some hundred pounds heavier than any fat cattle exhibited at the Essex Agricultural Fair for the past ten years at least. The Messrs. Hathaway have raised numbers of fine cattle and almost invariably secure premiums when their stock is entered at the agricultural fairs.

New Advertisements.

PEABODY, MARCH 7, '85.

EDITOR PEABODY PRESS.

Dear Sir:—In your issue of March 4th, I find under the head of "New Advertisements" a letter from D. W. Andrews, followed by one from William Osborne, a member of the Board of Health, one from F. S. Worcester and one from C. C. Pike, Chairman of the Board of Health. All three supporting Mr. Andrews in one of the many charges he makes against me in the performance of my duty as a member of the Board.

In June '83, Mr. Saltonstall made complaint to the Board of Health, by letter, of a nuisance existing on the premises of D. W. Andrews. In company with the other members of the Board I visited Mr. Andrews' place, and investigated in accordance with complaint, having Mr. Saltonstall's letter with me. My testimony before the Legislative Committee at the State House was from my best recollection of what I had seen with other members of the Board, and a conversation had in presence of at least one member of the Board. There was no record of the investigation, and no record of the findings of the Board, Dr. Pike to the contrary notwithstanding. Therefore each individual member was entitled to his private views. Under the circumstances what right had Dr. Pike or Mr. Osborn to answer Mr. Andrews' enquiry without first consulting with the other members of the Board. Common courtesy demanded that they should consult with them, even if Dr. Pike thought that he was hitting Dr. Shannahan (a brother physician in good standing) and not me, no excuse is admissible. The letter should have been handed over to Dr. Shannahan to answer for himself. He was not a member of the Board at the time, and therefore could not know anything of the case. Dr. Pike had been for some time the Physician in attendance on one or both of Mr. Andrews' children. Dr. Weston, clerk of the Board of Health, had been called in by Dr. Pike. Dr. Worcester was employed independently, later. Mr. Osborne served Mr. Andrews in the capacity of undertaker. I know now but did not at the time, that a meeting of the Board of Health was called. Present at the meeting Dr. Pike, William S. Osborne and Wyman B. Richardson. The two first named knew more about the nature of the complaint than the complainant could possibly know. They had been there several times. Yet they passed a vote to call in the State Board when, if not known to the Dr., it should have been, that the matter was entirely within the control of his own Board, as Mr. Abbott, the Health officer of the State Board, said in his letter of reply. After a lapse of seven or eight days the Dr. called out his Board to investigate Mr. Saltonstall's complaint. Significant, is it not? You have his gratuitous (?) verdict. I prefer to submit the case to the verdict of the citizens.

DR. LIGHTHILL,

OF 115 BOYLSTON STREET, BOSTON,

Can be consulted at the

Essex House, Salem,

Every Thursday afternoon and evening,

From 2 until 9 P. M.,

on all Chronic, Obscure, and Difficult Diseases.

His Specialty embraces the cure of

CATARRH,

Throat Affections, Bronchitis, Asthma, Consumption,

DEAFNESS,

Discharge from the Ear, Eye Diseases, and Affections of the Blood and Nervous System.

CONSULTATION FREE.

[Dr. Lighthill can be found at his office, 115 Boylston street, Boston, from 8 until 12, daily.)

FROM REV. E. W. WHITNEY,

Formerly Pastor of the Universalist Church, Peabody, Mass.

For several years I have been troubled with Catarrh, which seriously interfered with my public speaking, and which baffled all my attempts to get permanent relief. Experienced surgeons operated upon me, and I was under the care of a Boston physician for two years, but obtained no lasting benefit. I applied various medicines, but failed to get relief. I was lead, by the advice of friends, to consult Dr. Lighthill. My faith was at the lowest ebb, but I am happy to say that after a few months' treatment no trace of my old trouble appears, and I have every reason to believe that the cure is permanent. I cordially recommend Dr. Lighthill to all who may be afflicted in a similar manner.

E. W. WHITNEY,

Peabody, Mass., June 27, 1879.

AN INTERESTING CASE.

A statement of Mr. Clement A. Thorndike, of the firm of L. A. May & Co., 127 Union street, Lynn, Mass.

To the Public:—Having been raised almost like one from the dead by the skillful treatment of Dr. Lighthill, and to benefit similar sufferers, I make this public statement of my case. For years I was troubled with Catarrh in my head, seriously affecting and almost destroying my nasal bone; the discharge was very profuse, requiring constant blowing and hawking for relief; gradually the irritation passed into my throat, producing hoarseness and a hacking cough, and finally it affected my bronchial tubes and lungs, leaving me a victim to consumption. The cough now became distressing and almost constant, and debilitating night sweats made their appearance. I lost flesh and became greatly emaciated. I consulted medical men and used various remedies, but all efforts for relief utterly failed. In that condition, and greatly disheartened and discouraged, I applied to Dr. Lighthill, whose able and thorough examination of my case proved to me that I was in the right hands. Convinced that he fully understood my condition, and, inspired with new hope, I placed myself under his care, and very soon experienced the benefit of his treatment. One after another of the symptoms of Catarrh left me. I gained in strength and weight, my cough and night sweats disappeared, and now I am only too thankful and delighted to be able to call myself well again. Hoping that this statement may give new courage and confidence to such as may suffer as I have,

I remain, respectfully,
CLEMENT A. THORNDIKE.

Lynn, June 18, 1881

CATARRH CURED.

FROM REV. E. C. BUTLER,

Beverly, Mass.

I most heartily recommend any one afflicted with that troublesome disease, Catarrh, to Dr. Lighthill. I have full confidence in him. His treatment has had the most gratifying results in my own case, which was severe and of long standing.

E. C. BUTLER,

Beverly, Mass., Oct. 29, 1879.

CURE OF DEAFNESS.

FROM RT. REV. T. F. HENDRIKEN,
Bishop of Providence, R. I.

My Dear Dr. Lighthill: Permit me to thank you most heartily for your kindness to the Sisters of our Convent. I had no idea when I consulted you on Sister Demonica's deafness that you could so quickly restore her back to hearing, but she tells me that she hears now better than she did before. For this, and your kind and successful treatment of my own deafness, I thank you. Now I would be glad to have you refer your patients to me. You know I can recommend you as a physician and surgeon, thoroughly accomplished in those departments of medicine in which you practice. I owe you a debt of gratitude, and would be glad to pay it.

Very truly and sincerely yours
Rt. Rev. T. F. HENDRIKEN.

ASTHMA.

REPORT FROM MR. C. F. BOYNTON, 31 MILK STREET, BOSTON, ROOM 35.

TO THE PUBLIC.

After having spent large sums of money, and found no relief, I was induced to apply to Dr. Lighthill, at 115 Boylston street, for treatment, having suffered from asthma in the worst form for six years, and I wish to say, for the benefit of others suffering as I did that DR. LIGHTHILL'S TREATMENT HAS MADE ME A WELL MAN, and I now can enjoy life, when before it was a dread to me. This cure was performed on me over a year ago, and I can confidently pronounce it a permanent one. I hope all afflicted with that dreadful disease will avail themselves of Dr. Lighthill's skilful services, for I feel morally sure he can cure them.

A LESSON IN LAW.—People in general, says a Boston lawyer, have only a feeble idea of a policeman's duties and requirments.

An officer has no right to arrest a man on suspicion of drunkenness. If he does so he is liable to be sued for false imprisonment.

The statute says: An officer who refuses to answer a question relative to the reason for arrest, or answers such questions untruly, or neglects on request to exhibit to the person arrested, by any person acting in his behalf, the precept by virtue of which such arrest is made, shall be punished by fine not exceeding, $1000, or by imprisonment in the house of correction not exceeding one year.

An officer cannot arrest you for a misdemeanor without a warrant, unless he see it performed or unless he has good ground to think you are going to do it again, but he can arrest you on mere suspicion of a felony. A felony is a crime punishable by imprisonment in the state prison. A misdemeanor is any lesser crime. Among the more common felonies are murder, arson, burglary, breaking and entering, and larceny from person with violence in building, or of property exceeding $100 in value. Drunkenness, trespassing and the like are misdemeanos.

An officer cant and must arrest he has a warrant, no matter what the crime. If he hasn't a warrant, in the case of drunkenness he may arrest if he is sure the man is drunk. Even if an officer knows you to be drunk, he cannot arrest you without a warrant unless he sees you in that condition. If a man gets beastly intoxicated and after he gets sober any one asks an officer to arrest the man for the misdemeanor the officer has no right to do it without a warrant. The same is true about all other misdemeanors.

If an officer arrests you he must bring you into court, or else you can recover from him for false imprisonment. Such cases have happened a number of times in this state. The chief of police in a small city arrested a man for being drunk, kept him in the lock-up a few hours and then had mercy on him, listened to his entreaties and let him go. The man sued for false imprisonment and go a judgment of $100.

Balloon-Steering.

In regard to the subject of ballooning and the recent French experiment in steering a balloon, it may be noted that the analogies of nature are adverse to the attainment of artificial flight by means of a balloon. We do not mean by way of detail, but by way of principle. The theory of a balloon is that of levitation—that is to say, of counterpoising gravity by the displacing of a given bulk of atmospheric air by a lighter gas. That the latter method involves the exposure of so large a surface to atmospheric currents as to require great force to overcome the resistance of a rapid breeze by fans, screws, or other mechanical means, is well known. But the point to which we refer is this: In the flight of every bird or insect the weight of the animal is directly utilized for maintaining it in the air. At the will of the bird, the feathered surface that it exposes to the wind can be so inclined to the movement of the latter as to make the creature rise or fall at will, by the direct action of the wind, without any visible motion of the wings. From the deck of a vessel a gull may be watched, hovering for many minutes together, without one flap of its wings. The bird at such times is a living kite, its power of self-balance producing the effect of the string of the kite in maintaining a certain inclined position relative to the wind. And although some birds of the swiftest flight have an extraordinary area of wing surface in proportion to their weight, others, of equal or even superior power of flight, have very little wing surface in proportion to their weight. Thus the problem of flight has been solved by nature in many ways; but in all of them the gravity of the living creature, far from being destroyed or counterpoised, is an essential element of its mechanical action. The inference that we draw from this is that the opposite principle, that of levitation, is not likely to be followed with mechanical success except on rare occasions.—Builder.

MAYO'S

Compound Vegetable Anæsthetic.

A safe and pleasant substitute for gas and ether.

Discovered by Dr. N. K. Mayo of Boston, April 1883, subsequently administered by him in nearly two thousand cases, producing perfect slumber, being applicable to the child, the delicate sensitive woman as well as the hardy man. No ill effects have followed its use in any case, it acting rather as a vegetable tonic.

It controls the patient one-fourth longer than gas giving us time to remove from three to twenty teeth. It is with great confidence we have introduced it into our practice, giving very successful results.

A THRILLING STORY.

As Told by a Merchant in Troy, N. Y.—A Surgical Operation Avoided.—How a Father, Wife and Daughter Escaped an Awful Doom.

Of the hundreds of accounts of remarkable cures wrought by DR. KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY, none have appeared so purely astonishing as the following: The persons mentioned are among the most highly respected in the city of Troy, and the story as told by the father will prove interesting to our readers.—ED.

TROY, N. Y.

DR. KENNEDY, RONDOUT, N. Y.:—

Dear Sir: My daughter was afflicted with a severe growth of Fungus. To remove it we had resorted to almost every remedy and consulted the most prominent surgeons and physicians. Dr.—— of Troy, said that a surgical operation would be necessary, but fearing fatal results I hesitated. Some of the physicians claimed that it was caused by one thing and some by another. The Fungus was prominent and disfigured her looks. Having heard of Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE working so thoroughly on the blood I determined to try it, to see if this medicine could do what doctors had failed to do and surgeons had hardly dared to undertake. I can say in truth that the result of this trial was the complete cure of my daughter of this dreadful malady. Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY alone effected it. We used nothing else, for other things had completely failed. My daughter to-day enjoys vigorous health and to Favorite Remedy alone is the credit due. My wife also was very poor in health, due to some liver difficulty with which she had suffered a long time until she became very much reduced in flesh. A trial of Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy has resulted in the complete restoration of her health, which she had not enjoyed for years. She had gained in flesh and strength, and thus secured perfect health, and this is due entirely to DR KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY. As for myself, being engaged in the grocery and commission business, which makes it necessary for me to test the quality of different articles, like butter, etc., my sense of taste and my stomach were seriously injured. Everything seemed to nauseate me, and fearful of dyspepsia in its most severe form, I tried DR. KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY. The first bottle afforded immediate relief, and from that day to this I can say that Favorite Remedy has restored me to perfect health. These are facts which I claim prove that Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy is the best medicine in the world for those afflicted with the above difficulties. If any one in the city of Troy doubts the truth of these statements let him come to me and I will prove them. I have recommended Favorite Remedy to hundreds and with the same good results. Yours, etc.,

WILLIAM WINDSOR.

MALARIA.

As an anti-malarial medicine

DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S

has won golden opinions. No traveler should consider his outfit complete unless it includes a bottle of this medicine. If you are exposed to frequent changes of climate, food and water, Favorite Remedy should always be within your reach. It expels malarial poisons, and is the best preventative of chills and malarial fever in the world. It is especially offered as a trustworthy specific for the cure of Kidney and Liver complaints, Constipation and all disorders arising from an impure state of the blood. To women who suffer from any of the ills peculiar to their sex Favorite Remedy is constantly proving itself an unfailing friend—a real blessing. Address the proprietor, Dr. D. Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y. $1 bottle, 6 for $5. by all druggists.

Danish Amusement.

It is called in Danish rutschban, and may as well be dubbed in English rush railway. A tower stands at either end of a railway, which is perhaps 180 feet in length, 40 feet high at one extremity, and half as high at the other. I climbed the rude staircase of the higher tower, and found myself in a room crowded with people waiting their opportunity for a ride. At the entrance stood a phaeton-like car on four small iron wheels, the car being very stout and holding two people with comfort. The wheels were in grooves, and the course extended over the descending and ascending slopes. The people would get into a car and be strapped in by a leathern boot; the car would be started down the inclined plane by an attendant, and away it would go down the first slope, and by its impetus rise to the next height, go over and down and up again, at each rise pitching a little lower, at each pitch rising to a lesser height, until the last slope, when it rushed up the hill, bumped against a buffer, and the two travelers got out. The car would then be seized, dragged aside, put upon a lift, hauled up to a height above, and sent back, with other passengers or empty, down a corresponding road parallel to the first, and terminating in a similar low tower by the side of the one I was in, where it would be hoisted again into place, and be ready to make the round of the rush railway again.

I stood by the entrance where the car started down, watching the couple get into the vehicle and then go thundering down the slope. I saw sedate men who might have been bank presidents get in, and children, and ardent youths and maidens, two by two. They held each other in; they almost lost their hats; they bowed, and fell back upon the huge "thank-you-ma'ams"; they looked frightened, and they looked bold; they smiled, and they almost cried; but I heard no one scream. At length, when I had politely given way to those more eager, I was driven by shame and an inextinguishable curiosity to try this reckless "coast." I paid the fare—about two and a half cents—and took my seat. I jammed my hat down over my brow, grasped the back of the car with one hand, and no doubt turned pale as the push was given and we began that awful descent. I felt that thrilling sensation of vibration in the pit of my stomach which one has in a swing when descending, and then we shot up the slope, saw a new abyss, and plunged into it. A delicious reprieve was followed by another fearful descent; four times we dashed in the face of fate, and then, with one triumphant rush, flew up the last incline. I got out of the car with my wits standing on end, and tumbled down the staircase in a bewildered, groggy way, anxious to get my legs upon the immovable earth again.

There was no mistaking the thorough enjoyment which everybody took in this amusing place, and the decorum and good feeling seemed to come by nature.—Harper's Magazine.

What are the North American Indians?

Dr. E. B. Tylor made some remarks before the American Association on North American races and civilization. In attempting to answer the question: "What are the North American Indians?" he stated that whenever he had been among the Indians the thought had always struck him that, if these people were dressed up as Asiastics, there would be little observable difference. Admitting this supposition the next question that arose would be: "How came they here?" To answer this question, Dr. Tylor warned his hearers that they must beware of taking for granted that the physical geography of this continent has not changed. The next question would be: "How it is that among tribes, physically so similar, there should be such a diversity in language as we find among the North American Indians?" For the solution of this question, we must look to the geologists to prove the antiquity of man. Dr. Tylor remarked that even if the North American Indian was the result of the migration of one stock to this continent, the remoteness of the time when that migration must have taken place, would fully account for the great diversity in speech. We are so accustomed to consider the patriarchal system the only natural one, that we do not look for any other, yet the matrimonial system which Sir George Gray found among the Australians is also prevalent among the Indians. This system is not so uncommon as may be supposed, and lingers in many curious customs. Thus among the Kaffirs of South Africa there is a custom by which a man is supposed to completely ignore the existence of his mother-in-law. If the two should meet in the street they turn away from each other. This custom, traces of which, Dr. Tylor thought, existed among the Spartans in historic times, points to a matriarchal system of society in which marriage is surreptitious and unrecognized. These speculations were strangely confirmed by the report during the past year of some Dutch residents in Sumatra. The inhabitants of that island still live in the matriarchal system. When a man and woman marry they do not set up housekeeping for themselves, but both stay in their mother's house. The father has no control whatever over his children, the head of the family being the maternal uncle. It would be considered a grave offense against his wife's family were a man to undertake to reprove or chastise his children. The curious state of affairs which exists in Sumatra is the key to customs, common to the Kaffirs of South Africa, to the hill-tribes of India, and the Indians of North America.

In the stamp bureau of the Postoffice department at Washington is a little instrument that is used for measuring the thickness of sheets of paper. It is useful in determining the quality of the stock put into envelopes and other stationery by contractors with the government. The unit of measurement is a sixteen-thousandth of an inch. While exhibiting it to an inquisitive reporter, the chief of the bureau demonstrated that a hair from his head was about twenty sixteen-thousandths of an inch in diameter, and a hair of his mustache was thirty sixteen-thousandths of an inch thicker.

A Boy's Ambitions.

Nearly everybody who is now a man, says the Through Mail, was once a boy. All these grown-up boys remember how they felt the first time they saw a brass band. They felt that the president of the United States was not to be compared to the editor of the bass drum, and that the drum-major was at least six inches above George Washington in the temple of fame. Oh! how they did yearn to belong to a brass band, until a circus came along, and then they longed to be the fearless equestrian or the man in the lion's cage. Congress had no charms for most of its present members when they were boys. To be a bareback rider or drum-major was infinitely better than to be a member of congress in their youthful eyes.

Then came a time when their hearts were set on becoming a brakeman on a railway train, and when the vision of a promotion to the conductorship of a train floated across their dreamy optics they were in the fifth heaven of delight. Time wore on, only to rub the glitter of the railway service off, and supply its place with grand aspirations for the position of umpire of a base-ball game, which was rapidly succeeded by an inordinate ambition to be the victor of a prize-ring. After being knocked out in one round by nearly every boy in the community, ambition again underwent a metamorphosis, and the one thing of all things desired was to be the reigning monarch of a barber-shop, or the untrammeled commander of a volunteer fire brigade.

In due time all the tinsel of these high callings was but dross to them, and to die on the battle-field, breathing some patriotic sentiment as the sands of life ran away, was the one high aim of existence. After one encampment with the home militia, with beans and hard-tack for menu, and a finger accidentally shot off for fun, no further anxiety to spill blood by the gallon for their country was manifested, and they longed for more agreeable pursuits incident to the tranquil surroundings of peace.

At about this point their desires took a different turn. Their hearts glowed with a nobler impulse, and there was a trifle more determination to do in their composition. One determined to teach school, and did so. To be sure he was surprised that life was not one continual round of uninterrupted joy in his new calling, but he worries along and the next spring enters a law office and becomes a disciple of Blackstone. The next autumn he reverts to school-teaching, and school-teaching is sandwiched into his life in various ways and at numerous periods afterwards, until he becomes an editor, and the prize-ring experiences of his youth are repeated again. Some years later he is elected to congress, and then all the old ambitions are forgotten, and give place to designs on the senate. Only a few of them ever get there, and they at once feel the humming of the presidential bee in their bonnets, and eventually become candidates before the national conventions of the great parties, and all but two get—left; and when the election is over one of these two is also left.

Man and His Miseries.

Man that is born of woman is small potatoes and few in a hill.

He riseth up to-day and flourisheth like a rag-weed, and to-morrow or the day after the undertaker has him in the ice box.

He goeth forth in the morning warbling like a lark, and is knocked out in one round and two seconds.

In the midst of life he is in debt, and the tax-collector pursueth him wherever he goes.

The banister of life is full of splinters, and he slideth down with considerable rapidity.

He walketh forth in the bright sunlight to absorb oxone, and meeteth the bank teller with a sight draft for $357.

He cometh home at eventide and meeteth the wheelbarrow in his path, and the wheelbarrow riseth up and smiteth him to the earth, and falleth upon him, and runneth one of its legs in his ear.

In the gentle spring-time he putteth on his summer clothes, and a blizzard striketh him far away from home, and filleth him with woe and rheumatism.

He layeth up riches in the bank, and the cashier speculateth in margins and then goeth to Canada for his health.

In the autumn he putteth on his winter trousers, and a wasp that abideth in them filleth himself full of intense excitement.

He sitteth up all night to get the returns from Ohio, and in the end learneth that the other fellows have carried it.

He buyeth a watch-dog, and when he cometh home the watch-dog treeth him and sitteth beneath him until rosy morn.

He goeth to the trot, and betteth his money on the brown mare, and the bay gelding with a blaze face winneth.

He marrieth a red-headed heiress with a wart on her nose, and the next day her paternal ancestor goeth under with few assets and great liabilities, and cometh home to live with his beloved son-in-law.—Puck.

The Kimball House in Atlanta will cost $750,000. A striking feature will be its roof. This roof is inclosed on all sides with a parapet wall set back from the edges. It will be handsomely tiled. Part of the roof will be covered with a beautiful garden, and the whole flooded with electric light. A platform will be erected at one end and open-air concerts given nightly. Three immense passenger elevators will carry the people to the roof. A first-class cafe will be established there.

Oil From Nature's Wells.—The skin on the head is kept soft and flexible by a secretion from the oil glands. When these are clogged the hair dries and falls off. Parker's Hair Balsam renews their action, restores the original color to the hair and makes it soft and glossy. It also eradicates dandruff. Not greasy, not a dye, deliciously perfumed. Delightful for a lady's toilet table. The best of dressings. Preferable to all similar articles because of its superior cleanliness and purity.

SOUTH PEABODY.

Mr. John Brown, whose death from paralysis occurred March 4th, was born in Salem, Aug. 12, 1807, and there has passed from our midst one whose many sterling qualities and genial disposition won for him the respect and affection of a large circle of friends. Early in life he engaged in the business of stone quarrying, and with his brother made the Lexington monument at Peabody. He was the subject of the sketch "A trip to Exeter, N. H., fifty-five years ago," which appeared last year in these columns. When in their teens the two brothers made a mill stone for a mill at Lynn, and this present winter they engaged together with keen interest on another for the same mill—thus beginning and ending their work together in labors remarkable for unity and brotherly love. His uniform courtesy to all, and his especial kindness to children for whom he always had a kindly word, and room for a ride whenever and wherever he met them, will long be held in grateful and loving memory. At the many fires in the woods these last years he over-exerted himself in the unselfish effort to save others property as much as his own, and his health suffered in consequence. He was confined to his bed five weeks unable to speak much, but to the last the same kindly, loving look beamed from his eyes as they rested on his loved ones, and gently as a child falling asleep he passed away.

"The very gentlest of all human natures
He joined to courage strong,
And love outreaching unto all God's creatures,
With sturdy hate or wrong.
Tender as woman: manliness and meekness
In him was so allied,
That they who judged him by his strength or weakness
Saw but a single side."

A party of fifty ladies and gentlemen surprised Miss Lizzie Davis at her home on Lynnfield street last Wednesday night. The evening was spent in the usual manner and about 11 o'clock the company were invited to the dining room, where an oyster supper with ice cream and cake were served in an excellent manner. The party broke up about 2 o'clock, all wishing Miss Davis a long and prosperous life.

The funeral of Mr. J. Brown occurred Saturday afternoon from his late residence on Lynn street, a large number of relatives and friends following the remains to the tomb at Cedar Grove Cemetery.

Master Willie Carpenter of Mt. Vernon, N. H., is stopping a few days at Mr. Lewis Brown's on Lynn street.

The Water Board have built a covering for the strainer at Brown's pond. Chas. Folsom did the work.

Mr. Chas. A. Wiggin came home from Great Falls, N. H., to vote on election day.

Mr. A. E. Copeland, formerly of this town, was elected school committee of Lynnfield for three years, last Monday.

We have before us a very convenient pocket manual of parliamentary rules, published by "Review & Herald" Publishing Association of Battle Creek, Michigan. The volume is entitled Smith's Diagram of Parliamentary Rules" and derives its name from a diagram which it contains, showing at a glance all the rules bearing on the principal questions likely to arise in deliberative assemblies, naking it a very compendions and convenient device for presiding officers. We would recommend all who are in the habit of attending meetings of deliberation to procure a volume. It costs but 50 cents and it is far more convenient for immediate reference than Cushing's pocket manual.

The Mammoth Bargain Store offer a Great Bankrupt Sale in Crockery, China, Glassware and Lamp Goods. This stock embraces some of the greatest bargains ever offered to the public.

SKATING RINK NOTES.

The Peabodys went to Haverhill last Wednesday evening and defeated the Globes in a game of polo, three to one. The first one was won by the Globes in six minutes. The second, third and fourth by the Peabodys in 6 minutes 30 seconds, 45 seconds and 15 minutes respectively. This completes the Peabodys games with the Globes and the Peabodys have won them all.

The Father Matthew and St. John's Catholic Total Abstinence Societies have each formed polo clubs and their first game was played at the rink Saturday evening. The personals of the two clubs are as follows:—Father Matthews—D. Mullane, captain and rusher; D. Bresnahan, goal; M. Horrigan, cover point; P. O'Shea, point; S. Reagan, half back; J. Ralilly, cover goal. St. John's club—John McGurn, captain and half back; T. Gannon, rusher; D. Gill, cover goal; G. Hargrave, point; J. Murphy, cover point; J. Coleman, goal. The game resulted as follows, first goal won by the St. Johns in 1 minute and 5 seconds, the second by the Father Matthews in 5 minutes, the third by the St. Johns in 2 minutes and the fourth was won by the St. Johns in 1 minute and 46 seconds. There were about 300 present.

Thursday evening, March 12, the St. Johns C. T. A. Society polo team will play the Bleachery polo team at the rink.

The third in the series between the Salems and Peabodys took place at the Salem rink last Friday evening and resulted in the defeat of the Peabodys. The first goal was won by the Peabodys in 4 minutes and 10 seconds, the second third and fourth by the Salems in 4 minutes 20 seconds, 1 minute 30 seconds and 3 minutes respectively. Dempsey took Murray's place in the Peabodys as the latter had a cold. They will play another game at the rink this evening but not one of the series.

The Peabodys have now met all the clubs in the Massachusetts League, as the Woburns were the only club that they had not played; last evening was their first meeting for the championship. Game was called at 9.15 by referee O'Malley, of Gloucester. All the rushes were won by Felton of the Peabodys who is considered the best in the league. The first goal was won by Phalen in just 3 minutes and 10 seconds. The second goal was also obtained for the home club by Sullivan making a very neat drive from right centre securing the goal in 2 minutes and 13 seconds. The third goal was won by Goodman, of the Woburns, amid great applause in 2 minutes 50 seconds. The fourth and last goal was one of the longest ever played here, requiring 22 minutes and 28 seconds to decide it. Phalen secured it after a pretty pass by Murray. The game throughout was not a very interesting one as there were a great many stops made for broken skates and other causes and the whole time of the game was 1 hour and 3 minutes.

To-morrow evening is the date fixed for Manager Reed's grand fancy dress carnival at the Salem rink. There is a large party contemplating going from here, and among other attractions the full Cadet Band will give one of their grand concerts before the grand march.

Cotter, of the Walthams, is considered one of the finest polo players in the country. We would like to see the Walthams here in an exhibition game with our team.

Manager McCully has furnished a room in the basement of the rink to be used as a dressing room by the polo club, and has supplied it with hot and cold water, their old quarters being too small.

"Billy" Felton got his nose broken last night with a polo stick at the hands of one of the Woburns.

The Woburns have taken Kirk of the old Bay States, and he will tend goal for them Friday night.

The employesof Thomas E. Wilson's machine shop have a polo team

The Peabodys play the Woburns at Woburn Friday night.

The Woburns did more slugging last night than any league club that has played at our rink.

Progressive young America has been picking up considerable many coppers by speculating with tickets at the rink. They would buy six tickets for a dollar, and then hang around the door offering the tickets for 20 cents each, while the regular admission was a quarter. They got to be a regular nuisance about the entrance, and to protect themselves the managers have issued a new style of ticket, after the style of the commutation tickets on the railroads, and they will be punched at the door.

Mr. W. R. Austin is Peabody correspondent for "The Rink."

Mr. Lewis D. Nevers, of this town, was one of the judges at the skating carnival at the Marblehead rink last Wednesday evening.

Dogwood, applewood, peppersage, laurel and lignumvitæ have been tried in making the wheels for skates, as a substitute for boxwood, but all have proved unsatisfactory.

SPARKS.

At the afternoon session of the town meeting a large poster was posted up in every conspicuous place in and around the hall, with the announcement that "the old board of Selectmen were in favor of a change in the board of Fire Engineers." What the object of it was is a mystery, but we do not believe it made or turned a vote one way or another. It was a bad idea to drag the fire department into politics and should be avoided as much as possible. There will probably be changes made in the Board, but the nature of those changes are not known to any person outside the Board of Selectmen and will not be known until after the appointments are made, some time in April.

In the joint convention of the Salem Aldermen and Council, Monday evening, Josiah B. Osborne was re-elected as Chief Engineer of the fire department and the following assistants were also elected: W. O. Arnold, George C. Hutchinson, J. L. Austin and Geo. F. Hadley. This is the same old board that served through the last year. The firemen in this town are well pleased with the election of Chief Osborne, who has hosts of friends in this department.

Three weeks from to-night is the Annual Ball of the "Three Ones and a two," of the Peabody Fire Department. Tickets are for sale by members of the four companies in the brick house.

We think if the Finance Committee would visit the Central Station and see the swing harness operated, and go into the stables and see the other horses standing with the heavy harnesses on, they would recommend that swing harnesses be adopted for the other teams in the house.

A committee from a Rhode Island town, was in town last Thursday and examined the S. C. Bancroft hand engine with a view to purchasing.

At the meeting of the Board of Engineers last Wednesday evening, Fred N. Carleton was approbated a member of H. & L. No. 1. Z.

Mr. Adino Page, a gentlemen well known to most of our older Citizens, and at one time Superintendent of our Alms House, died recently, in Matamora, Ill , at the age of 63 years. He was born in Gilmantown, N. H., May 3, 1822. Mr. G. Horace Merrill, has placed in our hands the local papers published in Matamora, and they speak very highly of the esteem and regard in which he was held in that community. His funeral took place from the Union Church and it was so crowded that many could not get in at all. The funeral services were conducted by the Knights Templars from Peoria Commandery of which body he was a member. The remains were interred at Oakwood Cemetery.

The next meeting of the Essex Co. Teachers' Association will be held in Abbot Hall, Marblehead, on Friday, April 3d. Mr. Chas. F. King of the Lewis School, Boston, will give "Fingers and Eyes," a finely and fully illustrated and practical paper. Geo. A. Walton of the State Board will present "School Examinations in Essex Co.; Their Great Lessons." Other live topics presented by live Essex Co. teachers will complete the programme. No teacher in the County should fail to attend the meeting. It will pay to hear Mr. King and see his charts, maps, etc.

The town hall was full last Sunday evening to listen to an address on temperance from Gen. John L. Swift of Boston. The meeting was opened by singing by the South Church Choir and the scriptures were read by Rev. J. W. Hudson, Rev. Mr. Sprague offering prayer. Mr. Chas. A. Haskell then introduced Mr. Swift who spoke on the "Duty of the Hour." The speaker reviewed the work done in this town since last May, and made an able appeal to the voters to continue the work another year. He was attentively listened to and his sentiments several times applauded. The meeting closed with the benediction by Rev. C. N. Smith.

It is rumored that General Manager Furber of the consolidated Maine and Eastern roads, will arrange for trains from the northern part of the county to run from Haverhill and Georgetown via Danvers and Salem to Boston. This will be a great advantage, as the northern part of the county has always been without easy access to Salem. The Boston & Lowell have the matter of removing their station to the filled land above North Bridge, and make a freight yard to Dean street under consideration. If this is done, the Wakefield branch trains will run into the stone depot.—Sunday Herald.

Mrs. Browne, 153 & 155 Essex street, is offering great bargains in Millinery Goods, to make room for Spring goods. Her advertisement in this issue tells the story better than we can, and we refer our readers to its stock of information.

Mr. Isaac Hardy is quite sick at his home on Elm street.

The Shea assault case will come up in the police court to-morrow morning.

James Tracy was fined $1.00 and costs for being drunk, yesterday.

Notes of Election.

By seventeen majority!

The divine right of suffrage!

Very few stickers were used!

The old style ballot box was used!

The mourners go about the streets!

"Peace on earth good will to men."

It is easier to move than to remove!

The Water Board will meet to-night!

Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth.

There won't be much rum in it this year.

There were only two tickets in the field.

The School Committee will organize to-night.

Many were mentioned but only a few chosen.

There are no police uniforms for sale this year.

Lots of "mugwumps" in local affairs, aren't there

Its funny enough but not very laughable.

So many wanted offices it was hard to satisfy all.

Next year it will be strictly partisan throughout.

Wm. S. Osborne personally deserved a better fate.

A good healthy public sentiment is what we want.

Election is over and we shall give our attention to polo.

And the average rum seller wondered how it happened.

The old board have wonderful staying powers. Selah!

Why set up men just for the sake of knocking them down.

Does South Peabody want a representation on the board.

It must have been that Officer Goodwin was a "mugwump."

The votes were all counted by half past ten Monday night.

What was J. Fred Ingraham put on the Finance Committee for?

The town hall had the appearance of a bill board the next morning.

People rather enjoyed Mr. Blaney's reference to the "coal hole."

It was a close shave on the license vote but it was on the right side.

What change will the Selectmen make in the Board of Engineers?

We are pretty well satisfied with the election. We had no axe to grind.

Officers M. H. Grady and A. E. Johnson received the largest vote, 1244 each.

We hear the name of Frank C. Ferguson mentioned as clerk of the Water Board.

The sun was shining brightly but it was a chilly day for the Citizens' movement.

The Greenbackers got badly left, but there is a day of reckoning coming. Selah!

There were seven ladies qualified to vote, and six of them exercised the privilege.

There were 217 women voted in the W. C. T. U. ballot box and all voted no-license.

Lynnfield went for license. It must have been the poetry. What say you Mr. Herrick.

"Sticker men" were not so numerous this Spring as usual. Most every one voted straight.

It is all right, but we should say that our police would be good authority on foreign affairs.

The first ballot cast was by Lewis Elliot for the old board. A harbinger of the final result.

The Rev. Spaulding was unusually quiet at town meeting. Is he waiting for the adjourned?

Our neighbor, Mr. McGrath of the Reporter, made a good fight and run ahead of his ticket.

To the newly elected officers.—Don't count your fees for constables before you make an arrest.

Anyone who thinks that the committee of thirty is dead, will do well not to tickle the remains.

As near as we can find out it was the "coal hole" that engineered the thing. How could you?

This is the first town election for several years where the ministers were conspicuous by their absence.

Stick to your trade Brother. This isn't a good town for printers to run for office. We've had experience.

There is no use getting mad over one of our town meeting fights. It is a long road that hasn't anyt urning.

"Full many a slate is made but to be broken,
And crumble to its fragments as before;
Full many a hope is smashed as soon as spoken,
And many candidates become no more."

The liquor element worked well and two wholesale dealers in Salem sent teams here to carry men to and from the polls.

Mr. Ira Foster was defeated for Trustee of Cedar Grove Cemetery five years ago, when the last board was elected.

The honest tax payers want to know why the Selectmen were not ready to recommend the taking of a valuation of the town.

Mr. Frank E. Farnham looks upon his election as a vindication of the course he pursued while on the board before. Why not.

The "old board" were first endorsed

Officers Peasley, Barnaby, Sweeney, Ruth and Mack took the oath of office immediately after the town meeting adjourned Monday night.

by a private gathering, a sort of "kitchen caucus." But then those caucuses seem to take this year.

Nobody evidently wanted to disturb those excellent officers, the town clerk, treasurer and collector. They were almost unanimously re-elected.

Will South Peabody try and have a representative on the Selectmen's board next year, if so wonder if they will select the same candidate.

Five of our Selectmen,
Holding office now,
Each came up on top,
After last Monday's row.

The unpleasantness of defeat will soon wear away and then all will gladly do their part in making our town government as successful as possible.

There is nothing to indicate that the ladies who voted for members of the school committee voted any more understandingly than in previous years.

There were several placards stuck on the wall of the town hall, which read "The old Board of Selectmen favor a change in the Board of Engineers."

Wonder if the rejected report of the Lyceum and Library Committee had anything to do with the election of G. Fred Osgood on the Board of Trustees.

No, there is no crape on our door and we don't feel very badly either. Every man has a right to vote as he pleases and to influence others to think as he does.

The Greenbackers think they have no reason to feel discouraged at the result. Perhaps not, but then they don't look like an altogether hilarious crowd.

Since the Salvation Army visited the town house, people are a little mixed. We heard Mr. Bancroft asking the Finance Committee to come forward to the altar.

It was a good endorsement of the course of the Selectmen on the liquor question. As the late lamented Lincoln said "It don't do to swap horses while crossing the stream.

The leader of the Democracy was unkind; when he was run for trustee last year Mr. McGrath gave him a hearty support. Why didn't he return the compliment this year?

What a scene the new town hall presented yesterday morning. Sand, mud, ballots, cigar stubs, tobacco quids and other dirt covered the floor and extended nearly out to the front entrance.

Ingraham wanted Bowman Viles for School Committee and after he had planned the ticket the others altered it and had it printed. When he saw it, it was thought he would have to be hooped.

There was one occupant of the police station that viewed with satisfaction the result of the election. It was "Dick," the station house cat, who will continue to share the suppers of his old friends, the night watch, for another year.

We trust next year Mr. Bancroft won't make that Committee quite so large as thirty, and then South Peabody can't trade with a party who wanted his friend on the board of trustees and thus force an unpopular nomination on the committee.

The following are the conditions under which the Selectmen granted the Eastern Railroad the right to lay the branch track to Proctor's tannery:

1. That the speed of any train across Walnut street shall not exceed four miles an hour.
2. That no more than four trains each way shall be run across Walnut street upon any day.
3. That across Walunt street and through Upton street the rails shall be laid as near the roadbed as practicable, and across Walnut street and through Upton street the space between the rails shall be planked.
4. That for a distance of 175 feet west of Walnut street the space between the rails shall be planked.
5. That said trains across Walnut street and through Upton street shall be run as aforesaid, only between the hours of 9 and 11.30 A. M.
6. That in constructing said extension flat rails shall be laid from the end of the first curve from the main line to the end of the curve on Upton street, a distance of about 350 feet.
7. That in running trains across Walnut street and through Upton street a person shall always be sent in advance of the train.

Mrs. Mary E., wife of Wm. E. Osgood and daughter of Mr. Wm. T. Dole, died at her home on Washington street, last Thursday afternoon after brief illness. She was 35 years and 3 months old and leaves a husband and three children. Mrs. Osgood was of a very amiable disposition and spent a large portion of her life in her family, being an affectionate mother and a loving wife.

"Leaves have their time to fall
And flowers to wither at the North wind's

And stars to set; but all

Mrs. Wm. Hayes was fined $100 and costs for keeping liquor with intent to sell. Appealed. Timothy Desmond was her bondsman.

WILMOT'S

Grand Triumphant Sale of New York Clothing,

Purchased by us at less than 33 per cent. of the actual cost, and now being sold by us to our retail trade on the same basis, has thoroughly waked up the people of Essex County, and at the same time has disturbed the somnolence of our Copper Colored Competitors who are now making unusual efforts to meet us by trying to palm off on the public a visionary sale of clothing, bought from a retiring Boston Wholesale Clothing House. (???)

But its no use, we always have and always shall undersell all competitors, and at this special sale we guarantee to sell you goods at less than half the prices our competitors ask for the same grade of goods.

Don't be deceived by sham advertisements. Come direct to us and we will prove to you that what we state are facts and not fiction.

Clothing Dealers' Bargains

In the Rear.

We have just purchased a large part of the stock of a well-known retiring wholesale Clothing firm of Boston, at a great discount from the first cost. To the above stock we have added all of our last spring's goods that were packed away, and shall offer to our patrons a stock of Twenty thousand dollars ($20,000) worth of good style, perfect and well made clothing, at such low figures that it would seem almost impossible to credit it. You will never believe it until you see for yourselves. This is no gammon about this sale.

Remember this is not a Bankrupt Stock of Clothing, neither is it a New York racket, both, we think, are about played out.

We give honest goods for honest money and at honest prices and agree to give better bargains from this stock than was ever given from any Bankrupt Sale ever started in this section of the country. This stock comprises the following lots, and is only a small part of our immense stock.

800 Men's and Young Men's Dress and Business Suits.
1500 Pairs Men's Pantaloons. 300 Boys' Long Pant Suits. 600 Men's, Young Men's, Boys' and Children's Overcoats.
600 Children's Suits, ages 4 to 12.

READ THE LOWEST PRICES EVER BEFORE NAMED FOR GOOD RELIABLE CLOTHING.

Eight hundred Men's and Young Men's Business and Dress Suits, comprising over 40 different styles to select from, made in single and double breasted Sack Suits and cutaway Frock Suits, will be sold as follows:

Lot No. 1. 300 Men's and Young Men's heavy and medium weight, all wool, plain and fancy mixed, sacks and frock suits, regular $12 and 14 Suits for only $8.

2 large lots of Men's and Young Men's heavy and medium weight, light and dark colored all wool suits, made in Sack and Frock styles, regular $8 and 10 suits, which we shall close out at retail for $5 and 6 per suit, about half price.

500 Men's and Young Men's fine all wool suits, made in double and single breasted sack and frock suits, all handsome stylish patterns, goods made by some of the most popular woolen mills in the United States, comprising cassimeres, cheviots, brown, blue, black and gold mixed diagonals and whipcords. Regular $15 and 16 suits for only TEN DOLLARS each.

2 lots of Men's and Young Men's heavy suits, for only $3.50 and 4.50 each.

600 Men's, Young Men's, Boys' and Children's heavy Winter Overcoats. Rather than carry them over to another season we have marked them at prices that will prove a grand investment, as the prices now will be from $2 to 10 less than next October. The Overcoats must be sold as we need the room. We will sell you a gent's fine Overcoat for $10 and 12, an elegant overcoat for $15, a good heavy all wool Overcoat for $5, 6 and 8.

500 pairs laboring Men's heavy all wool Pantaloons for 95c, $1.25, 1.50 ann 1.75.

800 pairs Men's and Young Men's fine all wool Pantaloons, for $3, 2.50 and 3; about half price.

DARK DAYS.

laces and, in batches of four, are rapidly sworn. The absurd proclamation against vice and immorality is read; much good may it do every one present! Then the clerk sits down, and the judge, forsaking his papers, begins his work.

He arranges his robes to his satisfaction, leans forward, and, placing the tips of his long, white fingers together, addresses—charges, I am told, is the right term—the grand jury in a pleasant, colloquial manner. I strain every aural nerve to catch the purport of his glib words. He is sure to say something about this important murder case. I shall, perhaps, be able to learn how it was that the man fell under suspicion.

Alas! the judge is one who, by years of practice, has acquired the knack of using his voice only just so much as is absolutely necessary. The grand jury is close to him and can, no doubt, hear him; but to those who, like ourselves, are far away in the background of the court, his remarks are inaudible. All I can catch is a closing caution to the grand jury, to bear in mind that it is not within its province to determine the innocence or guilt of the prisoners, but to simply decide whether there is or is not sufficient evidence for the cases to go to trial.

The grand jury files out of court to conduct its solemn deliberations in the place appointed. The judge addresses a few smiling words to the sheriff and other magnates who, by right or favor, occupy seats on the bench; then he returns to the perusal of his papers.

For the first time since we entered the court, Philippa speaks to me. "Are they trying him now?" she asked in a low, awed whisper, yet in a voice so changed that I know what the suspense is costing her. Briefly I explain the procedure of the law, so far as I know it. She sighs, and says no more.

More monotonous calling of many names, to which summons, however, another class of men respond. The common jurymen are now being called. Probably, to save time, twelve men are sent into the box, where they sit, some appearing to enjoy the dignity of the position, some with stolid indifference, others with acute unhappiness plainly manifested. I look at these men with scarcely less interest than I look at the judge. On them, or on some of them, our fate rests as much, perhaps more, than it rests on him. Those men are trying us—not only the man who will by and by stand in that rail-topped enclosure, into which we look down.

Twenty long, weary minutes pass by. All eyes turn to a wooden gallery in the right hand corner of the court. A door in the wall opens. The members of the grand jury emerge and fill the gallery. The foreman arms himself with a gigantic fishing rod, to which he attaches a paper, which is conveyed by this clumsy method to that busy gentleman, the clerk of assize. What idiotic foolery all this seems to me!

The clerk detaches the document, glances at it, and looks up at the gallery.

"Gentlemen of the grand jury, you return a true bill against William Evans for murder?"

"We do," answered the foreman with shy solemnity.

I grind my teeth. Fools! If men of culture and standing err like this, what can be expected from a common jury? It is well for me that I heard the caution just now given by the judge. I take such comfort as I can by thinking they have tried the evidence, not the man? What can the evidence be? Ah! we shall soon know.

The clerk turns, and addressing no one in particular, says: "Bring up the prisoner." Once more I set my teeth. I feel my wife's arm tremble; her hand grows cold. I hear a buzz, as of expectation, run through the crowded court. Every eye turns in one direction—toward the empty dock. For a moment a species of dizziness comes over me; objects swim before my eyes. The sensation passes away. I recover myself. The dock is no longer untenanted. In the centre, with a stalwart policeman on either side of him, stands the accused! The man who, if needs be, must be saved by such a sacrifice!

From my place, far back in the public gallery, I can, of course, see nothing more of the prisoner than his back. I gaze at this with intense curiosity, endeavoring to determine the station of the man who is now about to be tried for his life. I can but gather this much: He is tall and slight. His dress is of a semi-respectable nature, but seems to have seen much service. He might be anything from a broken-down clerk to a gentleman's servant out at elbows. I rejoice at his poverty-stricken appearance. Judging from it, money will be welcome to him. Let the jury but assert his innocence, and I feel certain that the liberal pecuniary compensation which it is my intention to mete out will repay him a hundred times for the ordeal which he is undergoing.

Ordeal! Yes, it is the right word. It is easy to see it is a terrible ordeal to the poor fellow. No need to look at his face to be told that much. Even as he emerged from the cells below he seemed to quake with fear. Now he absolutely falls forward in the dock, supporting himself by grasping the iron railing which runs round the top. I notice that his fingers, as they cling to the iron bars, open and close convulsively. Every movement of his back and shoulders betrays fear and anguish of mind. His state is pitiable, so pitiable that one of his custodians places his hands under the wretched man's arm, and gives him the physical support which he so sorely needs. He bends his head as in shame, and I know that could I see his face it would be white as my own or my wife's.

In spite of the strain upon my mind I was able to wonder at the prisoner's hopeless demeanor. Although I had, as it were, torn my very heart out by the roots to insure this man's safety in the event of things going wrong with him; although I did not even now regret the course I had taken, I am bound to say that his cowardly behavior took away much of the sympathy which I should otherwise have felt for him in his unmerited predicament. It is, of course, very easy to say what one would do if in another's place. I certainly felt sure that, were I in that poor fellow's plight, that consciousness of my own innocence would give me strength enough to raise my head and face boldly all the judges, juries and prosecuting counsel in the world. I was willing to make every allowance for the nervousness natural to such a position; but I groaned inwardly as I gazed upon that miserable, limp, half standing, half reclining form.

Why does he not stand upright? Too well I know that another is watching that abject wretch with interest even more intense than mine. I know that every attitude of shame or fear is understood by Philippa, and adds to the scruples which she feels at following my advice and awaiting the result of the trial. Every agonized movement of the prisoner in the dock seems to be faintly reproduced by the hand within my own. Every pang he suffers runs through the frame of the woman who knows that he is suffering for her deed.

The clerk reads over the indictment; "That he, William Evans, did feloniously, wilfully, and of malice aforethought kill and murder Sir Mervyn Ferrand, Baronet." As the reading proceeds Philippa draws me toward her. "Basil," she says in a low whisper, "this is more dreadful than I dreamed of. I cannot bear it longer. Think of that poor man's anguish! Basil, he also may have a wife who loves him; she may be in the court. Think of her! Oh! what can I do? What can I do?"

"Nothing—nothing but wait and hope," I answer.

"Could you not go down and speak to him, or send a message in some way? Tell him not to be so wretched; that even at the last moment he will be saved; that the real murderer will confess and free him. Basil, you must do this."

"I cannot. I dare not. It will ruin us. Hush, dearest; be calm, and listen."

The reading of the indictment is now over. The clerk turns to the prisoner. "Are you guilty, or not guilty?" he asks, in a clear voice. Although every one in that court knows what the answer will be, there is a silence so profound that a pin might be heard drop. Every one seemed desirous of hearing the prisoner's voice. Even I, myself, lean forward, and strain every nerve to hear his plea.

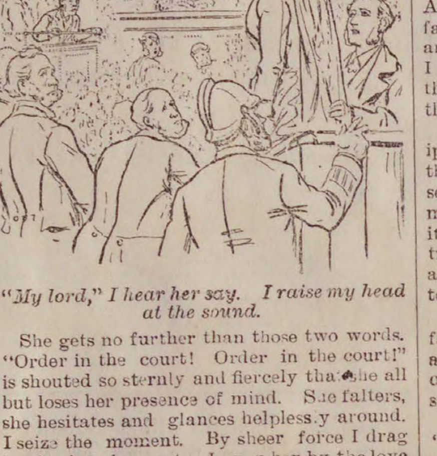
There is a long, dead pause. It may be that the prisoner does not understand that he is expected to reply. It may be that his collapsed state deprives him of the power of speech. I notice that one of the policemen touches him on the shoulder, and whispers to him. Still for a moment there is silence.

It is broken, but not by the prisoner. Philippa gives a low, soft wail, heard only, I think, by me.

"I can bear it no longer," she whispers. She snatches her hand from mine. She throws back her thick, dark veil and stands erect in the body of the court. I cast one glance at her pale but determined looking face, then bow my head upon my hands and wish that death might at that moment smite us both. All is over. I am conquered.

Even as I hide my face I see every eye in that thronged court turning to the tall, majestic, dark-robed figure which rises in the midst of that motley throng. Then, clear and loud, I hear her beloved voice ring out.

"My lord," I hear her say. I raise my head at the sound. The eyes of bench, bar, jury and public are fixed upon her. The very prisoner turns in the dock and gazes straight at her.



"My lord," I hear her say. I raise my head at the sound.

She gets no further than those two words. "Order in the court! Order in the court!" is shouted so sternly and fiercely that she all but loses her presence of mind. She falters, she hesitates and glances helplessly around. I seize the moment. By sheer force I drag her back to her seat. I pray her by the love she bears me to wait in silence. I draw the veil over her face to hide it from the hundreds of curious eyes which are turned upon it. While so doing I hear the sharp mandate, "Turn that person out of court."

Had any serious attempt been made to put the order in force, I believe that Philippa would have resisted, and once more attempted to assert the prisoner's innocence and her own guilt—if it was guilt. Fortunately the policeman who draws near us to carry out the order is my friend of the morning who had accepted my gold. It may be on this account he favors us. It may be, when a momentary disturbance subsides, and the perpetrator does not seem bent upon repeating it, that the expulsion is not insisted upon. It may be that Philippa's accosting the judge was looked upon as a solecism brought about by the excitement of a weak woman who was in some way connected with the prisoner. I suppose such a scene does sometimes occur; and perhaps, if its repetition is guarded against, a humanely-minded judge will not deny the offender the sorry comfort of seeing her friend's trial to an end. Perhaps the judge who this day presides is unusually good natured and easy going. Anyway, our friendly policeman does not carry out his instructions and the court resumes its business.

But many curious looks are cast at the veiled woman by my side. I notice that the hawk-faced Mrs. Wilson turns in her seat and looks always at us; and, strange to say, I notice that the prisoner in the dock is still staring fixedly in our direction. The policemen take him by the arms; face him round toward the bench. Once more the solemn question, "Are you guilty, or not guilty?" is asked.

A short excited pause. The prisoner answers. Well, I know what he says, although he speaks so faintly that I do not hear his voice. Strange to say, his answer seems to create considerable agitation. People who are near to him look back and whisper to those in the rear. A barrister turns in his seat and stares in a dumbfounded way at a gentleman behind him. This gentleman rises up fussily, and bustles round to the dock, where for a minute he seems to be engaged in earnest conversation with the prisoner. The latter shakes his head sullenly and hopelessly. In an apparently highly-excited state the gentleman, whom I rightly judge to be solicitor for the defence, hurries back, whispers to the barrister, and seems by his gesture to be washing his hands of some responsibility.

What does it all mean? Why do they not go on with the trial? The suspense is growing more than I can bear. Hush! The judge speaks.

The excitement is spreading through the court. In spite of the warning looks of the authorities, people are whispering to each other. The judge is speaking earnestly to the prisoner. He seems to be explaining something, counselling something. Still the man shakes his head sullenly. What does it all mean?

Mean! The next solemn action; the next solemn words of the red-robed judge answer my question, and tell me that a thing has come to pass which never entered within the range of probability. Or have I been asleep? Has the trial been gone through, and the worst, the very worst, happened? No; five minutes ago I pulled Philippa back to her seat, and forced her to withhold her damning words. Even now my grasp is on her to prevent her from rising.

Ha! Look! The judge places a square of black silk upon his head. The prisoner cowers down. He would fall were it not for the arms which support him on either side. A rustle of intense feeling runs through the court. Men catch their breath; women's eyes are distended. The sensation seekers are rewarded. Hark! The judge speaks. I can hear him plainly now, although there is deep emotion in his voice.

"Prisoner at the bar you are guilty, by your own confession, of an atrocious, cold blooded murder, the motive for which is known but to yourself and your God. For me only the painful duty remains—"

Guilty! On his own confession! The man guilty! The man to save whom we have travelled night and day—he the criminal! Philippa, my peerless Philippa! my wife! my love! Innocent! Innocent! This—this revulsion of feeling is more than human nature can bear!

"Order in the court! Order in the court!" What is it? Who is it? Only a woman in a dead faint. She is borne out tenderly, lovingly, proudly, by a man who clasps his precious burden to a heart full of such rapture as few of his fellow creatures can ever have known.

But let it also be hoped that few have ever endured such grief and anguish!

CHAPTER XVI.

"WHERE ARE THE SNOWS THAT FELL LAST YEAR?"

Although, while engaged in the labor of writing this story, I have many times regretted that I am nothing more than a plain narrator of facts and incidents, not a master of fiction, I think I have not felt the regret so strongly as at the moment when I begin this chapter. The sombre acts of the life drama in which Philippa and I played parts so painful, so full of grief, and even if brightened by a ray of joy, of joy fallacious and of uncertain tenure—these acts I have found little difficulty in describing; I had simply to throw my mind back to the pictures of the past and reproduce them in words. The task, whether well or ill done, was not a hard one.

But now, when in one moment and as if by magic, everything changed; when sorrow seemed to be simply swept out of our lives; when that poor wretch's abject confession of guilt, forced from him in some mysterious way, not only left our whole future bright and cloudless, but consigned to rest all the ghosts of the past, whose shadowy forms had hitherto dogged our steps and denied us the happiness rightly due to those who love as we loved; now I feel my shortcomings acutely, and wish my pen was more powerful than it is.

And yet a word will describe the state of my own mind as, when the last solemn words were spoken by the judge—spoken in a voice which showed emotion and distress at being compelled to condemn a fellow creature to death—I carried my fainting wife from the crowded, reeking court. The momentary sense of rapture passed away; bewilderment, sheer bewilderment, is the word for what was left. I could not think All my reasoning faculties had left me. In fact, I believe that had Philippa not swooned, and so needed my mechanically given care, I myself should have fallen senseless on that threshold which an hour before we crossed, thinking we were going to endless misery.

I remember this much. As I laid Philippa on one of the hard wooden benches in the stone corridor I kept repeating to myself, "Innocent, my love is innocent; that man is guilty." I suppose this continual reiteration was an endeavor to impress the tremendous fact upon my brain, which for a time was incredulous, and refused to entertain it.

I threw up my wife's veil and bathed her face with water, which was brought me by a kindly policeman. Presently her eyes opened and consciousness returned; she strove to speak.

My presence of mind was fast returning. "Dearest," I whispered, "as you love, me not a word in this place. In a minute we will leave it."

She was obedient; but I knew from the wild look of joy in her eyes that obedience tasked her to the utmost. She was soon able to rise, and then we walked from the court, pushed our way through the crowd who waited in the street busily discussing the sudden termination to the trial, threw ourselves into a cab and in another moment were alternately weeping and laughing in each other's arms.

It was, however, but for a moment. The inn to which we drove was close at hand. There we were shown into a room, and were at last free to give the fullest vent to our pent up feelings.

It would be absurd for me to attempt to reproduce our words, our disjointed exclamations. It would be sacrilege for me to describe the tears that we shed, the embraces, the loving caresses we lavished on each other. Think of us an hour, one short hour ago! Think of us now! This curse laid upon us by that awful night removed forever! Our secret kept, or secrecy, if still advisable, no longer absolutely needful. Philippa, in spite of all I had seen, in spite of all she had told me on that night when I found her, a wild, distracted woman, in a storm the wildest that years have known, guiltless of her husband's death! Innocent, not only as she had in my eyes always been, but also, what was far more, innocent in her own eyes!

Small wonder that for nearly an hour we sat with our arms twined around each other, and used few words which were more than rapturous exclamations of love and joy.

There! I cannot, will not describe the scene more fully. I will say no more, except this; when at last we grew calmer, Philippa turned to me, and once more I saw terror gathering in her eyes,

"Basil," she said, "is it true—it must be true?"

"True! of course it is."

"That man, the prisoner, could not have pleaded guilty when he was innocent."

"Why should he? It meant death to him, poor wretch."

"But why did he confess?"

"Who can tell? Remorse may have urged him to do so."

Philippa rose and her next words were spoken quickly and with excitement.

"No, I did not do it. The thought, the dream haunted me, but I did not believe it until I heard these men talk of the way he died. Then it all came back to me. The mad storm, the dead man over whom I stood; even then I don't think I actually believed it. It was when you told me how you found me that I lost all hope."

"Dearest, forgive me. I should have believed in the impossibility of the act even in your delirium, even if I had seen it done. Philippa, say you forgive me."

She threw her arms around me. "Basil, my husband," she whispered, "you have done much for me, do one thing more; find out the whole truth—find out why this man killed him, how he killed him; find out, satisfy me that his confession was a true one; then, Basil, such happiness as I have never even dreamed of will be mine!"

"And mine!" I echoed.

I promised to do as she wished. Indeed, the moment I had recovered my senses I resolved to learn everything that could be learned. Once and for all I would clear away every cloud of doubt, although that cloud might be no bigger than a man's hand.

But Philippa must not stop in Tewnham. Her strange conduct during the trial, her fainting fit after it, were bound to have attracted the attention of those present. No doubt she was looked upon as a friend of the prisoner, who was overpowered by the sudden and awful ending to the case. Still, she must not stay at Tewnham.

We went to London by an afternoon train. The next morning I again ran down to the place at which the trial was held. I learned the name of the convict's solicitor, and as soon as I found him at leisure requested the favor of an interview.

I found him apparently a worthy, respectable man, but of a nature inclined to be choleric. I told him I called on him because I was much interested in the case of the convict William Evans. Mr. Crisp, that was his name, frowned and fidgeted about with some papers which were in front of him.

"I would rather not talk about the case," he said sharply. "Nothing for many years has so much annoyed me."

"Why? Your client only met with his deserts."

"True—true. But I am a lawyer, sir. Our province is not to think so much of deserts as of what we can do for a client. It is hard to try and serve a fool."

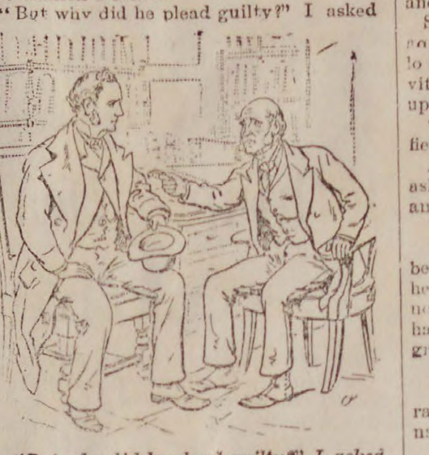
"No doubt; but I scarcely understand your meaning."

"Meaning! I could have saved that man. There was no evidence to speak of against him. What did it amount to? A pistol of a peculiar make found in a field half a mile away from the scene of the murder; one man who could swear that the pistol was my client's property—a pawnbroker, to whom he wanted to sell it. Positively, sir, that was the whole case for the Crown. Never so disgusted in my life—never!"

The excitable little man's looks showed that his disgust was not assumed.

So the pistol which I had thoughtlessly hurled away had, after all, furnished the clew and brought the criminal to justice. Although I was now quite satisfied that the right person was to suffer for the dark crime, I resolved to get all the additional information I could.

"But why did he plead guilty?" I asked



"But why did he plead guilty?" I asked "Because he was a fool," rapped out Mr Crisp.

"Because he was a fool," rapped out Mr. Crisp. "It was like committing suicide. I don't care a button for the man himself; but I confess I was annoyed at seeing my case all knocked to pieces by his obstinacy. I went to him; if you were in court you no doubt saw me. I begged him to withdraw his plea. I told him I could save him. Yet the fool insisted."

"Did penitence or remorse urge him?"

"I don't know. He could have had more time for penitence and remorse if he had let me save him from the gallows. No; he says, 'It's no good—not a bit of good. You don't know all I know. There's some one in court who knows all about it—saw it all done. She's come to hang me.' I have no idea what he meant."

I started. I knew what the man meant. He, in common with every one else in that court, had turned and looked at Philippa as she rose from her seat and addressed the judge. It was the sight of Philippa that had taken away the wretch's last hope of escape.

"I wash my hands of the fellow, of course," continued Mr. Crisp; "but I did take the trouble to inquire if any witnesses for the prosecution had been allowed to enter the court. I am assured they were all kept in waiting outside."

I sat for some moments in deep thought. The solicitor looked at me as if he fancied I had already taken up as much of his valuable time as he could spare.

"Is there any way of gaining access to the condemned man?" I said. "Could you, for instance, get an order to see him?"

"No doubt I could; but I have no object in seeing him."

"I will give you an object," I said. "I want you to see that man, and if possible get a written, or at least dictated, confession from him—not of the bald fact that he is guilty, but of all particulars connected with the murder."

Mr. Crisp looked surprised, and expressed his opinion that it was all but impossible to obtain what I wanted.

I had taken rather a fancy to the brisk-spoken, sharp little man. He seemed to me trustworthy; so that, after consideration, I determined to confide to him my reasons for making this request. Under the assurance of professional secrecy, I told him briefly so much as I thought fit of Philippa's and my own connection with the events of that night. He listened with an interest which augured well for the reception which awaits the sombre tale I now give to the world. His curiosity seemed excited, and he promised to see the convict, and if possible learn all I wanted to know. I left my address and bade him good day.

I did not care to linger at Tewnham; so I walked down to the railway station, intending to return to town by the next train. As I waited on the platform a down train came in. A sudden impulse seized me. The day was still young. I had time to spare. I crossed the bridge, entered the train, and in a quarter of an hour was at Roding. I went there because I was impelled by a desire to once more visit the actual scene of the beginning of all these troubles.

I walked that road which Sir Mervyn Ferrand had walked that dark night. But oh, how changed everything was! Yet not more changed than our own lives! It was a glorious afternoon in September. The rain of the preceding day had left the earth moist and fresh. The fields, on either side of the road, were gleaming with that bright, pure emerald which they wear after the ruthless scythe has swept away the ripe grass and the marguerites and other flowers which grew among it; or else they were filled from hedge to hedge with a golden sea of waving corn, or sheaves waiting to be garnered; for the harvest that year was not early. The wild roses were long over, but fragrant honeysuckle and other wild flowers still made gay the hedgerows and banks. The birds had awakened from their August silence and were singing once more. The great sleepy cows lay under the shade of the trees. The large mows of new hay stood side by side with their dingy-looking but more valuable elder brothers. The whole land seemed wrapped in happy autumnal repose. The scene was calm, peaceful and thoroughly typical of England. So beautiful it was, so full I now felt of love for my native land that had those pages been then written I should upon my return home have erased all my glowing description of Seville.

A breath of soft but fresh air came blowing from the faraway downs. I drew in a deep draught; I threw back my shoulders and stood erect. I laughed aloud in my great happiness as a comical picture, familiar to my childhood, of Christian losing his burden, rose before my mind, and seemed to be the exact thing wanted to illustrate my own case. Yes, the burden I had borne had fallen from my back forever!

Ah! here is the spot—the very spot where Sir Mervyn fell. It was here, just under that cluster of ragged-robbins, I must have have placed his corpse, little thinking that the kind white snow would hide it and save my love and me. Oh, how I prayed in those days that the bitter weather might last, that its iron grip would hold the world fast until Philippa's health and strength returned! It did so, and saved us!

"Where are the snows that fell last year?" Ah! should I not rather sing "Where is the grief of yesterday?" Gone like the snow. Other snow may fall, other grief may come, but last year's snow and yesterday's grief are gone forever!

Nevertheless, that spot was too suggestive of horrible reminiscences for me to linger long over it! I turned away, and in my great happiness could whisper to myself that I forgave the dead man for the ill he had wrought. May his bones rest in peace! I walked along the road, right on until I came to the cottage in which, like a coward who could not face his troubles, I had spent those aimless, miserable months. It was untenanted. Half defaced auction bills were in the windows and on the doorposts; for some months ago the furniture had been sold. I paused and looked at the window by which Philippa had entered, and felt that since that night I had passed through more grief, passion, fear, hope and joy than would fill an ordinary lifetime. Then I turned and shook the dust off my feet. Never again would I come within twenty miles of this place.

On the road back, to my annoyance, I encountered Mrs. Wilson. I tried to pass without sign of recognition, but she was too quick for me. She stood in front of me, and I was bound to stop.

She was more haggard, more drawn, more feline looking than ever. Her eyes alone looked young. They at least had spirit and vitality in them. They positively blazed upon me.

"She did not do it, after all!" she said fiercely.

At first I thought of affecting surprise and asking her what she meant, but I felt that any attempt at equivoque would be but vain.

"She did not," I answered shortly.

"Fool that I was!" she cried. "Fool, to be led away by an impulse! Why did I tell her? I swear to you, Dr. North, that had I not felt sure it was her act, she should never have known. She should have gone to her grave a shamed woman, as I shall go!"

Her look was venom itself.

"Remember," I said sternly, "Lady Ferrand is now my wife. I will not hear her name coupled with yours."

She laughed scornfully. "Your wife! She soon forgot her first love. Why did I speak? I wish my hand had withered before I wrote that letter. Do you know why I wrote it?"

"No; nor do I care."

"I wrote it for vengeance. She had, I thought, served that man as I ought to have served him; but I hated her for it, for I loved him still. So I thought it would be so sweet for her to know that she had killed her husband, and for you, her lover—I knew you were her lover—to know that I could at any moment give her up to justice! I was a fool. Why did that man plead guilty? When I saw your wife rise in court I laughed. I knew what was coming. Now, instead of harming her, I have done her good."

"You have," I said curtly, and turned upon my heel. The malignity of this woman was so intense that I felt thankful she could in no way work Philippa harm.

A quarter of a mile up the road I turned. Mrs. Wilson, a black spot on a fair scene, was standing gazing after me. I hurried on until a bend in the path hid her from my sight. I hurried on back to Philippa and happiness.

CHAPTER XVII.

CLEAR SKIES.

Although England was now to me and to my wife a land very different from the one we quitted some eight months ago, we were anxious to get back to Seville, if only to set at rest my mother's fears. She, poor woman, as a letter showed, was much exercised as to what manner of business could have made us leave her in so unceremonious a way. The moment the glad truth had become known to me, I had telegraphed, saying that all was well with us, and that we should join her. Two things only detained us.

The first was that we wanted the convict's confession. Although Philippa said little on the subject, I knew that until it arrived she would not be quite happy. There was with her a haunting dread that the man, in the hope of mitigating his sentence, had pleaded guilty to a crime of which he was innocent. Even the accurate account which I gave her of the interview with the solicitor did not quite satisfy her. So we waited impatiently for the full explanation, which might or might not come.

The second thing which kept us in London was this. I determined that before I left I would have the fact that when I married Philippa I married Lady Ferrand fully acknowledged. I found my way to the gentlemen who were winding up the dead man's affairs, and stated my case to their incredulous ears. At first they treated me as an impostor.

But not for long. Indeed, my task was half done. They had already, without any assurance from Mrs. Wilson, ferreted out the date and particulars of the death of the first Lady Ferrand. They had but to assure themselves that the marriage certificate which I laid before them was no forgery, and surrender at discretion.

It was a poor estate, the administrators told me. Sir Mervyn had died intestate. He had during his lifetime made away with nearly all he could alienate. Still, there was some personal property, of which my wife could claim a share, and a certain amount of real property, on which she was entitled to dower. But it was a very poor estate.

I cut them very short. I told them that, let the deceased's wealth be great or little, not one penny-piece of it should soil my wife's fingers. If Sir Mervyn Ferrand's heir was in want of the money, it should, provided he was a different stamp of man from his immediate predecessor, be given to him a free gift. If not, some hospital should be benefited by it. All I wanted was that it should be clearly understood that Sir Mervyn Ferrand left a widow.

The administrators, one of whom was, by the by, the heir, evidently looked upon me as a most eccentric personage. Perhaps it was for this reason, or—as I do not wish to cast unmerited blame—perhaps it was because the estate wound up to nothing—well, any way, even to this day we have received no communication, much less remittance, from the administrators; nor, to tell the truth, have I troubled them again. Philippa's marriage admitted, I washed my hands of all the Ferrand brood.

The confession did not arrive; but I persuaded Philippa to leave England. Mr. Crisp could send whatever he had to send to Seville just as well as to London. So once more, and this time in all but perfect happiness, we took the long journey which was by now quite familiar to us.

The joy, the wild joy, with which Philippa threw herself into my mother's arms checked all the upbraidings and reproach which we apparently merited. Our return was like the return of a prodigal son and daughter. Laughter, tears and happiness!

Although I told my mother nothing as to the object of our mysterious journey; although she asked me nothing; although no word evidencing her knowledge of what had passed has ever crossed her lips, I know that all has been revealed to her; that Philippa has sobbed out the whole strange tale on her breast. I know it by this, that since the day of our return my mother's deep love for my wife has shown itself even tenderer, sweeter and deeper. Yes, I was spared the telling of the tale. My mother's eyes the next day showed me that Philippa had given her the history, as I have given it here from beginning to end.

No, not quite the end. Sit by me once more, as I asked you at the beginning of my story to sit by me; but this time, not by the side of a smoldering fire, but out in the fair, gay patio of our Andalusian home. Philippa and I are side by side. The post has just come in and brought me a bulky packet, on which, in a clerkly hand, is written my name and address. I tear the wrapper open with eagerness. I know what it contains; Philippa knows. I wish to read it first alone, but the appealing look in her eyes turns me

A Letter from the Far West.

NO. VIII. MULE SKINNERS

belong to the once very important but now waning factors of Montana's industries. In ante-railroad time all the merchandise shipped into the territory was drawn from Fort Benton (the head of navigation on the Missouri) or from Ogden and Corrinne (on the Union Pacific) in long mule teams, consisting of three great covered wagons drawn by five pairs of mules. The wagons diminished in size towards the river. The second and third wagons are attached to each other and to the first by short tongues and are called "trails," as they can be easily dropped in mud holes and in going up steep hills—the mules returning for them in sections. Where several trains belong to one man a train master usually accompanies them on horse back and has general supervision.

The driver, whose name in common parlance—mule skinner—suggests its own origin, sits astride the "nigh" wheeler and guides the train by a single-line running from his hand to the bit of the nigh leader. His heels are armed with formidable spurs and his neck is adorned with his whip, known as "the black snake," from the striking resemblance to that reptile. The whip is of black braided leather without any stock, about one foot of the large end is filled with shot, and the smaller end tapers into a snapper, while a skillful hand can use with telling effect, usually killing a bird when within reach. With this implement the driver flays his patient, toiling beasts and curses them at the same time. Every mule has a name by which he is addressed singly and then sworn at collectively. A man's character is exhibited in the very tone with which he addresses his team, but nowhere have I seen less character exhibited than among the teamsters of the far West. We often meet men whose very countenance is profane, but I have been disappointed more times than a few as I have rode past a quiet looking driver sitting placidly astride his "wheeler" and wearing a countenance suggestive of an orthodox deacon. Yet I have hardly bidden him a cheery "good morning" and cantered the length of his train when I would be startled by the crack of his whip as he ran along the side of each pair of mules and addressed them by every appellation in the swearer's catalogue, from the offspring of a fowling piece, down.

Both driver and his stock live on the road and under the open sky for eight or nine months of the year, camping whenever noon or night overtakes his train his stock are turned loose with nose bags of oats hung on their heads to roam at will. A cayuse is always tied at the tail board of the rear wagon to gather up the stock when wanted and which are usually found by the bell mule who leads the rest. On a shelf outside one of the wagons is a cook stove and camping outfit, which the teamster takes down and with which he makes his bread or warm biscuit, fries his bacon, and steeps his coffee and then rolls himself in his blankets and enjoys the sleep of the healthy. If the weather is stormy he lies under or in his wagons according as his train is loaded or empty. Up to one year ago, continuous lines of mule trains were seen on the leading thoroughfares all over the territory—by no means an unpleasant sight. Often one pair of mules would have an ornamented set of bells attached to their harness with which the train kept time.

Scarcely a day passed but mule trains more or less numerous would be seen in the main streets of Helena with their large canvas covered wagons discharging freight and often standing in the same place all day long. They transported freight about as cheaply as the railroads do, but far more slowly of course. It gave an air of business to the place that "old timers" miss. Now it is all done at the depot—originally a mile and a half away—but now the new town at the depot and the old city have nearly grown together. A recent horse back journey of one hundred and twenty-five miles through a section of the territory not yet traversed by railroads brought us into view of continuous lines of mule trains which were familiar and not unwelcome sights.

BULL WHACKERS.

Surely this term will need no philological explanation when it is understood that it characteristically and accurately designates the driver of an oxtram. In early days oxen were used extensively in place of mules on the freight trains and were more or less seen down to the coming of the railroads through the territory—now "bull trains" as they are called, are rarely witnessed. Oxen carried more, moved faster, and kept easier than mules. They were fed less grain on the road and perhaps were finally available for beef, but I think it would take all the jaw of a first class scold to get away with a "bull steak" in the spring, after it had done service in a freight train all summer on the road, and rustled for itself all winter in the mountain ranges. It often exhausts the physical energies of the masticator of an ordinary steak in the spring, and panting men are sometimes seen about the boarding house dining tables at such times. But when in summer or autumn the cattle are well fattened on the succulent grasses, once so plenty in this territory, we have proverbially tender and juicy steaks.

The bull whacker's life is essentially the same as a mule skinner's, except that he never rides his team, but walks with it carrying an immense wooden whip stock around with a goard or tremendous leather lash—usually the latter—and when he cracks his whip, which he does quite constantly, the team feel it and you hear it if you are anywhere near it. I have never heard its repeated sound but I have stopped, thinking that some one was firing a revolver in rapid succession. With a crack of the end of his lash the bull whacker—if he be a real artist in his line—can take a light of glass from a window as quickly and cleanly as a brick bat. With this instrument as a mator, he keeps his cattle at a gait that I have never seen exceeded by mules or horses. What ever deficiency the whip has, the driver makes up in profanity.

PROFANITY

is the nomenclature of cattle and stock drivers at the far West. There is a peculiarity about its intensity, comprehensiveness and originalty that I have never noticed elsewhere. If swearing is of any good the above characters ought to be much above the average in that quality. Alas! it shows the power of evil association. No man ever uttered an oath without lowering himself in his own self respect and the respect of all who heard him. To my recollection I have never met any of the class designated at the commencement of this paragraph who were not very profane with one exception. I did travel with our stage driver who seemed to be utterly devoid of the foolish and wicked practice. I asked him how it happened. He said he had "sworn out." I was inclined to believe him for it was in the time of spring freshets with experiences to test a man's patience equal to putting up a stove pipe. He was a gentleman through it all. He had promised me, after a succession of delays, that he would get me to my destination in season for a lecture which had been announced, "if nothing breaks." But something did break. The last bridge we were crossing concluded to leave while the horses were on it. The stream was not so formidable but that we all escaped drowning. Some waded into their arm pits. As a rule, I like to "wade in" to things, but it struck me that a preacher on his way to lecture with one suit of clothes would do well to keep quiet and dry. So there were three of us, a Catholic priest—than whom I never formed a jollier stage companion for two days—General Horace Binney Sargent and myself, who crossed with scarcely wetting our feet. How we did it and got the whole outfit over I hardly know. But it was done as the interesting stage-coach experiences of this country are always accomplished—somehow—and in this instance without swearing, though I got to my lecture just in season to be too late, it having been announced that the coach might not be in before morning.

On my return I rode with a knight of the whip who was about as far beyond the average in the profanity of his class as the others were below it. He had a vicious team who seemed to understand no language but profanity, of which they had an abundance. He had just been telling me how one of the horses, more vicious than the others, had several times ran away with the rest of the team, when we came to a stream from which the bridge had been swept during the previous night, and which was too swollen for any possible crossing. It was near the entrance of a canyon and leaving me in charge of the team he went to seek a trail over the mountains. It was the first time I ever held the reins of six horses. I sat with my foot on the brake. Some young Irishmen inside got out and commenced to fire their pistols at a mark. I knew it was useless to speak to either the horses or the men unless I swore at them, and I was debating in mind whether to jump and abandon the team or swear at them—it was one or the other—when the driver, who was only over the brow of a hill, hearing the firing and well knowing what the consequences would be, came running up and swearing like half a dozen troopers. Those horses calmed down in an instant. It was the only instance I remember where evil was justifiable that good might come, which Paul says is contrary to scripture.

That coach journey came to an end like all things earthly—not until the next day, however. No trail over the mountains being found, logs were floated down the current until we were fortunate enough to get one that swung round and reached across the stream, over which I crossed, as I was obliged to go forward. For twelve miles—to the next stage station—I picked my way on foot, packing my buffalo coat and heavy gum shoes, amid the wrecks which a few minutes' freshet had wrought. Meeting and turning back the coach we continued the journey through one of the blackest nights I ever saw, so dark that the driver dared not pass the most dangerous places until I got down and went ahead with the side lights. With the first streak of morning I crawled under the driver's seat, into the mail bags and slept the sleep of the weary. If there were anything crushed in those bags it could have been easily accounted for. I never felt so heavy as I did then, unless it were two or three nights afterwards, when I tried to help a discouraged stage driver out of a mud hole and after carrying culvert planks from midnight till four o'clock in the morning. Of fences there were none and the telegraph poles were too much for us. I walked four miles into town and sent out a fresh team to pull him out of the mire. It would be truthful to say that in all these instances, save the exception indicated, we heard some swearing. Would that there were more exceptions.

The only instance I ever heard of a teamster's "swearing out" was some time since on the Fort Benton road. A bull train of twelve oxen began to mire. The driver dropped both trail wagons and borrowed the oxen from another train of the same size. With the twenty-four oxen hitched to one wagon, he began to whack and to swear until the air seemed full of young earthquakes and brimstone. The moving load began to settle and finally anchored in the middle of the slough. The frantic driver fell on his knees and cried, "O Lord give me some more cross words to get my team through this mudhole!"

When you visit Boston for a days' pleasure it will not be complete unless you visit the Cyclorama of the Battle of Gettysburg, now permanently located on the Moody and Sankey Tabernacle site, on Tremont street. It represents the decisive action which took place in the afternoon of July 3, 1863. The spectator is placed on the battlefield in the centre of the position occupied by the troops of the North and views the battle as it actually took place. As the visitor mounts the platform, he suddenly finds himself upon a high hill, with a stretch of forty miles of country all around him and everywhere within range of his vision, on the hills, in the valleys, in the woods, on the open fields, in ditches and behind stone walls, and in shot-shattered shanties he beholds the soldiers of the blue and gray engaged in the awful struggle for the supremacy. No words can adeqately describe the wonderful effects of this life-like portrayal of this great battle. It tells, and in the most vivid manner possible, the whole story of that dreadful afternoon of the 3d of July, 1863. The attempt to break the Northern lines; the desperate and disastrous charge of Pickett's column; the explosion of the ammunition wagons, which gave the Southerners so much joy; Hunt's gallant reception of Pickett's men; the terrible slaughter of Confederates, as, crossing the open plain, they were cut down with solid shot, bullet, bombshells, and grape; the attack on Gibbon's division; the desperate valor of Emmetsburg road; the awful work of the battery stationed on Little Round Top; the death of the gallant Webb; the splendid charge of Col. Hall's regiment; the use of the "cold steel" in a hand-to-hand struggle; the death of Armistead; and very many other thrilling incidents of this memorable fight, are graphically depicted, and with historical accuracy. Old soldiers who have seen the cyclorama pronounce it as accurate as if photographed.

THE NEW MISTRESS OF THE WHITE HOUSE, Miss Elizabeth Cleveland, is a W. C. T. U. worker. Last spring, on that day when the W. C. T. U. all over the land united in concert of prayer for the nominating conventions that were so soon to meet, she gave directions to the thoughts, and led the hour, when at New York W. C. T. U. asked God to endow with heavenly graces and divine strength the woman, who, after March 4, 1885, should preside in the President's home, the first lady of the land. In God's providence the leader of that season of prayer is herself called to this kingdom. The UNION SIGNAL, the official organ of the Nat. W. C. T. U., sends her in tender sympathy this message:

"Our hearts, our hopes, our prayers, our tears,
Our faith triumphant o'er our fears,
Are all with thee, are all with thee."

A sister of Ex-President Arthur, Mrs. R. M. Carr, of Albany, N. Y., spen the last New Year's in loving labor and comfort for the poor and needy at a W. C. T. U. reception in her own city instead of aiding in receiving the gay crowd at the President's mansion.

SOMETHING FOR THE BABY:—What a terrible affliction about the house is a cross crying baby! A young man on the very edge of matrimony might easily be frightened from his purposes by having too much of that sort of music at the homes of his married friends. Yet babies cry commonly only when they are sick. One teaspoonful of Parker's Tonic, given the little one will bring rest and sleep to the baby and all in the house. Only 50 cents at druggists.

THE HEARING on the West Peabody matter before the Legislative Committee on Towns has closed and a report may be expected shortly in the matter.

It has become evident to those who have attended the several hearings at the State House, and to those who have followed the reports of the same, that Rev. Mr. Spaulding was the head and front of the entire matter of division. It was not only admitted by him on the stand that he obtained every signature save one to the petition, but he appeared before the Committee both as witness and attorney. It was announced at first that Mr. Upham would conduct the case for the petitioners; but after a fifteen minutes' speech of formal opening, he introduced Spaulding, who really made the opening argument, taking up nearly the whole of the first day. He then took the stand and Mr. Upham stood by him till his cross examination was completed. Mr. Upham then stepped aside, and Spaulding thereafter cross examined the witnesses for the respondents, and made the closing plea. This however, is only incidental, and has nothing to do with the justice of the claims of the people from West Peabody.

The only argument of weight, that we can see, put forth by Mr. Spaulding, is that West Peabody needs no more than towns like Lynnfield, Boxford and others which he mentioned, which towns are farming communities like West Peabody, and where the rate of taxation is much less than is the rate in our town. But this is not the argument used chiefly by the petitioners at the beginning. Their claim was over taxation. That not only was their property taxed for more than its real value, but that after paying into the town treasury their proportion of the tax, they still paid several thousand dollars yearly to benefit the rest of the town.

As far as any specific claims were put forth to substantiate this by the petitioners, or even where there were such supposed claims, they have been met by figures by the attorney of the town which disproved them at every point. A very carefully prepared table was presented by Mr. Relihan, which we published at the time in full, clearly showing that the difference between West Peabody's tax and her proportion of what was received was so slight as to hardly need mention. We understood Mr. Spaulding to say that West Peabody was willing to pay their just proportion. Their claim was that they paid more. The figures of Mr. Relihan show that they do not.

Again it was shown, leaving out on the one hand the tax and valuation of Appleton and Salstonstall, and on the other the debt on the town house and interest, the fire department, police, board of health, street lighting and water works, that a similar result would be arrived at. This is allowing claims which no one would think of allowing only for the sake of the argument, and to show that the figures of the petitioners were not reliable when carefully investigated.

It is true, in arriving at this result, Mr. Spaulding's figures of valuation were not taken for West Peabody. They were taken from the books of the Assessors. Mr. Spaulding admitted an error of some $15,000 on his map statement, and also that he knew it before the maps were printed, but he didn't consider it of much consequence. In his estimate of population, also printed on the maps, he admitted that he guessed at it, counting the dots on the atlas, and calling everything, whether barns, stores, stations or whatever else there was, all dwelling houses, and multiplying them by a certain number to get at the population. He also admitted that on the basis of his own figures to get at the fact claimed by him that the real tax of West Peabody was $25.00 on a thousand, it was not correct—that $23.75 was just what it was. But he thought a good round number would sound better. No such little inaccuracies as these were resorted to by Mr. Relihan. And we do not see how the admissions of Spaulding to the inaccuracies alluded to could fail to impress on the minds of the Committee that the petitioners were blunderers, to say the least in figures.

But other reasons were put forth by the respondents. It was shown that not until recently had West Peabody thought of being separated. Years ago when the old town of Danvers was divided, she preferred to come this way—although Danvers was more of a farming town. But the markets of West Peabody farmers were this way. Her interests were this way. And so they are to-day. It was shown that West Peabody was no more overtaxed, if so at all, now than years ago, but no one ever heard any complaint until Rev. Mr. Spaulding left his hard labors at the plough to come to the more literary gatherings of the West Peabody Farmers' Club.

Any attempt to bring politics into the queston is weak in the extreme. We don't believe the democrats want West Peabody to go, because then we shall be a democratic town. According to our neighbor, we are that now. And we don't think any Republican is foolish enough to think that we are likely to be a Republican town if they remain. But the people of the suburbs of any town are conservative. And the tendency to extravagance in all our towns and cities is a growing one, and one which we, as well as the people from West Peabody, deplore. This tendency must be stopped. A bill has already been introduced into the Legislature looking to this end in the cities of our Commonwealth. We are not sure that it might not be profitably extended to include towns. Every town needs such an element as West Peabody as a restraint. It should not, and we believe it is not the policy of the State to separate very little farming hamlets into a separate municipality, because of the real or fancied grievances of a few men. The petitions for such divisions are numerous enough this year. We tremble for the Committee on Towns in future years, if leave to withdraw is not reported in the case of most of them.

The action of a few Republicans in tampering with the regular citizens' ticket shows a degree of malice and partisanship on their part that exceeds the ordinary warfare of local or general elections.—Reporter.

We are sorry for our neighbor. Did he anticipate there would be no opposition to the ticket of the Citizens' Caucus. Did he expect the "Old Board" of Selectmen and their friends would submit to an almost total rout without a fight? And is putting such an opposition ticket in the field to be called "tampering" with the other tickets? It surely is a new name for it.

The fight at the polls was almost entirely on the Board of Selectmen. That there were no split tickets with reference to any other nominations, shows this to be so. That the supporters of the Old Board took that ticket also in its entirety, despite the changes to which our neighbor objects, show it still further. Another thing was shown very clearly. That because any party or section desired representation on the ticket and obtained it through the Committee of Thirty, such representation must be strong enough to commend itself to other sections and other parties in order to be endorsed at the polls. The weakness of the ticket of the Citizens' Caucus on the Board of Selectmen, and this only, was the cause for the defeat of the entire ticket, except in cases where it was endorsed by the other one.

At the same time, we do not desire to be understood as defending the ticket, made up, as we understand, by certain members of the Republican Town Committee. We are simply stating facts known to everybody who watched with any care the voting at the polls. Our position as to a non-partisan town government is well enough known. And we are not in sympathy with that spirit, or lack of judgment, or whatever it was, that led the makers of the opposition ticket to put three republicans on the Board of Trustees in place of one each from the three parties. They were elected for the reason stated above. But at no other time, we believe could it have been done. We have no fault to find with the men elected. But it was a serious mistake and will surely tell against the Republican party in the future.

By the provisions of the new law, to go into effect July 1st, the weight of all single rate letters may be increased to one ounce; all newspapers sent from the office of publication will be carried for one cent per pound or fraction thereof, and by placing a special ten cent stamp in addition to the regular postage on letters, they will be entitled to immediate delivery by special messengers employed for that purpose, in any city or town containing four thousand or more population, within one mile of the Post Office, between 7 A. M. and midnight.

It always pays to watch closely the advertisements, but never more so than at a period like the present, when more bargains are being offered than ever before. In these days it is generally true that advertising houses buy the largest stocks upon the best terms, and put them to the public at from twenty-five to fifty per cent. less than their slower competitors. By observing when and where to purchase, as set forth in the columns of the PRESS, the shrewd reader can make a very material saving from the ordinary cost of goods.

Supper will be served Wednesday evening at 6.30 o'clock. Ice cream Thursday evening. An entertainment consisting of a farce, character impersonations, music, etc., will be presented Thursday evening by members of the Murray Club.

James P. Walsh, Jr., youngest son of Mr. James P. Walsh, died last Saturday after a weeks' sickness of pneumonia. The little fellow who was only seven years old, was far advanced for his years and greatly loved by his schoolmates. He was kindly remembered by his teacher, Miss Jennie S. Tufts, with beautiful flowers and his schoolmates also contributed a cross and star besides a basket of flowers. The parents of the child are very grateful to the teachers and pupils and also the neighbors for their many acts of kindness. Such a favorite was he with his companions at school that they have contributed money for the purpose of having a picture of him framed and hung in the school room, and the teacher will keep his seat vacant during the remainder of the term.

MUSICAL NOTES.

The editor of this column will be pleased to receive, at any time, any information of interest to this column.

The Salem Cadet Band have been presented with a solid silver medal for each member, by the Ancient & Honorable Artillery Company of Boston, as a souvenir of their trip to Washington. The band was highly praised in Washington by the local press, and fully sustained its reputation. The band will shortly appear in the Town Hall in a first class concert assisted by a local vocalist.

On Monday evening, April 13, the Salem Oratorio Society will give the concluding entertainment in its course at Mechanic Hall. The programme will include the "Utrecht Jubilate," by Handel, and "The Last Judgment," by Sphor. The soloists will be Fanny Kellogg, soprano; Mary Howe, contralto; William J. Winch, tenor, and D. M. Babcock, bass. The rehearsals have been very thorough, and a rich musical treat is in store.

A new Orchestral Club has been formed in Salem, which will include local musicians both ladies and gentlemen, for the practice of Orchestral music. It is expected to give two concerts this season, and will depend partly for its support on Associate members who will be entitled each to two tickets to the Concerts and admission to the rehearsals, after the manner of the Schubert Club. D. B. Hagar is the President and F. C. Record is to be the Conductor.

We learn that Miss Hattie J. Clapper, who was the Contralto soloist in Salem at the Messiah, will make an eight week's tour with Theodore Thomas' celebrated Orchestra, beginning in April. The other soloists will be Mme. Fursch-Madi and Miss Emma Juch. They will appear in Boston Music Hall the latter part of April in A. P. Peck's annual benefit concert.

In the absence of Mr. Zerrahn at the Oratorio rehearsal on Thursday evening, his place was very acceptably filled by Mr. W. S. Fenollosa, it being the first time he has served the Society in the capacity of director.

Mr. Hardy Innis, an employe at Almy, Bigelow & Washburn's, is to be given a testimonial concert at Y. M. C. A. hall, on the evening of April 14. Messrs. Newcomb, Fisher and others will contribute to the programme.

The play of the Lady of Lyons is one of the very few standard plays which is ever old yet ever new. It is not a great play, as measured by the tragedies of Shakespeare, but is one of the few comedies selected by the greatest artists in the country as a change from the heavier roles in which they nightly perform. The interest in Claude and Pauline, who are the leading artists in the play, never ceases from the rise to the fall in the curtain. Edwin Booth plays it twice next week, and from the palmy days of Anna Cora Mowatt to the present time few leading actors or actresses have failed to present it in their repertoire. It was chosen by the lamented Fechter at his last performance at the old Globe Theatre, when he was supported by Carlotta Leclerque and where the seats, even in the third gallery, were at a premium.

It is not a play that needs to be seen many times to be understood. It appeals to all hearts, and is as eagerly enjoyed by the newsboys in the gallery as by the people in the orchestra seats. It is therefore with pleasure that we announce this as the play in which Margaret Mather will appear next month in our new town hall. During her engagement in Boston she only played it once; it is therefore a rare opportunity our people will have in seeing this gifted actress in the role of Pauline. Due notice will be given of the sale of seats and we feel sure that the capacity of our hall will be taxed to its utmost.

PACIFIC BANK STOCKHOLDERS.—Judge Colt in the United States district court at Boston, yesterday, in the suits against the stockholders of the defunct Pacific national bank, decided that the stockholders must pay the second assessment of 100 per cent. on their stock levied by Controller Knox some time since. The decision is of very serious import to the unfortunate stockholders. They voluntarily assessed themselves $965,000 on the capital stock at the time of failure, of which about $750,000 was paid in. Two months after the bank resumed it again suspended and by direction of the controller Receiver Price levied a second assessment of $965,000. None of this had been paid, the stockholders believing it to be illegally levied. By Judge Colt's decision the stockholders must pay in all about $2,000,000, including the $750,000 already paid on the stock which they hold. Of course the decision is of corresponding benefit to the depositors and other creditors of the bank for instead of the paltry dividend of 10 per cent. they will probably receive a substantial part of their claims. The decision is subject to revision by the supreme court where the case will probably go, so that a final settlement is far off.—Advertiser.

HOME HAPPENINGS.

The decease of Isaac Hardy, which took place Sunday night, removes from our midst one of our best known citizens—identified with the business interest of Peabody nearly all his life. There are few people in our town, from the child to the aged citizen, who did not know Isaac Hardy—and to know him was to respect him. There are few men or firms in the leather trade in Boston or vicinity who did not know or had not at some time had business dealings with Mr. Hardy. For he was known as one of the most extensive tanners in this region. He began in a small way with his brother, Thomas, who left the town shortly for California. He kept on increasing his business in the vicinity of English, Hardy and Walnut streets, until his tannery covered a large area of property. His business has been conducted in nearly the same place for many years. It has varied with the vicissitudes of the leather trade. In the flush seasons it is said he employed one hundred men and was able to turn out 100,000 sides of leather yearly.

Mr. Hardy was an enthusiast in everything he undertook. His ambition was to build up a large and successful business—giving employment to many men. This he did as far as his means would allow. Like many other men in the uncertain leather business he had his fortunes and misfortunes—suffering far more from the misfortunes of others than from what befel him. Many times he kept his yards full of hides when it could not fail to be a loss to him—simply to give employment to men who had long served him in different capacities.

But it is not only in his business life that Mr. Hardy is known. He took an active interest in all that pertained to the welfare of the town, and was a leader in every good work. He was prominently associated with the work of temperance and with the religious work of the South Church of this town. In this, as in his business, his enthusiasm was manifest. In temperance he has probably been identified with every organization formed in town. One of our earliest recollections of Mr. Hardy associates him with meetings in this cause, at which he was the prominent leader, speaker and worker. He never lost his interest in the work to the time of his death. And if not seen of late years in so public a manner connected with the cause it was because he felt that young men could lead on better and more valiantly.

He was a member of the South Church and in this work and more especially the missionary work of the church in this vicinity he was one of the foremost. Before the establishment of the Rockville Cong. Church, a delegation from the church here held services and a Sabbath School in the little chapel which will be so well remembered by many citizens. Sometimes they had a preacher. Oftimes Dr. Jewett of Salem came up and preached to them. But many times it fell to the lot of the faithful brothers and sisters in attendance to perform whatever service there was. From the number in weekly attendance Mr. Hardy was seldom absent. At West Peabody also, he was one of those who frequently assisted to conduct services. And later at the Alms House, he represented the cause in which he was so much interested, having conducted services there, we are informed, only a week previous to his illness.

In everything else conducive to the weal of the town the interest and aid of Mr. Hardy was never withheld. He was earnestly interested in education and our schools. Deploring the limited education, comparatively, which he himself had received, he desired all the more earnestly that those connected with him, and those also whom he could influence, should improve all the advantages which the State placed before them. In the days of the old district school system, Mr. Hardy was always called upon to speak to the scholars on "examination day," and he never failed to respond with a cheering word.

Mr. Hardy never held any prominent office either locally or politically. To such work he did not aspire. But very few prominent meetings of the town found him absent or unwilling to perform his part. He was active and interested in the political party to which he belonged, and was frequently a delegate to the important conventions, and called upon to preside over the caucuses of the party.

In his social and domestic life Mr. Hardy was devoted, free hearted and charitable. He was too ready at many times to believe stories of want and suffering—and was many times imposed upon. But many in actual distress have had good cause to respect and bless him.

Mr. Hardy was born in this town Dec. 2d, 1814. He was twice married, his first wife being a sister of the late Joseph Poor, by whom he had one daughter who survives him. His second wife died some years ago. He has two brothers living; Thomas, who resides in California, and Jacob, who is in the Sandwich Islands. His funeral took place this afternoon from his late residence, and services were also held at the South Church, conducted by Rev. Mr. Sperry, assisted by Rev. J. W. Colwell and the church choir. Rev. Mr. Sperry pronounced a fitting eulogy, reviewing his life as he had viewed it from personal intercourse, and from knowledge gained from his friends. It was an honest open tribute to a good man. The services were largely attended by our prominent citizens and the employes of his tannery attended in a body. The following gentlemen acted as pall bearers: Chas. B. Farley, John Pinder, John A. Lord and Mayhew S. Clark. His remains were interred at Monumental Cemetery.

Hi Henry's Premium Minstrels will appear at Town hall, on Saturday evening, March 21, in a programme of choicest excellence, embracing an entirely new collection of sensational features. This organization is a solid and praiseworthy affair, and has a reputation second to none. Among its many features are its costly and elaborate first part circle, dressed in velvet, plush, silk, satin and diamonds, with an orchestra of soloists in gorgeous uniforms, followed by an interlude of brilliant specialties. The entertainment terminating with an hour of genuine opera, written especially for them, entitled "The Legend of Grey Beard's Rock." Mounted in the most lavish style, with elegant costumes, startling effects, imposing choruses, sparkling melodies, a gorgeous denouement of glittering splendor, under prismatic colored fires. Nothing like this on so grand and costly a scale has ever been attempted in minstrelsy, and it will be an event long to be remembered. Remember only one visit will be made this season, and tickets for the occasion can be purchased now at Spaulding's at 25, 35 and 50 cents.

Mr. Bowman Viles of West Peabody reported at the Salem Police station on Monday, that a plausible young man giving the name of Charles Douglas had visited him on Sunday and entered into negotiations to purchase his farm for $7200. Douglas told Mr. Viles that he had purchased a pair of cattle that he intended to send up to the farm and requested the loan of $25 from Mr. Viles to secure the trade, as his money was all on deposit in the Village Bank at Danvers. Mr. Viles kindly obliged him, and gave him the money, since which time Douglas has been conspicuous by his absence. Mr. Viles went to the man of whom Douglas said he bought his cattle, and the man told him that he hadn't sold any. It appears that the same party was in town on Friday, and offered to buy Mr. John Colcord's farm at West Peabody for $10,000. Douglas claimed to hall from Saugus. He is a short man, of light complexion, with a heavy moustache, and apparently about 30 years old.

The school committee met Wednesday evening and organized as follows; Rev. J. W. Hudson, Chairman; G. Fred Osgood, Secretary. The various sub-committees appointed were as follows:—Wallis District, Thomas Carroll and Frank E. Farnham; Centre School, W. G. Sperry and P. H. O'Connor; Bowditch School, G. F. Osgood and F. E. Farnham; Rockville School, P. H. O'Connor and G. F. Osgood; West and Felton Schools, Thomas Carroll and G. F. Osgood; High School—W. G. Sperry, J. W. Hudson, Thomas Carroll and G. F. Osgood. The Committee on School Buildings was not appointed.

Mr. Charles H. Thayer, the general manager of the Point of Pines, proposes to extend and beautify the athletic ground at that resort next season, and convert it into a first-class base ball ground. Valuable prizes will be offered to the winners in a series of contests between first-class amateur base ball clubs. The games will be played on Saturdays. The grand stand will be roofed over, and an opportunity will be thereby afforded some 2000 persons to witness the games and enjoy the cool breezes of the ocean, the stand being but a few feet from the water.

The Peabody Institute was about half filled last Thursday evening to listen to the readings and impersonations of Mr. Leland T. Powers in "David Garrick." He enacted the different parts in an excellent manner and received a hearty greeting from the audience. He closed with a scene from David Copperfield, taking the difficult part of Uriah Heep, besides the other four characters with great success. Mr. W. H. Garniss presided at the piano. About $20 was netted the post.

The blue birds and robins which were reported about the first of the month are either dead or in the hospital. No one has reported the flutter of a wing or a chirp for the past week.

The relatives of Capt. William Harrison Roberts, in this town, were shocked last Sunday to learn by telegraph of his sudden death at Blaine, Kansas, of heart disease at the age of 44 years and 4 months. Capt. Roberts married Mary E. Hobbs, daughter of Mrs. Nathan H. Bushby, of this town, and she will have the sympathy of the community in her hour of trial. Capt. Roberts was a member and Past Dictator of Charlestown Lodge No. 192 Knights of Honor, having served as Reporter for two years. He was also a member of Court Orient, No. 2, Loyal Knights and Ladies, and represented them in the Imperial Court. He was also a member of Bunker Hill Lodge No 14. I. O.O. F. He served with the Putnam Blues, Company E, in the Forty-seventh Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers during the war. He was also Captain of the Prescott Light Guards, with which company he was a very popular officer and member. While a resident of this town he made many friends who regret his sudden death. He left a widow and three children.

"Some of the citizens of this town think they have just cause of complaint against the city of Salem. This town voted no license and has enforced it; but Salem, which voted the same, has not enforced it, and on Sunday last the police of Salem sent no less than 25 drunken individuals over the line from Salem to Peabody, who had been to Salem to get liquor which they could not obtain in Peabody. This is a disgrace to both places." It will probably be worse before it is any better, as Salem will soon grant licenses and saloons will be established all along the line. Already some of Peabody's saloon keepers are getting ready to go to Salem to take advantage of the license law.—Sunday Globe.

Mr. Larry Cuddire, who lives on Mill street, agreed to disagree with his wife last Monday night and turned her out of the house about eleven o'clock. She raved around and amidst the smashing of glass, etc., could be heard the voices of each hurling such adjectives at each other as would not be found in an ordinary dictionary. This storm was followed by a calm and about two o'clock the ears of the neighbors were edified by a repetition of the love feast. Such is life.

The school committee have made a move in the right direction by shortening the recess of the High School ten minutes and prohibited the scholars from visiting the square during that time. The subject of corporal punishment has been discussed and the feeling seemed to be in favor of prohibiting as far as the girls were concerned. The visiting of the teachers to the skating rinks was discussed, but it was beyond the control of the committee.

There will be a fine lecture under the auspices of Post 50 G. A. R., by Rev. Volney M. Simons of Springfield, Past Chaplain of Post 50, at the Peabody Institute this evening. Subject—Cross Wives. Assisted by the Blind Pianist, Prof. Maynard of Boston, and Prof. Hill on the violin. Admission 25 and 15 cents. Doors open at 7 o'clock P. M. Lecture to commence at 7.45.

The law affecting attachments on the property of insolvent debtors undergoes an important change by the act approved by Governor Robinson on the 6th inst. Henceforth, an attachment made four months before the commencement of bankruptcy or insolvency proceedings, voluntary or involuntary, will hold, in spite of such proceedings, and can be enforced in full by execution.

Joseph Cronin of this town, came near loosing his hand last week while at work at Middleton. He was sawing wood with a circular saw, when it struck a knot and threw him forward, his hand struck the saw cutting his fingers, but a piece of wood coming between, prevented his loosing them. Narrow escape.

We close to-day a series of very interesting letters from the pen of Rev. L. L. Wood, in different themes connected with the western country in which he is located. We are sure our readers have perused them with much pleasure and we hope to be able ere long to give them something of equal interest from the same or some other pen.

It was quite a compliment to the committee having in charge the building of our town hall, when Representative Cross, of Newburyport, in the legislature last Friday, cited the cost of painting it and compared it with the painting of the auditor's office, as a proof of the extravagance of the committee having in charge the painting of that office.

Mr. Frank Potter, the hulled corn man, is about to give up that business and remove to a farm at Danvers. He will drive a vegetable team to this town and handle country produce generally. Frank is a good farmer having served an apprenticeship up in the "Lane," where they are all good farmers.

FROM REV. E. W. WHITNEY,

Formerly Pastor of the Universalist Church, Peabody, Mass.

For several years I have been troubled with Catarrh, which seriously interfered with my public speaking, and which baffled all my attempts to get permanent relief. Experienced surgeons operated upon me, and I was under the care of a Boston physician for two years, but obtained no lasting benefit. I applied various medicines, but failed to get relief. I was lead, by the advice of friends, to consult Dr. Lighthill. My faith was at the lowest ebb, but I am happy to say that after a few months' treatment no trace of my old trouble appears, and I have every reason to believe that the cure is permanent. I cordially recommend Dr. Lighthill to all who may be afflicted in a similar manner.

E W. WHITNEY,

Peabody, Mass., June 27, 1879.

AN INTERESTING CASE.

A statement of Mr. Clement A. Thorndike, of the firm of L. A. May & Co., 127 Union street, Lynn, Mass.

To the Public:—Having been raised almost like one from the dead by the skillful treatment of Dr. Lighthill, and to benefit similar sufferers, I make this public statement of my case. For years I was troubled with Catarrh in my head, seriously affecting and almost destroying my nasal bone; the discharge was very profuse, requiring constant blowing and hawking for relief; gradually the irritation passed into my throat, producing hoarseness and a hacking cough, and finally it affected my bronchial tubes and lungs, leaving me a victim to consumption. The cough now became distressing and almost constant, and debilitating night sweats made their appearance. I lost flesh and became greatly emaciated. I consulted medical men and used various remedies, but all efforts for relief utterly failed. In that condition, and greatly disheartened and discouraged, I applied to Dr. Lighthill, whose able and thorough examination of my case proved to me that I was in the right hands. Convinced that he fully understood my condition, and, inspired with new hope, I placed myself under his care, and very soon experienced the benefit of his treatment. One after another of the symptoms of Catarrh left me. I gained in strength and weight, my cough and night sweats disappeared, and now I am only too thankful and delighted to be able to call myself well again. Hoping that this statement may give new courage and confidence to such as may suffer as I have,

I remain, respectfully,

CLEMENT A. THORNDIKE.

Lynn, June 18, 1881

CATARRH CURED.

FROM REV. E. C. BUTLER,

Beverly, Mass.

I most heartily recommend any one afflicted with that troublesome disease, Catarrh, to Dr. Lighthill. I have full confidence in him. His treatment has had the most gratifying results in my own case, which was severe and of long standing. E. C. BUTLER,

Beverly, Mass., Oct. 29, 1879.

CURE OF DEAFNESS.

FROM RT. REV. T. F. HENDRIKEN,

Bishop of Providence. R. I.

My Dear Dr. Lighthill: Permit me to thank you most heartily for your kindness to the Sisters of our Convent. I had no idea when I consulted you on Sister Demonica's deafness that you could so quickly restore her back to hearing, but she tells me that she hears now better than she did before. For this, and your kind and successful treatment of my own deafness, I thank you. Now I would be glad to have you refer your patients to me. You know I can recommend you as a physician and surgeon, thoroughly accomplished in those departments of medicine in which you practice. I owe you a debt of gratitude, and would be glad to pay it.

Very truly and sincerely yours

Rt. Rev. T. F. HENDRIKEN.

A complete and perm

ASTHMA.

REPORT FROM MR. C. F. BOYNTON, 31 MILK STREET, BOSTON, ROOM 35.

TO THE PUBLIC.

After having spent large sums of money, and found no relief, I was induced to apply to Dr. Lighthill, at 115 Boylston street, for treatment, having suffered from asthma in the worst form for six years, and I wish to say, for the benefit of others suffering as I did that DR. LIGHTHILL'S TREATMENT HAS MADE ME A WELL MAN, and I now can enjoy life, when before it was a dread to me. This cure was performed on me over a year ago, and I can confidently pronounce it a permanent one. I hope all afflicted with that dreadful disease will avail themselves of Dr. Lighthill's skilful services, for I feel morally sure he can cure them.

THE DRAMA.

This is the last week of Lawrence Barrett at the Boston Theatre. It has been a most successful engagement. This evening as well as at the Saturday matinee "A Blot in the 'Scutcheon" and "The King's Pleasure" will find representation. The latter one-act comedy is to be performed also in conjunction with "Yorick's Love," on Thursday and Saturday evenings. Friday night "The Merchant of Venice" and "David Garrick" will be the double offering, and thronged houses are to be counted upon.

At the Bijou Theatre we are to have Harrison and Gourlay in a new play, "A Domestic Earthquake" abounds in comic situations, ludicrous effects, and a swift succession of laughter-producing tableaux. Harrison and Gourlay are too well known, of course, to need commendation. Their absurdity, "Skipped by the Light of the Moon," enjoyed four weeks of success. The new piece of hilarity—hinging, it is understood, on the ownership of a certain pair of costly garters—will be greeted for its first appearance on any stage by overflowing audiences.

This and the following week are the closing nights of Edwin Booth's engagement at the Boston Museum. "A New Way to Pay Old Debts" with the star as Overreach, is the play chosen for Thursday, the occasion being the only repetition of the work. On Friday "The Lady of Lyons" is to have its second performance, and on Saturday afternoon its third. "The Apostate" and "Katharine and Petruchio" is the double bill on Saturday evening Booth's repertory next week has been thus arranged: Monday, "Richelieu;" Tuesday, "Othello," with Mr. Booth in the title part; Wednesday and Thursday, "Ruy Blas" and "Don Cæsar de Bazan;" Friday evening and Saturday afternoon, "The Merchant of Venice" and "Katharine and Petruchio," and Saturday evening "Othello," with Mr. Booth as Iago.

Maggie Mitchell is at the Park Theatre this week in her new play entitled "Maggie the Midget."

"Hazel Kirke" comes for a final farewell week to the Park soon, with Carrie Turner, Ada Gilman, C. W. Couldock, Mrs. E. L. Davenport and other favorites of the Madison Square in the cast of the familiar drama.

Denman Thompson brings to the Boston Monday that old acquaintance, the ever welcome "Joshua Whitcomb."

Merry "Ixion" at the Bijou will introduce Jolly Alice Harrison in the title-role, Lillie West as Venus, Harry Brown as Minerva, and Jeff De Angelis as Bacchus, a few weeks hence.

"Prisoner for Life," the latest Union Square success, could run three months longer in New York if it were not for other arrangements. It is the most successful piece that they have produced this season, and will be put on at the Park April 6.

The Suburban Press Association at their last meeting recommended the advisability of setting apart one day about the first of May for the children to plant trees in the villages. It is very evident that our brothers of the association are not much acquainted with the planting of shade trees and are not aware that it takes judgment and experience to set them successfully. The idea is a good one but leave the children out.—Canton Journal.

Miss Addie Putnam was united in marriage last Saturday with Mr. Lincoln Ames. Previous to their departure for Peabody, where the ceremony was performed, the associates of Miss Putnam got together in H. P. Preston's stitching room, where she was employed, and through Fred. French as speaker, presented her a handsome easy chair. When the carriage containing the couple passed the factory, the old shoes flew thick and fast from the windows and doors, and a boy sent out by Preston to pick them up, gathered more than a bushel. Actual fact.—Danvers Mirror.

THE BEAUTY OF YOUTH:—No matter how handsome or stalwart a young man may be otherwise, nothing can make up for a partially bald head. Shining talents are attractive but a shining poll is not. The cause may be sickness or anything else, yet Parker's Hair Balsam will stop the loss of the hair and start a new growth of glossy soft hair so quickly as to surprise you—restoring the original color at the same time. Not a dye, not oily, delicately perfumed. Only standard 50 cent dressing.

MAYO'S

Compound Vegetable Anæsthetic.

A safe and pleasant substitute for gas and ether.

Discovered by Dr. N. K. Mayo of Boston, April 1883, subsequently administered by him in nearly two thousand cases, producing perfect slumber, being applicable to the child the delicate sentitive woman as well as the hardy man. No ill effects have followed its use in any case, it acting rather as a vegetable tonic.

It controls the patient one-fourth longer than gas giving us time to remove from three to twenty teeth. It is with great confidence we have introduced it into our practice, giving very successful results.

ON THE ENGINE.

RUNNING A LOCOMOTIVE WHILE DEATHLY SICK—SOMETHING THE PASSENGERS DID NOT KNOW A PHYSICIAN SAVES AN ENGINEER.

Taunton, Mass.

DR. DAVID KENNEDY, Rondout, N. Y.

Dear Sir.—I am an engineer on the Old Colony Railroad, and run the Fall River boat train between Fall River and Lowell, residing in Taunton. For ten years I suffered everything but death from dyspepsia. Often I had such blinding sick headaches that I could scarcely see. I think this was due partly to irregular habits of eating and partly to the jar of the engine. Sometimes my head would snap like neuralgia, and again the pain would settle in my eyes, which would feel as big as a man's fist. My breath was very offensive, and my food soured as it entered my stomach. In fact my stomach felt as though it were a great raw and sore surface, and what agony it gave perhaps you can imagine.

In the summer and fall of 1876 when we had the heavy centennial travel, the constant jar brought on acute attacks nearly every week and I thought I should have to leave the road. But I kept at work until the next spring, when I grew so much worse that I could virtually eat nothing, and concluded that my labor, and my life too, were about over.

Remember that I had tried every medicine I heard of, and had been treated by some of the best physicians in Taunton and Lowell. At this critical time DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY was recommended to me. It was new to me, and with my experience of medicines you can easily forgive me for saying that I had not a particle of faith in it.

I had taken it but a few days when I began to get better. The raw and sore feeling left my stomach, and the snapping pains left my head, and soon I was all right, and have been ever since. It is the only thing that ever did me the least good, and it drove every ache, pain and discomfort completely out of my body. Now I keep KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY with me on my engine, and it goes wherever I go.

Why, I believe FAVORITE REMEDY will cure anything. One night, a while ago, John Layton, an engineer who runs the main line boat train from Boston, came on my engine sick as death. He was worn out with work, had a high fever, and was so nervous he almost broke down crying. "Nonsense, John," I said, "cheer up, I've got something on my engine that will set you up in a jiffy." I took out my bottle of FAVORITE REMEDY, lifted his head and gave him a good dose. He went to bed. Two days after I saw him looking healthy as a butcher. "Dan," he said, "what was that stuff you gave me the other night?" "It was DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY, Rondout, N. Y." said I. "Well, I don't care whose Remedy it is, it's the thing for a man on the railroad." So say we all.

Yours etc., DANIEL FITTS.

This preparation goes to the root of disease by purifying the blood and rousing every organ into healthy action. It is useful at home, shops, in office—everywhere.

has won golden opinions. No traveler should consider his outfit complete unless it includes a bottle of this medicine. If you are exposed to frequent changes of climate, food and water, Favorite Remedy should always be within your reach. It expels malarial poisons, and is the best preventative of chills and malarial fever in the world. It is especially offered as a trustworthy specific for the cure of Kidney and Liver complaints, Constipation and all disorders arising from an impure state of the blood. To women who suffer from any of the ills peculiar to their sex Favorite Remedy is constantly proving itself an unfailing friend—a real blessing. Address the proprietor, Dr. D. Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y. $1 bottle, 6 for $5, by all druggists.

"The confession of William Evans, now lying in Tewnham jail under sentence of death:

"On the fifth of January, this year, I returned from New Zealand. I worked my passage home. When I reached London I had but a few shillings in my pocket. I had no articles of value which I could sell. All I owned, except my clothes and the little bit of money, was a pistol which a man on board the ship had given me. It was a pistol of his own invention. He had several with him, and said he wanted to get the sort known. Why he gave it to me God knows; but he did, and a couple of cartridges.

"I spent my money—all but a shilling or two. I tried to get work, but none was to be had. Then I remembered that I once had a friend who lived near Roding. I went there by train. I had just enough money to pay my fare. I found that the man I knew had left the place two years ago. I walked back to the town penniless and desperate.

"The first thing I did was to go to the pawnbroker's and try and sell the pistol. The man wouldn't buy it at any price. He said his shop was full of pistols. I went away and walked to the railway station to try and earn a few pence somehow. I was in despair—all but starving.

"About seven o'clock the train from London came in. A tall gentleman came out of the door of the station. I asked him if he had any luggage I could carry for him. He told me to be off. Then I asked him, for pity's sake, to give me a shilling to buy some food. He cursed me, and I began to hate him.

"He stood under the gas lamp, and drew out a great gold watch and looked at the time. Then he asked a man near which road he must take to get to a village named Cherwell. The man told him. I saw him walk way, and I knew where he was going.

"I shall be hanged next week: there is no hope for me. But I tell the truth when I say that, bad fellow as I am, I had never committed such a crime as the one which at that moment entered my head. That tall man had money, jewelry and good clothing; I had nothing. I was starving. So I ran on, got before him, went miles up the road, and sat down in the bitter cold on a heap of stones, waiting for him to come, and making up my mind to kill and rob him. I knew I must kill him, because he was so much stronger and bigger than I was. My pistol was loaded.

"He came. I saw him in the moonlight. I stood up as he came near and, God forgive me, pulled the trigger, and shot him through the heart. He fell like a stone, and I knew I was a murderer.

"Oh, if I could I would have undone the deed! I stood for a long time before I dared to go to the body and steal the things for which I had committed the crime. Then I nerved myself and went to take the price for which, unless God is merciful, I had sold my soul.

"I never took a farthing. Just as I was about to begin I heard the sound of feet. I looked up, and saw a woman or a spirit coming to me. I dropped the pistol in terror. I felt sure she saw me. I looked at her under the moon. Her face was white, her lips were moving, her hair was all flying about. She came straight to where the dead man lay, then stopped and wrung her hands. I fled away in deadly fear. I ran across several fields. I dared not stop. I thought that spirit or ghost was following me.

"I ran on until the snow began. I must have died in that snow storm if I had not found a half roofed cowshed. I crept into this, and lay all the night and part of the next day. I was the most wretched being in the world.

"Hunger at last drove me out. I got through the snow somehow, and reached a house, where the people saved me from starvation. But nothing could make me go to the spot where I had done the murder. My life since then has been one of agony. Even now that I am going to be hanged I am happier than I have felt for months. May God forgive my crime!

"I pleaded guilty at the trial because I turned round in the dock and saw the woman who I thought was a spirit standing up and ready to denounce me to the judge. I knew that she saw me that night, and I was bound to be found guilty.

"I have confessed all. Every word of this is truth. As I hope for mercy, it is all true!

"WILLIAM EVANS."

"P. S.—I took the above confession down from the prisoner's dictation. It should be all you want. The man seems thoroughly penitent, but I do not trouble you with his expressions of remorse and regret.

"I remain, dear sir, yours faithfully,

"STEPHEN CRISP."

We read the letter; the paper fluttered down from our hands; we turned to each other. Tears of deep thankfulness were in my wife's sweet eyes. Down to the smallest detail the wretched man's confession made everything clear. Nothing was left unexplained, except, perhaps, the motive which induced Philippa to go that night to meet her would-be betrayer once more. This we shall never know, but her temporary madness may amply account for it. We need seek no further; the faintest doubt as to her own perfect innocence is removed from my wife's mind. Hand in hand, heart to heart, lip to lip, we can stand and feel that our troubles are at last over.

Our troubles over! Shall those words be the last I write? No, one scene more—the scene that lies before me even now.

An English home. Outside, green shaven lawns, trim paths, and fine old trees. Inside, the comfort and the peace which make an English home the sweetest in the world. For when the need was gone; when sunny Spain no longer was for us the one safe land, its charms diminished, and we pined to see once more England's fair fields and ruddy honest faces. So back we came, and made ourselves a home, far, far away from every spot the sight of which might wake sad thoughts. And here we live, and shall live till that hour when one of us must kiss the other's clay-cold brow, and know that death has parted those whom naught but death could part.

Look out; look through this shaded window. There she sits, my wife; a tall son at her side, a fair daughter near her. Years, many years have passed, but left no lines upon her brow; brought no white threads to streak that raven hair. The rich, bright beauty of the girl is still her own. To me, now as of yore, the sweetest, fairest woman in the world!

The children see me as I gaze with thoughtful, happy eyes upon that group beneath the trees. They call and beckon me. My wife looks up; her eyes meet mine, just raised from those sad pages. Ah! love, sweet love, in those dear eyes what was it once my fate to read? Shame, sorrow, dread, despair and love. All these, save love, have vanished long ago; and as I turn to pen these lines—the last—that look of calm, assured, unclouded joy keeps with me, telling me that from her life has passed even the very memory of those dark, dark days!

[THE END.]

Book Notices.

The March number of the Magazine of American History is filled with a graphic account of "The Fairfaxes of Yorkshire and Virginia," from the pen of Rev. Richard Wheatley, D. D., admirably illustrated with portraits and homes. The most notable portrait is that of Lord Fairfax, the great General of the Cromwell period, on horseback; and the home that will attract the most notice is Steeton Hall, the original mansion of the family—six or more centuries old. Charles I, sitting before his judges, is made the frontispiece to the number. The second article, entitled "Personal Recollections of General Nathaniel Lyon" by Dr. William A. Hammond, will command a wide circle of interested readers. Following this comes "The Adventure of Monsieur De Belle Isle," "An Old Masonic Charter." The "Story of Astoria," by P. Koch is a delightfully informing contribution. Minor Topics contain several short articles of consequence. Original Documents include some important and humorous unpublished letters. Col. Norton's interesting dictionary of Political Americanisms is continued; and Notes, Queries, Replies, Societies and book notices are replete with good things. This periodical richly deserves the high rank accorded to it by leading historical scholars in the two hemispheres. Price $5.00 a year in advance. Published at 30 Lafayette Place, New York City.

The Art Interchange of February 26, contains a beautiful design in color, suitable for stained glass panel, for fire screen, or for illuminated portfolio cover. The designs in black and white include some seventeen patterns for Scandinavian wood carving; a fish design with shell border for crumb tray in brass repousse work; a butterfly and nasturtium design for mush and milk set; an arrangement of pink and white clover, designs for after dinner coffee cups and simple but effective patterns for napkin corners. The text includes a chatty article on Woman's Work at the Water Color Exhibition, etc. The useful Note and Query Department treats among other topics of painting in black and, white gauze for fans, artistic furnishing, inexpensive gifts for a bride, satin sheeting. The Art Interchange is published by William Whitlock, 140 Nassau Street, New York. Price 15 cents per copy.

Frank Leslie's Sunday Magazine for April is a particularly interesting number, and he who does not find much in it to please him must be very hard to suit. It begins with the opening chapters of Farjeon's new story, "Love's Harvest," Adelaide C. Waldron contributes a beautiful sonnet, "An Easter Lily." The Rev. A. A. E. Taylor has a characteristic article on "The Bad Boy as a Moral Reformer," and the Rev. Dr. T. D. Witherspoon one on "The Alpine Horn." Mrs. Alexander's "Sisterhood of Spinsters," is a pungent piece of satire. The venerable countenance of the Rev. Dr. Prime, a representative religious journalist, accompanies a facsimile reduction of the first page of the New York Observer, which he has so long edited. These are only a small portion of the contents and, indeed the whole number is exceptionally good. Published by Mrs. Frank Leslie, 53, 55 and 57 Park Place, New York, at 25 cents a number.

In Babyhood for February, "The Baby's Bath," with all that pertains to it, by Marion Harland, makes one of the most interesting and practial subjects yet touched upon by this magazine. An important article on "False Croup: its Prevention and Treatment," is by Dr. John H. Ripley, professor of the diseases of children at the New York Polyclinic. George E. Waring, Jr., the well known sanitary engineer, gives many practical suggestions regarding plumbing in its relation to pure air for nursery inmates. The department of "Nursery problems"—queries by readers, with answers by the editors—is becoming exceedingly useful, comprising a great variety of topics of interest to all. Buy it of the news dealers.

The March number of the Young Ladies' Journal has reached us from the International News Company of New York, and full to overflowing with good things for the ladies, and beside the mammoth fashion sheet and colored plates, there is a variety of new styles of dresses for the children, and any mother who has her own children to dress can get more ideas from this number than she can from her professional dressmaker. Order it of the Peabody News Company.

The Democrats of New England who do not usually take a daily paper have evidently decided to begin with Cleveland's administration, if one may judge from the large number of new subscribers the Boston Daily Globe is receiving from all directions. Some are ordering the Globe of their newsdealers, others are sending $6.00 a year or 50 cents a month to get the Globe by mail. It is a very entertaining newspaper, and is particularly a favorite with the ladies and young folks.

WHAT THE SEXTON SAID.—Mr. Lewis Edwards, Sexton of Mt. Vernon Place Church, Washington, D. C., certifies that for several months past he had been suffering with a severe cough which distressed him day and night. He was very much debilitated, with constant pains in his chest. After trying various remedies he used the Red Star Cough Cure, which gave him entire relief.

SKATING RINK NOTES.

The attraction at the rink last evening was a game of polo between two local clubs, called the Toughs and Tenders. William Murray of the Peabodys was referee, playing as follows: Toughs—Frank Lummus, Frank Teel, G. R. Nelson, Fred Shaw, Ed. Harris, Walter Pray; Tenders—Hazen Spaulding, Jesse Smith, Arthur Clark, Al. Moore, Joe Clothey, and Walter Poole. Well, it was a Tough game on a Tender audience. The first goal opened by Lummus taking the first rush, and by the way, he took the six that followed. Smith, the goal tender of the Tenders, squat in front of his goal as if he was watching wild ducks on Ipswich neck, but he was there when he was wanted. The game throughout was like a game of truck and a grand scramble was made for the ball, and the way they chased it was a caution. After a play of 3m. and 45s. the first goal was won by the Tenders.

The uniforms consisted of shirt and pants, while few wore vests which were too warm for the second goal and were laid on the shelf. This goal was principally noted for the great rolling act of Harris who could cover more space on the floor than that allowed for the cage. Teel put in some fine shots also, by aiming at the goal and striking a sign in the corner which said "skates oiled here." This made it a close shave for the goal tender who reached out one of his massive feet each time to stop the ball. About this time Clark, who had been rolling around the rink, thought he was playing foot ball and attempted to kick the ball up among the sea serpents suspended overhead, but this was considered a foul. The audience who sat in the front row were very much interested—for their own safety, when the players came within a rod of them. This goal was concluded in 13m. by the Toughs getting the goal but all of the Tenders were so anxious that they all stood in the circle to see it go in. During this goal there was a beautiful side show between "Manny" Pray and Joe Clothey, who gave a sparing exhibition with hockies, both striking below the knees. After this goal even the referee wanted a rest and the boys looked tired.

The third rush had hardly begun when Harris, thinking he was still a member of the Live Oak base ball club, attempted to catch the ball with his hand. This also was a foul. An interesting feature was Josh Poole's big "feet" of turning on one skate and missing the ball. There was great excitement in the audience by this time, and they all left their seats—to get behind a post. The goal was played however in 2.40 time and was won by the Tenders in 2m. 40s.

The fourth goal Lummus came down on the ball like a hurricane and sent the ball over the railing, and the boys had time to pull their fingers out and get wind for the struggle. Most of the playing was with Smith's goal, and Shaw, commenced to make up his sleep that he lost Sunday night. Spaulding's tumbling act was much enjoyed and when Harris hugged Spaulding in the presence of the audience the referee was mean enough to say that was foul. The Tender(s)hooked(ed) the goal in 9 minutes 30 seconds.

The fifth goal was lively, Bobby Nelson distinguished himself by mistaking Harris' ear for the ball and trying to scoop it into the goal, that was a foul, but the referee didn't count it. Smith performed his part without prompting, he left the floor as all supposed to put rosin on his skates, but it proved he only went to loosen them so when the Toughs put the ball into the goal in 4 minutes 15 seconds, he could celebrate by kicking off the skates.

The sixth goal had hardly begun when Harris attempted to kill off the reporters by sending a hot ball over the band stand and Joe Clothey mistook the water tank for the ball and would have been "running" it to the cage—if it hadn't been dry. Teel practiced a new point in this goal by standing on his toes, leaning forward and looking at the ball as it passed between his legs. After the usual scramble for 19 minutes 30 seconds the Toughs captured the goal.

The seventh goal opened with boys feeling weary and ditto the audience, but the ball was sent with great force, and the referee was noticed to take from his pocket a number of papers and glance carefully at them. They were supposed to be accident insurance policies on his life. Pray introduced a new skyrocket movement with his stick, the object being to dust off all the Chinese lanterns and umbrellas that hung overhead at once. Notwithstanding all these drawbacks the Toughs won the goal in 3 minutes.

A large number from Salem were present at the Rink last Wednesday evening, to witness a game of polo for a purse of $50 offered by a secret society of that city, to be contested for by the Peabodys and Salems. Mr. O'Malley was referee and the game played under Mass. rules, the successful contestant to win four goals out of seven. The game was quite interesting and resulted in four straight for the Salems. Time 6 m. 20 s; 7 m.5 s; 6 m. 25 s., 22 m. 35s. At the close of the game the $50 was presented to the Salems by Mr. O'Malley.

They lay out big for the reporters up to Waltham. The Record of that city says: Manager Bartlett is to make arrangements whereby the reporters can have a chance to view the games better than they now do. The plan that he has under consideration is to saw out a section of the fence between two posts, and set the fence forward even with the posts, a section of the seats on the border of the rink being removed for that purpose. Each reporter will have a desk on which to write, and nine folding chairs will be placed in the enclosure, which will be entered from the skating surface.

"The Salem polo team has been presented with a set of medals by friends, accompanied by a note stating that the gift is made, as the donors think the club fairly won the medals at Peabody, February 19, which were awarded Peabody."

The above is from the Boston Record and does not fairly state the case. This refers to the three handed game, and the prizes were offered to the Peabodys, but Manager McCully refused to allow his club to take them, and they are still in the possession of the parties who got up the game.

Peabody was represented at the carnival at the Salem rink last Thursday evening.

The Peabody polo team and a number of their friends went to Woburn last Friday evening and defeated the Woburns three straight. Mr. O'Malley refereed the game; time 6 m., 5 m. and 12 m. respectively.

Another of those games where there is more fun than science was played at the rink last Thursday night between the St. John's C. T. A. Society polo team and the Bleachery team. It resulted in the defeat of the Bleachery team in three straight goals. Wm. J. Murray, referee. Time 5 minutes, 8 minutes and 5 minutes, respectively.

The A. B. Clark polo team defeated the Dean & Blake polo team at the rink in two straight games last Friday night.

SPARKS.

The late Isaac Hardy was for many years a member of the Peabody Fire Department, being the first foreman of Gen. Foster hand engine company when it was located on the Square. When the H.& L.truck, the Abel Proctor, formed, he was one of the Board of Engineers and presented the new company with a very handsome bible. He always took a great interest in the affairs of the firemen of this town.

The question now comes up, "will the Finance Committee recommend a pair of horses for the use of the second steamer or will they leave the engine to stand on the floor of the engine house while a fire is in progress? If it is the intention to run only one steamer, of what use is it to keep a company to run the reserve steamer? It would only be a matter of a few hundred dollars saving by not purchasing a new pair of horses, and it would, under the new rules, where three horses should be in the house, make a great difference to the surveyor of highways. By having the extra horses two pair can be used on the streets, and worked to advantage, but with only one pair, when working in the gravel pit, the men both in the pit and the spreaders will be obliged to wait the going and coming of the team. Another thing is, the fact that the department is none too strong for some of our large fires, and having both engines run out at once, the men of both engines are kept in better discipline and practice. We think that a great mistake will be made should it be decided not to procure the new horses.

The President of one of the large English Insurance companies and several other insurance men having risks in this town, visited the Engine House last Wednesday and examined the facilities for extinguishing fires. They made a pretty close inspection.

Secure your tickets to the annual ball of the Three Ones and a Two.

A slight fire occurred about 6 o'clock on Monday evening, in the cellar of the store of Hallowell & Smiley, on Caller street, but it was extinguished without damage with a bucket of water. Hose 4 rang in an alarm and started out, but the alarm was not taken up by the rest of the department.

SOUTH PEABODY.

Considerable complaint was made by the scholars about the cold in the school rooms at the school house last week. The thermometer being down in the fiftys.

Mr. Joseph Wiggin has resigned his position as conductor on the L. & B. R. R.

We would suggest the name of Mr. James B. Newhall as Surveyor for this part of the town. Mr. Newhall has held the position in years past and understands the duties of the office.

Alderman George F. Day, of Lynn, formerly in this town, met with quite an accident at his ice house in Wyoma one day last week, by falling on the ice striking on his head so that he had to be carried to his home. At last accounts he was convalescent.

A fox made sad havoc among the hens of J. L. Shorey at his farm house on Lynn street, Monday night, killing eight out of his flock.

One day last week, a dog living in the vicinity of Craig's pond, attempted to cross near the upper end, when the ice broke and let him in; after floundering in the water for a time he became very much confused and nearly exhausted. He would have probably been drowned if some railroad men had not gone to the shore and encouraged the dog to come out. When he reached the shore he was completely exhausted and laid down on the bank.

Last Monday, two young men named Ernest E. Roswell, belonging in Lynn, and John M. Lynch, of Lynnfield, opened a drawer in the rear of W. A. Prescott's baker team as he was driving through South Peabody, and stole a loaf of cake and other good things, but were discovered by the driver who recovered his property. Later in the day they were joined by a companion named William Green, and the three visited the house of John Tapley, who is in New York, and forcing the door entered the basement where they helped themselves to cake and preserves, when they were discovered and captured by S. M. Newhall and turned over to the police. The case will come up Friday.

CHARLOTTE E. RICKER.

Babe with the sun brown hair,
Babe with the eyes of wonder,
Morning above thy brow,
Starlight and evening under,
Babe with the snow-white heart
Sleeping within thy bosom,
As sleeps within its sheath
The unawakened blossom,
I, softly sighing, sing to thee,
What shall the long years bring to thee?

Babe with the ripe red lips
That thrill to each emotion,
Where wilt thou speak thy ships?
Upon what trackless ocean?
What hand shall guide thy life?
What harbor shall receive thee,
When on some sea unknown
Manhood's desires shall leave thee?
I, sighing softly, sing to thee,
What shall the long years bring to thee?

Sweet child, mayst never sup
With care, or pain, or sorrow!
May thy strands of shining gold
No threads of silver borrow.
May thy wondrous starry eyes
Though life retain their brightness,
And thy loving little heart
Forever keep its whiteness.
I, sighing softly, sing to thee,
This may the long years bring to thee.

The Old Colony Railroad company on Wednesday experimented with a new heater of the Meyer patent applied to car No. 91. In this car the heater is placed underneath the floor of the car at the center, and coal can be put on and the ashes raked out through a register in the aisle. Hot water is supplied to pipes at the sides of the car, and the smoke escapes through a pipe running up through the water closet. By the use of this heater, stoves and their accompanying dust and ashes are done away with, the same number of seats allowed as in summer, a saving made in the consumption of coal and a more uniform and greater degree of warmth insured.

The March moon fulls on the 30th at 11.30 in the morning. She is queen of the full moons for the year, for as she is the first full moon after the vernal equinox, she determines when Easter Sunday shall fall, and regulates from this initial point the movable fasts and feasts of the church.

By His Excellency George D. Robinson, Governor, for a Day of Fasting and Prayer.

"In the fear of the Lord is strong confidence, and his children shall have a place of refuge." On every hand come proofs, of his wisdom and power, overruling the acts of individuals and directing the destinies of States.

It is fitting, therefore, that the people, at this season of the year, with one accord turn aside from the ordinary vocations and pleasures, and in observance of time-honored custom, acknowledge their dependence upon Almighty God for the innumerable blessings, He has vouchsafed, and in reverent humility seek his mercy.

With the advice and consent of the Council, I hereby appoint Thursday, the Second Day of April next, as a day of fasting, humiliation and prayer.

Let the people throughout the Commonwealth unitedly implore forgiveness for their sins, and let them dedicate their lives in the highest consecration and devoutly make supplication for the continuance of divine favor and protection:—

That we may be that people whose God is the Lord;

That relief may come to the distressed, comfort to the afflicted and hope to the downtrodden and despairing;

That integrity, uprightness, sound morality and pure religion may everywhere prevail, to the elevation of man and to the advancement of the State;

That every form of vice and wrong may bring a sense of deep contrition and rouse to vigilant activity the noblest instincts of the soul;

That our beloved Commonwealth, reared and perpetuated by the fathers, may stand before the world the highest ideal in human government of justice, equality and freedom for all.

And that the guidance of infinite love and intelligence may be universally recognized in full obedience to God's holy and beneficent law.

Given at the Council Chamber in Boston, this eighteenth day of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-five, and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and ninth.

GEORGE D. ROBINSON.

By his Excellency the Governor, with the advice and consent of the Council.

HENRY B. PEIRCE, Secretary.

God save the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Quite a sensation was caused in town yesterday morning by the announcement in the Herald of the capture of "Billy" Hayes by Officer Shaw at New Orleans. He was keeping a saloon there under the name of Farrell. A former resident of this town saw "Billy" there, and, recognizing him, called him by name, but he denied his identity. The man then recognized Halloran, but he, too, denied the soft impeachment. The man then wrote home to this town and asked what was the matter with Billy Hayes, and detailed the circumstances. An answer was sent him with the story of the dynamite transaction of Feb. 6, 1884. Meanwhile Detective Shaw got the story and procured the necessary papers from the clerk of courts and started for New Orleans, where he found his man, and is now on the way home with him. There are at least four liquor cases, with bonds of $300 each, and he is also surety on several other bonds. An attempt was made to sue his bondsmen, but his counsel, Hon. William D. Northend, declined to accept service, and pending the publication of the necessary legal notice "Billy" has turned up.

There was a fair sized audience at the town hall last evening to attend a variety entertainment given under the auspices of Emerald Court C. O. F. It was an amateur performance given by talent that is well known and their merits have been many times spoken of. It passed off very successfully.

Mr. James McGinn returned from a five year's service in the regular army last Saturday, having been stationed the most of the time among the Apache Indians, in Arizona and New Mexico.

The officers of the State prison have been to see the parents of Geo. Ricker, who is serving a sentence for manslaughter and it is expected he will soon be pardoned out.

Nathaniel Potter, a native of this town and a son of Henry Potter, and brother-in law of John Shaw 2nd, of Lynn, died this morning at about seven o'clock, at the residence of his sister on Wallis street.

The Board of health organized last Saturday night by the choice of Dr. Charles G. Weston as Chairman and Thomas J. Relihan as Secretary. It was voted to hold meetings once a month.

James Kelly has been sent to the Alms House for two months for being drunk.

Mr. Joseph Harris is arranging to put in a lot of new vats at his tannery.

STREET
GOSSIP,

NOTES

I have noticed that most of the tramps who lodge at the station house, are well supplied with tobacco. If lacking in everything else they seem to keep a good supply of this weed in stock. A while ago, one poor fellow whose shoes were nearly worn out and who had no stockings had two hands of tobacco.

The boys were out again last Thursday and Friday night and made night hideous with the "melody" of their voices. The citizens who live on Central street know of no law that prevents singing of proper songs on the street, but there is a law against obscenity and profanity, and sometime it will be enforced.

I see by the papers that the scandal mongers have been so busy at Rowley, this winter, that the pastor of the Congregational Church there has felt it his duty to preach on "Slander." What a brilliant sermon could be preached, and what a lot of material could be gathered for the subject in this town.

I was glad you spoke last week about the deserving charity of Union Post 50, G. A. R. and the way their entertainments should be patronized. As the Post proposes to try the experiment of raising money by entertainments instead of lottery fairs, I am curious to see what extensively additional patronage will be given them by the clergymen and other religious people who are usually so outspoken against their fairs.

I am afraid that the Salvation Army will have a good field to work in here, when a good religious panorama of scenes in the "Life of Joseph," such as exhibited at the Institute last Friday night will not draw but sixteen people and thirteen of them "comps." Should the business continue as it opened, Joseph would have to pawn his plaid ulster, that he had when he was put into the pit, in order to get out of town.

"Perhaps those who oppose the roller skating rink have no marriageable daughters to work off their hands," remarked a mother to me the other day.

A young lady living on Holten street and employed in a shop where there is a large number, spoke freely about an approaching birthday and during that day received several presents from her companions, among them were three copies of the same book from as many friends. As the book is a work on Etiquette, there may have been something significant about it.

A man who came from New York state and has been canvassing the town with some cooking utensils or something of that kind, skipped out rather romantically the other night, leaving his landlady minus a fair-sized board bill. If you were running an illustrated daily paper like the Salem News, it would furnish a fine subject. Between two days he got up from his feathery couch and tied a stout piece of rope to the bedstead and securing his wardrobe, which consisted of a paper collar and a five cent necktie, slid down the rope to the ground. He probably took the air line to some other town.

The vote against License marks the course of the Law and Order League for another year, and I hope they will profit by their expenses last year, particularly in relation to the employment of "Spotters." There has not been one conviction nor could there be on the evidence furnished by this class of men. It is a foolish and expensive way of procuring evidence and should be abandoned.

Some of our boys I notice, carry a new style of cane, the head is made of red coral or celluloid, and a little way off it looks as if they were carrying in their hand an early spring radish.

Susie.—We are unable to state, but we hardly believe it possible, that the accident insurance companies are endeavoring to establish agencies in the roller skating rinks.

As the police stood in the entry looking on at the Salvation Army meeting at town hall on the 6th, I was reminded of an order that the manager of the Floy Crowell company gave the local manager at Biddeford, Me. It read something like this: "Please give this snide cop two reserved seats in the entry." It looked as if our police were taking their reserved seats in the entry.

Our friends no doubt will be much pleased to know that H. B. Hooper has made an engagement with the Celebrated Lucier Comedy Company, to appear at Town Hall next Wednesday and Thursday evenings, March 25, and 26 and Matinee next Wednesday afternoon.

"Zozo," or the magic queen, opened in Salem last Monday night with the largest audience of the season. The spectacular part of it is the most beautiful and the scenery the most elaborate ever seen in Mechanic hall. An army of men and women, illustrating a gorgeous pagent, bewildering to the mind and dazzling to the senses was the only way to express this gorgeous stage revelation, while the stage was filled with beautiful women in elegant costumes.

At Salem on Thursday, Friday and Saturday will appear the well known artists, the Leopolds, in their new absurdity "Frivolity." They are doing a big business at the Howard Atheneum this week. Low price of admission.

WE TOLD YOU SO.

That Great Sale of Clothing bought of a retiring Boston Wholesale House was visionary, but

WILMOT'S

Great Sale of New York Clothing,

Bought at less than 33 per cent. of the actual cost is a bona fide fact. Our sales have been enormous since this sale began and proves to us that people appreciate the great bargains we offer.

SOME DEALERS are making a great hue and cry about a sale of $10 Suits, and labor under the impression that they are selling cheap. In order to show them and the people of Essex County that they are mistaken we shall to-day begin a SPECIAL SALE OF $10 SUITS.

Of over fifty different styles made from the following styles, of fabrics, viz: Black, Brown, Port Wine and Gold mixed Whipcord and Corkscrew Worsteds, Scotch and English Plaids, Cassimeres, Silk mixed and Sawyer finished Cassimeres, blue Yacht Cloths, etc., all cut in the latest styles and made and trimmed in the best possible manner. Every suit warranted all wool and never sold previous to this sale for less than $20, but you can have your choice now for only

$10 $10 $10

We shall also offer the following great inducements:

Men's Heavy Diagonal Suits, $5, regular price, 10.
Men's Heavy Cassimere Suits, $8, regular price, 12.

The History of our Unexampled Success and Bargains

FOR THIS WEEK.

The almost phenomenal rush we have had on the $10 Suits advertised last week, has almost closed the lot. The demand is unabated, however, and is so great that we have determined to offer this week

1000 ALL-WOOL CASSIMERE SUITS, TEN DOLLARS.

They are fresh from our machine rooms, and of the choicest SPRING STYLES, quiet Checks, Plaids and Mixtures, in Sack and Frock.

Every Suit is thoroughly All-Wool, made and trimmed in the best manner, cloth manufactured by such mills as Sawyer, Putnam, Harris, etc., and we guarantee, if you can obtain as good a quality elsewhere for less than $15, we will take back our Suit and refund the purchase money.

Never was such an opportunity offered to obtain a Stylish Spring Suit at a nominal price.

We have full lots and all sizes, 33 to 44.

RICH BLACK WHIPCORD SUITS TEN DOLLARS.

Warranted Pure Worsted and fast color, making an elegant Dress Suit. We have only about 100 Sacks and Frocks left, and this week will probably be the last chance to obtain one.

ELEGANT SPRING OVERCOATS FIFTEEN DOLLARS.

They are all made in the best manner in our own machine rooms, Satin Sleeve Linings, and in style and fit equal custom work. Sizes 33 to 44. The assortment includes choice styles of Whipcords, Meltons and Kerseys.

ALL-WOOL SPRING OVERCOATS TEN DOLLARS.

All sizes. Handsome and stylish patterns, all perfect in fit, and cannot be purchased elsewhere for less than $15.

Come early in the week. These prices admit no delay.

Orders by mail or express promptly filled.

A SALE OF CLOTHING

THAT CAPS THE CLIMAX

AND PLACES ALL OTHER:

Clothing Dealers' Bargains In the Rear.

We have just purchased a large part of the stock of a well-known retiring wholesale Clothing firm of Boston, at a great discount from the first cost. To the above stock we have added all of our last spring's goods that were packed away, and shall offer to our patrons a stock of Twenty thousand dollars ($20,000) worth of good style, perfect and well made clothing, at such low figures that it would seem almost impossible to credit it. You will never believe it until you see for yourselves. This is no gammon about this sale.

Remember this is not a Bankrupt Stock of Clothing, neither is it a New York racket, both, we think, are about played out.

We give honest goods for honest money and at honest prices and agree to give better bargains from this stock than was ever given from any Bankrupt Sale ever started in this section of the country. This stock comprises the following lots, and is only a small part of our immense stock.

800 Men's and Young Men's Dress and Business Suits.
1500 Pairs Men's Pantaloons. 300 Boys' Long Pant Suits. 600 Men's. Young Men's, Boys' and Children's Overcoats.
600 Children's Suits, ages 4 to 12.

READ THE LOWEST PRICES EVER BEFORE NAMED FOR GOOD RELIABLE CLOTHING.

Eight hundred Men's and Young Men's Business and Dress Suits, comprising over 40 different styles to select from, made in single and double breasted Sack Suits and cutaway Frock Suits, will be sold as follows:

Lot No. 1. 300 Men's and Young Men's heavy and medium weight, all wool, plain and fancy mixed, sacks and frock suits, regular $12 and 14 Suits for only $8.

2 large lots of Men's and Young Men's heavy and medium weight, light and dark colored all wool suits, made in Sack and Frock styles, regular $8 and 10 suits, which we shall close out at retail for $5 and 6 per suit, about half price.

500 Men's and Young Men's fine all wool suits, made in double and single breasted sack and frock suits, all handsome stylish patterns, goods made by some of the most popular woolen mills in the United States, comprising cassimeres, cheviots, brown, blue, black and gold mixed diagonals and whipcords. Regular $15 and 16 suits for only TEN DOLLARS each.

2 lots of Men's and Young Men's heavy suits, for only $3.50 and 4.50 each.

600 Men's, Young Men's, Boys' and Children's heavy Winter Overcoats. Rather than carry them over to another season we have marked them at prices that will prove a grand investment, as the prices now will be from $2 to 10 less than next October. The Overcoats must be sold as we need the room. We will sell you a gent's fine Overcoat for $10 and 12, an elegant overcoat for $15, a good heavy all wool Overcoat for $5, 6 and 8.

500 pairs laboring Men's heavy all wool Pantaloons for 95c, $1.25, 1.50 ann 1.75.

800 pairs Men's and Young Men's fine all wool Pantaloons, for $3, 2.50 and 3; about half price.

1 lot of Laboring Men's Pantaloons, not all wool, for 75c per pair.

Now for the Boys. Parents and guardians of Children, there never was such an opportunity before to clothe your boys in handsome stylish clothing for so little money. Boys' long pant suits for $3; worth 5.

1 large lot of Boys' all wool long pant suits, cost $5 to manufacture. Our price is $3.50.

2 large lots of Boys' fine all wool long pant suits, cost $7 and 8 to manufacture. We shall close out the two lots at retail for $5 and 6 per suit.

3 large lots of children's all wool light and dark colored suits, ages 4 to 12, made both plaited and plain; cost to manufacture $3 and 5 per suit; we shall close the three lots at retail for $2.50, 3 and 3.50 per snit.

400 Children's fine all wool suits, made both plaited and corded, ages 4 to 14, were manufactured to retail for $6, 8 and 9 per suit. We shall close out the two lots at $4 and 5 each.

800 Knee Pants in cassimere, cheviots and Scotch wool, for 25c, 35c, 40c, 50c., 75c, 90c and $1 each. Ages 4 to 12 years.

Poet's Corner.

(For the Press.)

A Fantasy.

BY CHARLOTTE E. RICKER.

Methinks if weary miles away
A wish of thine should take to wing,
It would become a sweet-voiced bird,
And I should hark to hear it sing;
Or if, some day, Forgetfulness
Her cool hand lay upon my brow,
That hand would wither at thy touch,
And I should love thee, then, as now.

Nay! had I slept for countless years,
Methinks thy voice would hold the power
To bid the ashes of my heart
Burst forth—a glorious passion flower.
And climbing upward to thy heart
Take root, and rest securely there;
And send its tendrils round thy neck,
And drop its petals on thy hair.

Good-night! good-night! the daylight fades,
And Fancy softly steals away;
The years grow long between us, dear,
And all the sunset walls are gray.
It may be, darling, that to thee
The sky is bright at eventide;
But I am in the shadow, love—
The shadow on the other side.

"The Life-Boat Crew."

The lads are afloat, they have launched the boat,
Where the moaning storm-birds flew,
Oh, wife! from the shore they cry "One more,"
With strong, steady hand and true!
There are lives to save,
On the frothing wave—
One more for the life-boat crew!

"Nay, shiver not so that I seaward go,
Nor shrink from the night's black hue;
There is danger far where our brethren are,
And the moments left grow few.
There are lives to save
From a yawning grave—
One more for the life-boat crew!

"A kiss for the ways of our courting days,
A kiss for love's Eden view,
When the white cliffs woke as the joy-bells broke,
And home held a glory new.
Heaven's help I crave!
There are lives to save—
One more for the life-boat crew.

"This kiss, my sweet, till again we meet,
And another I leave with you
For the babe at rest on your brave, brave breast—
God keep my little lad true.
And strengthen his soul
When the deep waves roll
A call for the life-boat crew!"

[Margaret Haycraft in the Queen.]

Light at Eventide.

The day has been dark and doleful—
A day of wind and rain,
With the sound of ghostly fingers
Upon the window pane;
And never a gleam of sunshine
The cold, gray sky has closed
In this day for sad remembrance
For what our lives have lost.

Weary with vain regretting
For things that could not be,
Weary with counting over
The graves in memory,
I opened the Book of Comfort,
And in its pages read
What one of the grand old prophets
In the time of trouble said.

I heard, like a voice from heaven,
The royal singer's song
Of faith in Eternal Goodness
To triumph over wrong;
The day may be wild with tempest,
But in patient trust abide;
And remember the sweet old promise
Of light at the eventide.

And lo! as I read the chapter
So dear to the weary heart,
I saw the clouds of sunset
Like curtains swing apart,
And it seemed like a glimpse of heaven,
That touched my eyes like balm,
As I sat in the sunset glory
Repeating the sweet old psalm.

Editors are seldom dandled in the lap of luxury. They seem to be a rollicking set of fellows, but they know what it is to have "the nose on the grindstone," and are very familiar with colds, cold shoulders, etc. It was an editor who, when asked why he spoke of a ten-dollar greenback as a "ten-dollar William," said he did not feel well enough acquainted to call it "Bill."

Miss Louisa M. Alcott is "sincerely of the opinion that it is proper for woman to fill any office from the Presidential chair to the family washtub." Proper enough, of course, but a good deal depends on the size. We have seen women—and very nice women too—that wouldn't more than half fill a washtub.

WHAT THE SEXTON SAID.—Mr. Lewis Edwards, Sexton of Mt. Vernon Place Church, Washington, D. C., certifies that for several months past he had been suffering with a severe cough which distressed him day and night. He was very much debilitated, with constant pains in his chest. After trying various remedies he used the Red Star Cough Cure, which gave him entire relief.

In Memoriam.

At the funeral of Mr. Isaac Hardy held in the South Church a week ago Mr. Sperry spoke as follows:—

It is in accordance with your wish, neighbors and friends, that this funeral train has turned aside its sad procession from the household to the grave. You have asked that it should stop here in this hallowed, familiar meeting-place for a little time, that you might bring hither your tributes of respect and of affection to the memory of a good man, whose spirit has suddenly been called home to God and whose mortal form lies silently before you.

I had hoped that a former pastor of this church to whom this occasion will bring a deep personal grief, might be present to speak fitting words of eulogy. But in his compelled absence it falls to my lot to give utterance, in such words as I may find, to our deep and universal sorrow. Peabody is not the same place without Mr. Hardy. His death touches closely the entire community. The loss of one vigorous, courageous, manly soul from this town, or from any town is a loss too great to be estimated. It adds to our grief to-day that we were altogether unprepared for this death.

Mr. Hardy had just completed his three score years and ten. He had crossed the allotted span of life and if you measure life by years he was growing old. If you judge his life by events and deeds and efforts he had already grown old. There were no vacant years or months in his history; nay, so full was his busy life, there were few unoccupied hours in it. In the changing experiences of a toilsome life he was old beyond his years. But if you measure him by elasticity of mind, by buoyancy of spirit, by remaining hopefulness and courage or by the impression he made upon others, he was still young. I met him often in public and in private and only recently has the thought occurred to me that he had come to the "threshold of old age." In a teachable mind which could readily entertain new thoughts, in ever broadening sympathies, in a widening range of interests, in keeping abreast of the times in his thought and feeling, he was a young man.

Mr. Hardy's entire life was spent in this town. He was never long absent from it. Here seventy years ago his life had its beginning. He received from his parents, who were poor in this world's goods, the priceless inheritance of a powerful body which during all his life was free from disease, a quick and eager mind, which had always a large reserve of power, and an impulsive, generous spirit. Here he was educated in the common school. I suppose his time for study was limited and that long before he reached the age of manhood he had learned a trade. But he studied long enough to acquire a taste for books and reading. For many years he was an intelligent and careful reader. In the few hours of the day which now and then he could snatch away from his business, and in many midnight hours which belonged to sleep he found mental rest and refreshment in companionship with good books.

A glance at his library revealed the bent of his mind. It was rich in history—especially the history of our own land. He was attracted by the biographies of heroic men, explorers, statesmen, soldiers who have made our land what it is, and who have contributed so much to its renown.

It was rich also in the literature of the bible. I do not remember to have seen in the house of any other layman, so full and so well selected a series of comments upon the bible. With this literature he was familiar. He was a constant student of the bible. He knew the histories of its great men. In his meditative hours he lived in good company. I mean that he held companionship with Abraham and Moses and Elijah, with Samuel and David and Isaiah; with Paul and Peter and John. Among those he had his favorites. You who knew him best need not be told that he was especially attracted by the character of Peter. In the rugged strength, the quick impulse, the hopefulness and courage of the great apostle he discovered a spirit kindred with his own.

Of Mr. Hardy's business career there is no great need that I should speak. It is known to many of you better than it is known to me. You know the measure of his successes and his defeats. I suppose he was credulous in his dealings with men. Often he was too sanguine and his enterprises were too large. But his faults were the infirmities of a noble mind. Let it be remembered, it is christian love which "beareth all things, believeth all things hopeth all things, endureth all things." I have heard it said by those who were intimately associated with him in all his changing fortunes, that they never for a moment doubted the full integrity of his purpose. It is literally true of him that he was "generous to a fault." Christian love is a cord twisted from two strands. Of these the first is righteousness; the second, benevolence. Perhaps he sometimes reversed the order of the two and gave to benevolence the first place. But it was impossible for him to restrain the benevolent impulses of his heart. As well might the river careering joyously to the sea hope to turn its tide backward to its native hills. God measures character by dispositions not by deeds. He sees not the act but the motive behind the act. Much which men censure He approves.

There were two separate lines of effort outside his own business to which Mr. Hardy gave much attention. One was the cause of Temperance. To this cause he was a life-long friend. He was found on the right side of every moral cause, but for this cause he had always an awakened interest. He gave to it his thought, his counsel, his gifts of money and his prayers. Taking a long look across the years he could see that it was gaining ground. The thought gladdened his heart. Upon this subject his zeal and enthusiasm were contagious.

But another cause was nearer to his heart. He was a faithful member of this Church of Christ. He lived in the sphere of its thought and feeling. He loved its place of worship and its place of social prayer. He had a full share in its work of giving religious instruction to the young. He participated in its missionary labors. Some of the outlying districts of the town will long remember his zealous and faithful effort in their behalf. As I think how intimately he has been associated with this Church in its best spiritual life, I feel a personal sorrow in his death for which I dare not seek to find words. Can it be, can it be, that this man who was so strong and zealous in his labors in the midst of us, is to be only a memory to us while we walk in the flesh, and that we can do no more for him than to bring this poor tribute of our words?

Those who knew Mr. Hardy in his home life saw him at his best. There his warm sympathies and genial instincts found their best opportunity. There he was loving and beloved.

Characteristically he was an unselfish man. Few men are more so. If we could see gathered in this place or in some more spacious room, all those whom he has helped to a better life by his words, all those whom he has inspired with his own hopefulness and courage, all who have received his open-handed charities, their presence would be a far nobler tribute to his memory than any words of eulogy. In his inner and outer life Mr. Hardy was a Christian. He lived "by the faith of the Son of God." For him "the light of the knowledge of the Glory of God" was always shining "in the face of Jesus Christ." The great motives of the gospel filled and swayed his heart.

In the highest sense his life was successful. If his mission to the earth had been to win wealth and ease and leisure for himself, you might call his life a failure. But if his mission was to teach us by example a living faith in God, to inspire us to battle manfully against all the ills of life which can be resisted and bear uncomplainingly those which must be endured; if he came to show us how manifold are the labors which can be done in our brief life and how unselfishly life can be lived, then I say, his life was a grand success.

I cannot doubt that his prayers and his alms went up "for a memorial before God." I do not fear that the worship which he offered while he was in the world, will be refused now, when he has gone into the realm of things unseen. To him has come a full deliverance from the ills of life.

> "No ominous hour
> Knocks at his door with tidings of mishap,
> Far off is he above desire or fear.
> No more submitted to the change and chance
> Of the uncertain planets."

It remains for us who still live here upon the "Shores of time," to catch his eager and noble spirit; to walk by faith as he walked.

> "Till the morning breaks and the shadows flee away."

We shall not attempt to do full justice to the new ensemble in Messrs Smith and Robinson's window on account of lack of space; but will call everybody's attention thereto, and give an idea of it. The principle pieces are two beautiful oil paintings from the studio of E. Burrill, Jr., City Bank Building. They are actual, not ideal ones—one a shore scene, the other an old-fashioned kitchen. They should be examined to be appreciated. A new Rogers' group of statuary,—the colonial love story of John Alden and Priscilla—occupies the left of the background, with one, a scene from Othello holding the corresponding position on the right. The minor details of the window it is needless to describe. Let every passer pause and enjoy the whole.

An interesting old Letter.

Through the kindness of Mrs. Jane Prescott Townshend, a lineal descendant in the fifth generation, of the clergyman ordained, we are allowed to print the following letter written one hundred and sixty-nine years ago, by a member of the ordination council at the settlement of the first pastor, Rev. Benjamin Prescott, over the old South Society in Danvers, Mass.

Salem, Sept. 25th. 1713.

Honored and Dear Friend:—Through ye goodness of Providence we arrived here in this place after dusk Tuesday night, and are now staying with your brother Thomas at ye Precinct. The reason we got there so late was because we were detained a long time at ye ferry, as ye boat was on ye Charlestown side and ye roads were very bad and ye streams were very high on account of ye great rains. Mr. Appleton, of Cambridge, did not get here until Wednesday at 9 o'clock, his horse being weary, so he tarried all night at Reading; your Brother Thomas says ye pease has grown very much since you lived here, and that ye church has got 40 members who came off from Mr. Noyes church in Salemtown(13 men and 27 women) and ye town has granted ye Precinct 5 acres of land and ye Promise of£5 a year for five years, for ye support of ye gospel in ye Precinct. Ye church have made choice of ye Rev'd Benj. Prescott for their Pastor, and have voted him £60 a year and 15 cords of wood for his salary when single, and £75 when he shall be married. Mr. Prescott is the oldest son of Esq Jonathan Prescott, of Concord, and is a promising man about 25 yrs. old, and betrothed to Elizabeth Higginson, a comely daughter of Mr. John Higginson. Ye new meeting house is situated in a pleasant valley near a stream of water in ye village, and about a mile from Town Bridge. Ye services in ye meeting house began by reading a part of ye 119th Psalm by Rev. Cotton Mather. After which he read a portion from Thos. Allen's invitation to thirsty sinners. Mr. Hubbard, your excellent minister, then offered prayer and a Psalm was sung to a most solemn tune, ye oldest deacon reading line by line in solemn voice, so that ye whole congregation could join. Mr. Bowers, of Beverly, next offered a prayer of Ordination and consecration, with ye laying on of ye hands of ye elders. Mr. Appleton, of Cambridge, preached ye sermon from 2nd Cor. 2nd 16 verse, last clause, "Who is sufficient for these things." Another Psalm was then sung, and then Mr. Shepard gave ye charge, and the Rev. Mr. Greene, of ye village, ye hand of fellowship, and Mr. Garnish, of Wenham, made ye concluding prayer.

There was an immense concourse of people in ye house, so that every part of ye house was crowded, and some were on the beams over the heads of ye congregation. Ye Governor was in ye house and his Majesty's Commissioners of ye Customs, and they set together on a high seat by ye pulpit stairs. Ye Governor appeared very devoted and attentive. Although he favors Episcopacy and tolerates Quakers and Baptists he is a strong opposer of ye Baptists.

He was dressed in Black velvet coat bordered with gold lace, and puff breeches with gold buckles at ye knees, and white stockings.

There was a disturbance in ye galleries, when it was filled with divers negroes, Mulatoes and Indians, and a negro called Pomp Shorten belonging to Mr. Gardiner was called forth and put in ye broad aisle, where he was reproved with great awfulness and solemnity. He was then put in ye Deacon's seat between two Deacons in view of ye whole cogregation, but ye sexton was ordered by Prescott to take him out because of his levity and strange contortions of countenance, giving great scandal to ye grave deacons, and put him in the lobby under ye stairs. Some children and a mulatto woman was reprimanded for laughing at Pomp Shorten. When ye services at ye house were ended, ye council and dignitaries were entertained at ye house of Mr. Epes, on ye hill near by and we had a bountiful table, with bear's meat and venison the last of which was from a fine buck shot in the woods near by. Ye bear was killed in Lynn woods near Reading. After ye blessing had been craved by Mr. Garnish, of Wenham, word came that ye Buck was shot on ye Lord's day by Pequot, an Indian, who came to Mr. Epes with a lye in his mouth, like Annanias of old. Ye Council thereupon refused to eat of ye venison, but it was afterward agreed that Pequot should receive 40 stripes save one for lying and profaning the Lord's day, restore Mr. Epes the cost of the deer, and councilled that a just and righteous sentence on ye sinful Heathen, and that a blessing had been craved on ye meat, ye council partook of it, but Mr. Shepard, whose conscience was tender on ye point of venison.

Ye people are much rejoiced to have ye gospel Ordinances established among them, and ye house is well built 3 stories high, 28 by 42 feet with oak timbers and covered with one and one half inch plank and with clapboards upon that, and was intended to have ye inside finished with plastering when ye Precinct are able. Ye pulpit and ye deacon's seat are made of good oak, and a green cushion on ye pulpit given by Mr. Higginson.

I had ye above particulars from Mr. Drake, ye builder of ye house, who is a man of considerable acquirments. He also told me that he prepared a box to put under ye foundations containing ye year of our Lord that ye building was begun, and various particulars about ye framing of ye church. He also put in copper coins of ye reign of our blessed Sovereign Queen Ann and an epistle to ye sovereign who shall reign over these Provinces when ye box shall be found, and another to ye household of faith in ye Salem Middle Precinct exhorting them to maintain ye doctrine of ye founders, to ye utter confusion and shame of all Baptists, Mass mongers and other heretical unbelievers.. Mr. Trush who is himself a godly man and a member of ye church would not agree to put ye box under ye house, as they thought it savored of presumption and vain glorying; and some of them would not agree to ye sentiments of ye letter to ye Household of faith, but he privately put ye box under ye pulpit when ye house was near built, enclosed in bricks and good clay. Mr. Trush says that ye frame of ye house will stand two or three hundred years if it is well covered from ye weather. There have been great rejoicing with us in Boston on account of the glorious news of peace and may ye Lord long continue ye blessings and avert ye judgments we deserve.

LAWRENCE CONANT.

Margaret Mather's tour has witnessed remarkable successes. Towns generally accounted as "bad" by show people filled halls and opera houses when the actress appeared, though the one price for tickets was $1. She delighted a Chelsea audience last Saturday evening and this week continues her journeyings throughout New England, which will last well into May. Then after a visit to Buffalo, New York State and the Dominion, Miss Mather will again come into this section, closing her season in June in this State.

A Southern editor expresses the opinion that all angels are blondes. This may be true, but it would be hazarding too much to say that all blondes are angels.

CARPET AND UPHOLSTERY DEPARTMENT.

Carpet Department

Our Carpet Business since Feb. 1st, in consequence of the low prices, has been unexpectedly large.
We are glad for ourselves, also for the public, and propose to open our on the same line, believing that a largely increased business will compensate us for the smaller per cent. of profit.

REGULAR SPRING CAMPAIGN

It will be noted, that no matter how low our prices are fixed, our Carpets are always of good quality and desirable styles.
We are now receiving a great variety of choice things in all grades of Carpetings.

BRUSSELS CARPETS.

Special attention is invited to our Brussels Stock. We are informed that it is much larger than any other in Essex County.
It comprises novelties in Hartford, Lowell and Bigelow Brussels, with several other approved makes, at popular prices.
We shall continue to offer for the present a good line of the best

5 Frame Brussels Carpets at $1.

These Carpets are as good as the best, and comprise some excellent styles.

GLENHAM VELVET CARPETS.

This beautiful grade of Carpet which compares favorable with the Axminster and Wilton owes its origin to A. T. Stewart, who shortly before his death, planned its manufacture for the benefit of the Retail Department of the Famous House of which he was the head.
It is a beautiful and durable carpet at a reasonable price, and has grown in popularity from the first. We carry a full line of these Carpets.

TAPESTRY BRUSSELS CARPETS.

Roxbury & Smith Tapestries, Elegant New Styles.

IMPORTANT NOTICE

HYGIENIC CARPET BEATING.

We Steam-Beat Carpets Entirely Free from Dust & Dirt.

There is no article in a household that collects more unhealthy dirt than a carpet. After the carpet has been in use some time, sweeping takes off only a part of the dust and dirt, and the rest settles down into the fibre, to rise again and be breathed into delicate lungs. Dust clings tenaciously to some fibres, especially woolen. No ordinary beating process will remove it. Hand-beating is ineffective. Our method of beating is the only thorough and effective one.
We invite investigation as to the merit of our claim, to wit, that we can beat carpets as clean as they can be made, and without injury to them, as we use no hooks, nails or screws, and require no ripping nor sewing to adjust them to our machine. It is essential to clean carpets thoroughly, if they are worth it; for carpets, like other household articles, will absorb impurities and retain them tenaciously
This can be tested by closing a room after the carpet has been in use some time, and on opening the room an offensive order is often emitted.
We can also apply our heated, or dry steam process in addition to the machine for removing dust and dirt; and the process will effectually relieve the carpet of all impurities, and also brings out and freshens the colors. It also kills Moths, Buffalo Bugs, and all other vermin that infest carpets.

THE DRAMA.

There are some entertainments—they are very few—that seem to have perennial popularity with the play-going public. One of these rarities in theatrical offerings comes, the present week, to the Boston, "Joshua Whitcomb!" The actor brings with him a company that includes Julia Wilson, who will present her well known impersonation of Tot, Ignacio Martinetti as the boot-black, and Geo. A. Beane as the veteran Cy Prime. "Joshua Whitcomb" is to have a limited number of representations.

"Ruy Blas" and "Don Cæsar de Bazan," which were most cordially received by Museum patrons last week, will form the double attraction on Wednesday and Thursday evenings. That other highly attractive double entertainment "The Merchant of Venice" and Katherine and Petruchio," is to be Friday evening, as well as at the matinee on Saturday. Mr. Booth will make his farewell appearance Saturday night as Iago, when Mr. Barron will act the Moor's role. The advance sale indicates a very prosperous week, financially.

Returning to their "first love" in eccentric comedy those favorite stars, Harrison and Gourlay, will meet the cordial support of a public in "Skipped by the Light of the Moon." The garden-wall scene, the oyster-house chase and all the other special features in "Skipped" will gain new zest. The comedians company will provide at the Bijou, very efficient support. "Skipped" will be presented this week only.

No more after the present season is over will the Madison Square actress find occupation in Hazel Kirking. The play is soon to be withdrawn. The present week accordingly, will present the last oppotunities to see "Hazel Kirke." Carrie Turner will act the title role; C. W. Couldock will appear as Dunstan; Thomas Whiffen is to be the Pittacus Greene; and Sydney Cowell the Dolly; and the general cast promises the best production which the drama has ever been given. As "Hazel Kirke" stays but a week, large audiences may be looked for at the Park. Placque souvenirs will be presented to lady patrons.

Charles Barron's benefit is to take place at the Museum Saturday evening of next week, April 4. He is to appear as D'Artagnan in the famous Dumas drama, "The Three Guardsmen." That capital little piece, "A Regular Fix," will also be offered, and Sol Smith Russell is to contribute his specialties. The actor's popularity would assure a great audience whatever the programme, and with such a bill standing room is likely to be at a premium at this benefit.

"A Prisoner for Life" will be the Union Square company's play during their season ar the Park.

"Box and Cox," in which Sol Smith Russell makes his first Boston appearance as Cox, with George Wilson as Box, is to be played with "East Lynne" at the Museum on Mondayand Tuesday of next week, the 30th and 31st.

There will no stock company next season at the Boston, where a series of fine "combinations" have been booked.

"Three of a Kind" and the Salsburys, with Nellie McHenry, will be at the Park next week.

The Hon. Alexander Stephens once said of Daniel Webster:—I think Webster was the worst slandered man I ever knew. It is the general impression in this country to-day that Webster was a great drunkard. You hear it spoken of even now whenever his name is mentioned, but it is an outrageous slander. I will tell you what I know myself. For six years while we were both in Congress I lived next door to him. His house was as familiar to me as my own garden. I was in these a great deal and he as often in mine, and in all the time of my acquaintance with him I never saw Webster when he was in the least affectep by liquor or under the influence of it in any way. I have dined with him in his house and mine. I have met him at dinners and affairs outside and I never saw him in the least inebriated. I never heard of his being intoxicated but twice, and on one of these occasions a dinner he made a speech that was grandly eloquent.—Philadelphia Times.

MUSICAL NOTES.

The entertainment this evening and to-morrow by the Lucier Family is an event of musical interest. They are really a talented family as all who attended the concert given by them several Sunday evenings ago will testify. The company is larger than on a Sunday evening performance because they have several specialists who could not appear at a Sunday evening concert.

A concert was given in Association Hall, Boston, last evening by the Thalia Concert Company of Salem, except that Alice May Estey took the place of Mrs. Walker.

The week after Easter is to be signalized by the appearance in German Opera at the Boston Theatre, of the company selected in Germany by the late Dr. Damrosch. Their season in Chicago was a brilliant success; and in Boston there has been a good sale of season tickets.

The Musical Herald, a monthly magazine published by the Musical Herald Co., Boston, stands at the head of publications in its line and is a universal favorite with musical people. The March number contains several pieces of new and excellent music, and much matter interesting to the profession.

A concert is to be given Thursday evening in So. Peabody in the vestry of the church, which, if the programme is carried out, promises to be a very successful performance. The contributors are to be Miss May Barrelle, contralto, who will sing "Tired," and Darby and Joan, Mr. H. A. Henderson tenor, who will sing several selections, including a duet with Miss Barrelle, the Orphean Quartette and Messrs. Dugan and Brown banjo soloists. Tickets are only 20 cents. The vestry ought to be filled.

In the programme to be rendered at the "Elks Reception," in Boston, are two pieces composed by Jean M. Missud:—"A Lovely Night in June," and a Spanish fantasie, "La Paloma."

In Oliver Ditson's window in Boston is a fine photograph of Mr. L. A. Fisher the well known baritone singer.

The comedy of "A love of a bonnet," followed by the roaring farce the "Irish Tiger," was most successfully rendered at the Danvers Hospital last Thursday evening, by local talent, with the following cast of characters:—

"LOVE OF A BONNET."

Mrs. Clipper,	Miss Turner
Kitty Clipper.	Miss Hunter
Aunt Jemima Hopkins,	Miss Scott
Mrs. Fastone,	Miss McDonald
Dora Fastone,	Miss Tiffany
Katy Doolan,	Miss Everett

"IRISH TIGER."

Paddy Ryan, "I. T."	John Somerville
Sir Chas. Lavender,	R. Laidlaw
Alderman Marrowfoot,	Mr. Littlefield
Mr. Bilberry,	B McQuarrie
John,	Mr. Turner
Julia,	Miss Morse
Nancy,	Miss McLain

We do not think we praise these young Thespians too highly in saying this. We were not disposed to flatter by any means, but we have never been more agreeably surprised. Considering this to be their first appearance on the stage, we must say it was a most successful debut, for all acquitted themselves very creditably. Miss Turner as Mrs. Clipper, Miss Scott as Aunt Jemima and Miss Everett as Katy Doolan, deserved especial mention. John Somerville was well fitted to the part of the Irish Tiger and scored an immense hit, winning round upon round of applause. Mr. Littlefield and Mr. Laidlaw also shared the honors of the evening. We hope to witness something full as good, next Friday evening, when "Not so bad after all," will be presented.

Owing to a misunderstanding the remaining games of polo in the series between the Salems and Peabodys will not be played. Three out of the six advertised have been played and the Salems won them all. It is just as well the thing was so one sided that the public were loosing the interest.

The mammoth dry goods dealers, Almy, Bigelow & Washburn, advertise to-day their Carpet and Upholstery Department, and offer all kinds of Carpets, Rugs, Straw Mattings, Curtains, etc., at the very lowest prices. They also advertise the Hygienic Carpet Beating; they steam-beat carpets entirely free from dust and dirt, which no ordinary beating process will remove. Their assortment of all kinds of goods is the best the market will afford, and equal to the large stores of the metropolis.

A Massachusetts Desperado.

ARRESTED IN NEW ORLEANS UNDER AN ASSUMED NAME.

[FROM NEW ORLEANS PICAYUNE].

The Exposition, as was expected, attracted to the city a number of desperate characters and fugitives from other States. As a consequence quite a number of good arrests have been made by the local detectives on information and descriptions furnished by other parties.

The most recent, and one of the most important of these, was the arrest last night of William Hayes, alias Farrell, a noted desperado of Peabody, Mass., and a man who wielded extraordinary influence among his countrymen there.

Hayes, it appears, had terrorized the entire community in which he resided, and he was considered alike the boss and the terror of his town. Some time ago Hayes quarrelled with a lawyer of Peabody named Frank E. Farnum, and the result was a fight in which Hayes, to the surprise of everybody, came out second best.

Being of a very revengeful disposition, and burning with shame at his defeat in the presence of quite a crowd of his admirers, Hayes that night arranged a dynamite bomb near the house of Farnum, and attached an apparatus to cause its explosion. Fortunately for Mr. Farnum and his family, the destructible agent was discovered in time and the danger averted. Hayes was arrested and was tried and convicted at the May term of the Suprior Court of Essex County, for an attempt to blow up a dwelling house with dynamite. The case went to the Supreme Court on exception, and he was placed under $15,000 bail. The exceptions were overruled, and in October last Hayes jumped his bail and came to New Orleans.

Mr. Joseph E. Shaw, an officer of the Massachusetts District Police, caused descriptions of Hayes to be sent to all the large cities in the Union and one found its way here. Hayes' description as given by Mr. Shaw, was as follows:—"Hayes is a desperado, and was a wholesale liquor dealer in Peabody, Mass. Is of Irish nationality, about 43 years of age, 5 feet 7 inches in height, weight 160 lbs., medium complexion, stout built, broad shoulders, smooth face, somewhat flushed, hoarse or husky voice, loud talker and hard drinker, gray or blue eyes. Has a scar under right eye, also one over the same; has a long scar on back of head, running across the head, about parallel with the hat. Generally wears a long gold chain about the neck; generally has his legs bandaged on account of varicose veins. Dresses in short reefer coat, double-breasted vest, and either a silk or stiff brim hat, tight fitting pants." About a week ago Detective Kerwin and Pecora located Hayes here, where he had assumed the name of Farrell, and was keeping a drinking saloon and eating house near the Exposition grounds. They notified Officer Shaw, and he at once set out for New Orleans. Last evening he arrived and found that Hayes had been arrested and locked up in the Seventh Station. Shaw at once identified him, and to-day he will leave with Hayes for Lynn, Mass., near which the city of Peabody is located.

Hayes was an exceedingly dangerous man, and Mr. Shaw states that it took five or six good officers to arrest him at home.

The citizens of Peabody were highly gratified when Hayes left, and were in hopes that he would never return; but in this they are now disappointed.

SOMETHING FOR THE BABY:—What a terrible affliction about the house is a cross crying baby! A young man on the very edge of matrimony might easily be frightened from his purposes by having too much of that sort of music at the homes of his married friends. Yet babies cry commonly only when they are sick. One teaspoonful of Parker's Tonic, given the little one will bring rest and sleep to the baby and all in the house. Only 50 cents at druggists.

Three Peculiarities

Hood's Sarsaparilla, the great blood purifier and regulating medicine, is characterized by three peculiarities, namely:

1st: The combination of the various remedial agents used.

2d: The proportion in which the roots, herbs, barks, etc., are mixed.

3d: The process by which the active medicinal properties are secured.

The result is a medicine of unusual strength and curative power, which effects cures heretofore unequalled. These peculiarities belong exclusively to Hood's Sarsaparilla, and are Adjourned Town Meeting.

The adjourned town meeting was called to order at 10 o'clock Monday morning by the Moderator, Mr. Amos Merrill, who stated there was a vacancy in the list of constables, and on motion of Chas. B. Farley it was voted to dispense with substituting another name as the number was sufficiently large. Before hearing the report of the Finance Committee, F. E. Farnham said the committee to whom was referred the matter of a new school house had attended to that duty and desired to report at this meeting instead of a special meeting. He moved that the vote be reconsidered and it was carried.

J. W. Hudson, for the committee, then reported as follows:

The committee to which was referred the subject of a new School Building at the town meeting March 19, 1885, report as follows:

They recommend, first, that a school house similar in general plan to the Nichols School House on Boston street, Salem, but five feet longer and five feet wider with some change in the interior, be built as soon as practicable in that part of the town north of the Essex Railroad between Central street on the west and Fulton street on the east at a cost including land, grading of land, building, furniture, fencing, out buildings and all other expense, ready for occupancy, not to exceed the sum of $9500.

Second, that the Town Treasurer be authorized, with the approval of the Selectmen to hire for the purpose of buying land and building and furnishing a primary school house, the sum of $9500 as follows: $3200 for the term of one year, $3200 for the term of two years, and $3100 for the term of three years. And to issue notes or bonds of the town therefor, and that money sufficient to pay these notes or bonds as they shall become due be raised by taxation each year until the same are paid. The committee further say they have examined several available lots of land for the location of such a house, among others one on the south side of Tremont St., between Midway and Fulton streets, owned by the heirs of the Safford estate, and also one on the east side of English street owned by the heirs of the Elijah Upton estate, which last is known to be for sale and with which they are favorably impressed though they make no recommendations. But whatever location is selected they recommend that no greater expense be incurred than the sum above mentioned $9500.

S. C. Bancroft moved that the report be accepted. This led to quite a discussion. Jonathan King wanted to know if the committee had selected a spot to locate it on. T. J. Relihan asked if accepting the report meant the adopting of the whole or a part of the report. Mr. Bancroft thought the remarks of Mr. King quite pertinent and thought the town should fix the location, and that the committee should have recommended a location as it was the intent of the previous meeting to have them do. Mr. Relihan said the residents in that part of the town have a deep interest in the location. The streets run parallel and should the school house be located on English street it would add 75 per cent to the walk of a majority of the pupils. If it was in the other location it would save a long walk. It was fully as dry land, as good a location and could be bought fully as cheap and he thought a house on that lot would give more satisfaction on account of the central location, and he moved that the report be amended so as to buy the "Jacobs lot." R. H. Brown thought the town was hardly ready to make the location of the house and thought the matter of location should be left to the building committee.

Mr. Hudson said the committee understood they were expected to report on the house and not on the location. Either of the lots could be bought but the committee were only able to get a price on the English street one. Eugene T. McCarthy thought from what he had learned that the people in that section would be better satisfied with the lot mentioned by Mr. Relihan. There were several streets opening from Tremont on the other side and he thought the location more central; he would second the amendment of Mr. Relihan. W. H. Osgood hoped the town would not take any action on this particular lot, particularly as the committee could get no price set on the lot, and he thought the town should not decide it to-day. Mr. Relihan said it seemed as if some were determined that it be referred to a committee, but to accept the English street lot was like a contra dance to those who would have to attend school there. S. A. Southwick thought it would be better to leave the matter to a building committee. As the committee had been trying to get a price on the land and could not, and if the town votes to buy this particular piece the so-called owners could put such a price on it as suited their fancy.

T. M. Stimpson was of the opinion that the town should know two things; what the size of the lot would be and the probable cost of the same. (He was informed that the lots contained 30,000 feet.)

C. B. Farley said the committee say they have not had time to consider this question of location, the committee consists of Messrs Hudson, Southwick, Clark and Osborne. They are all honorable men and he thought the matter should be left with a committee with power to act and also to select a location and he moved that it be referred back to that committee with power to act. S. F. Blaney said it was a settled fact that a necessity for a new school house existed and he thought the town would make a fatal error to vote to locate on any lot we have not a price on. In his opinion the better way was to separate the report, accept the first part and let the Committee report at an adjourned meeting in one week upon the location. He objected to the location on English street. Mr. Relihan asked what had become of his motion and the Moderator decided that Mr. Farley's motion was in order. Mr. Bancroft wanted Mr. F. to withdraw his motion that the first part might be acted upon separately but Mr. F. did not seem inclined to and spoke in favor of the committee. F. E. Farnham thought the committee had done all they had been instructed to do, and thought if they wanted the Fulton street lot it could be voted to buy it on certain conditions, and that would prevent the placing of a fancy price on it. Frank Marsh thought the people in that part of the town where the school was to be located should decide where they would have it, and he hoped the town would not decide on the matter to-day.

Jonathan King thought the committee had neglected their duty as the town expected them to recommend where they should place this building and it was his opinion that the meeting should re-commit the report to the committee and have them report to an adjourned meeting, and also that it should be such a lot as shall suit the inhabitants of that part of the town. He thought also they should get prices on different lots. W. P. Clark did not think the committee were instructed to recommend a lot, they had examined several and had no particular choice in regard to two lots. Mr. Stimpson thought the report should be re-committed and a report made at a future meeting. Mr. Farley's motion was then put and voted down. Mr. Blaney made a motion to accept the first part of the report and that the balance be re-committed to the committee and that they report at an adjourned meeting to be held at 2 o'clock one week from today. It was carried 206 Yes, 0 No.

J. W. Hudson resigned from the committee and T. J. Relihan was elected to the vacancy.

The report of the Finance Committee was then read by the chairman C. Warren Osborn as follows.

FINANCE COMMITTEE REPORT 1885.

The committee chosen at the annual meeting of the town of Peabody, March 9, 1885, to report on the following articles of the warrant, together with those parts of the reports of the Water Board and Trustees of Cedar Grove Cemetery relating to the appropriation of money, viz: Articles 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 27, 35, 40 report as follows:

10th. To determine what sum of money shall be raised by taxation for the usual and necessary expenses of the town, when it shall be paid into the treasury, and the rate of interest to be charged on delinquent taxes.

It is advised that the town raise by taxation the sum of $90,000 together with such sums as may be required to pay the State and County taxes for the present year and whatever appropriations may be made by the adjourned meeting to be held on the 23d instant, beyond such appropriations recommended in this report, and that it be raised and paid into the treasury as follows: All taxes shall be due net cash on the 12th day of October, 1885, and on all taxes not paid on or before that day, interest shall be charged from that date until paid, at the rate of seven per cent. per annum, and it shall be the duty of the collector to issue his summons to all persons whose taxes remain unpaid on the first day of January, 1886, requiring immediate payment of same with interest due thereon, together with twenty cents for such summons, and in all cases where persons duly summoned by him shall neglect to pay within thirty days, he shall enforce payment according to law, in such cases made and provided.

11th. To see if the town will authorize the Collector to use all means of collecting taxes which a Town Treasurer when appointed Collector may use, agreeably to the Statutes of the Commonwealth.

It is advised that the collector be authorized to use all means of collecting the taxes which a Town treasurer may use when appointed collector.

12th. To appropriate money for the payment of State aid to soldiers and their families.

It is recommended that the treasurer be authorized to hire money for the payment of State aid.

13th. To determine what compensation shall be paid to town officers and firemen, the ensuing year.

It is advised that the town clerk be paid a salary of $800 and all fees received by him be paid into the treasury. To town Treasurer a salary of $300, to the treasurers of the Sinking Funds a salary of $100, to the collector of taxes a salary of $500, to the Overseers of the Poor, Chairman, $300, assistants $25 each. Selectmen and Assessors three dollars per day of labor. Moderator $5 per day, and Town officers not otherwise provided for $2 50 per day, and an appropriation for town officers of $4250 is recommended. Firemen. It is advised that there shall be paid to each steam fire engine company that shall keep up and maintain a full company of twelve men the sum of $360. To the H. & L. Company which shall keep up and maintain a full company of twelve men the sum of $360, and to each hose company which shall keep up and maintain a full company of twelve men there shall be paid the sum of $360. The chief engineer shall be paid $75 and each assistant engineer $40. The engineer shall be required to see that all companies keep up the full number of active men and no company shall be entitled to the sum named unless it shall have fulfilled the required duties to the satisfaction of the Board of Engineers and for any deficiency in the number of men, proportionate deductions shall be made. For general expenses of fire department the committee advised an appropriation of $7000. For hydrants $500.

14th. To determine the manner of repairing the highways and bridges.

It is advised that wards 1, 2, 3, 8 and 9 be placed under the charge of H. A. Besse as surveyor, who shall give his personal attention to the same and devote his entire time and service during the year to the duties of his office, and who shall have the horses belonging to the town and the apparatus for the repair of roads under his charge, and see that the horses are kept at all times within convenient distance of the Steam Fire Engines for use in case of fire, and that he be paid as salary $1000 a year. And they also advise that the Selectmen be authorized to appoint two surveyors for the remainder of the town; So. Peabody and West Peabody wards 4, 5, 6, 7, 10, 11, 12 and 13 whose pay shall be $2.50 per day of work.

15th. To determine what sum of money shall be raised for the repairs of highways and bridges, and how it shall be appropriated.

It is advised that $9000 be appointed for the repairs of highways and bridges to be apportioned to the several wards by the Selectmen, and also an appropriation of $500 for edge stones to be used as the Selectmen may direct.

16th. To see if the town will appropriate money for lighting the streets.

Your committee recommend that the sum of $3200 be appropriated.

17th. To see if the town will appropriate money for a day and night police.

It is advised that there be an appropriation of $6500 for day and night police.

18th To determine what sum of money shall be appropriated for the support of schools.

For the support of schools it is advised that $26,300 be appropriated. For truant pupils $250 and for special repairs $950, making in all $27,500.

19th. To determine in what manner the money arising from the surplus dog fund, and the town's portion of the income of the Massachusetts School Fund shall be disposed of.

It is advised that this money be appropriated as additional for the support of schools.

20th. To see if the town will authorize the Town Treasurer to hire money.

On this article we advise the following votes.

Voted. That the town Treasurer be authorized with the approval of the Selectmen to hire money in anticipation of the taxes of the current year and to issue notes of the town therefor and the debts incurred under the authority of this vote are hereby made payable from said taxes.

Voted. That the town Treasurer be authorized to hire money with the approval of the Selectmen, to renew, replace or pay any existing loan or loans and to issue notes or bonds of the town therefor.

21st. To see if the town will have any of the bells rung at noon and at nine o'clock, P. M.

Your committee recommend that the custom of ringing bells at noon and at 9 o'clock P. M. be abolished.

27th. To see if the town will appropriate money for the purpose of extending, carrying on, and repairing the water works.

It is advised that for the ordinary expenses of carrying on the water works and for repairs there be appropriated the sum of $6000, and for the extension and improvement of the works an appropriation of $2000. No extension of pipe to be made except there may be an immediate prospect of an income of at least four per cent. on the costs.

35th. To see if the town will appropriate the sum of two hundred and fifty dollars, to assist Post 50, G. A. R., to defray expenses for Memorial Day, agreeably to the petition of George F. Barnes and others.

Your committee advise the appropriation of $250 for the purpose asked for.

40th. To see if the town will amend Section 7 of the regulations defining the powers and duties of the Water Board, adopted by the town July 24th, 1873; said Section defining the manner of paying the water rates into the town treasury.

Your committee advise Sec. 7 be amended by substituting the following: All money accruing from water rates shall be paid into the town treasury as received, and interest shall be credited to account of Water Board proportional to amount of interest received by the Treasurer on all deposits of the town. Your committee also recommend that the following vote be passed:

Voted, That the town treasurer be instructed to ask for sealed proposals from the two National Banks of the town as to the rate of interest they will pay on deposits of town's money, taking into consideration also the rates of interest chargeable on over drafts, and that such money shall be placed in that bank as will make the best terms for the town.

For the maintenance of the Town House we advise the appropriation of all money received for rent of halls and rooms of the building.

For the support of the poor we recommend an appropriatoin of $8000, and that the Overseers of the poor shall keep a debt and credit account of the products of the town farm, giving the value of such part of same as may be consumed by the poor department and an account of what may have been sold, also the value of all supplies furnished to residents (outside of the Alms House) within the town. Also an account of the number of families so supplied with the number of each family, the same to be published in the next town report.

Your committee also recommend the following appropriations:

Board of Health,	$400.00
Printing and Stationery,	600 00
Miscellaneous and Incidental,	1200.00
General Sinking Fund,	9000.00
High Service Sinking Fund,	1600.00
Town House Sinking Fund,	6000.00

It is advised to appropriate for Cedar Grove Cemetery $500. Your committee advise the continuance of the unexpended balance for High Service water of $1000.

The appropriation voted by the town annual meeting March 9 for the improvement of Winthrop street $250.

For interest on town debt your committee recommend that so much of the income from the water works as is necessary, be appropriated for this purpose.

It is recommended that all sums appropriated by this annual meeting, after deducting the amount to be raised by taxation as provided for in this report shall be paid from funds now in the treasury; your committee advise that the financial year close on the first day of February, 1886, and that accounts of all departments be made up to that date, and all those having charge of the several departments be instructed not to exceed in their expenditure the sums appropriated. Your committee also advise that the Selectmen be requested to take measures to have a careful revision made of the by-laws relating to the water board.

Jonathan King moved that the several recommendations be acted upon separately and it was so voted. Mr. Marsh moved that the meeting take a recess from 12 to 1 o'clock and it was carried.

Article 10. It was voted to accept as recommended. Also Article 11 and 12.

Article 13. Mr. Bancroft wanted to know if there was any change from last year. He was informed the only change in the part relating to constables which increased their pay from $2 to 2.50 a day. This part of the report was accepted. In relation to the pay of firemen D. S. Littlefield said a reduction of three men on the hose companies outside the brick house had been recommended, also three men from the H. & L. truck, but Mr. Littlefield thought that fifteen men on the truck was none too small a number and he moved that three be added. Mr. Osborn said in the opinion of the committee 12 men were sufficient. Mr. Littlefield said it took 8 or 10 men to put up the extension ladder, and when they had two or three other ladders to put up at the same time they would be short handed. In reply to Mr. Clark he said they had had several occasions to use the extension. Mr. Osborn said the committee were as much interested in having a good department as any one, and he hoped they would give that some consideration. The Engineer has not always given us all we expect and desired; we have got all the tools and implements to work with and hydrants all over town, all we ack is a good discipline and if we had that we would have as good a department as there is in this state. Every one of the committee are large real estate owners except myself, and they of course are as interested as anyone, and would not recommend anything they thought would injure the department. Mr. Littlefield's motion was carried 97 Yes to 74 No. Mr. Littlefield said he asked the finance committee for $500 for new hose; some of that in use has had seven years service. You don't need to purchase it at once but probably will before the year is out. Mr. Osborn said this had been a year of great depression in business and the finance committee wanted the appropriations as small as possible; they looked upon the matter as they would their own business affairs, and they thought the town could get along without it this year.

The recommendations in relation to Articles 14, 15 and 16 were accepted without discussion.

In regard to Article 18, S. F. Blaney thought that $6500 was a good deal of money to spend for police; he thought as so much work had been done during the past year there was no need of keeping the fortifications guarded quite so well another, and he moved to substitute the sum of $5000 for $6500, although last year it was $7500. Mr. Osborn hoped the recommendation would not be changed; the committee were desirous of making it as small as possible. It could be plainly seen by the expenditures of the poor department how this work was having a good effect in town, and he didn't want to see the town go back but to keep on in the good work they were accomplishing. He wanted the rum shops shut up in the future as in the past year. We have done a good thing, let us keep it up. The committee have reduced the appropriation of last year from $7500 to $6500, and it is best for us as individuals and best for all to accept the report. Mr. Jas. P. King spoke of the saving to the poor department by the enforcement of the prohibition law, and called upon his hearers in God's name to protect the poor men of the town by enforcing the no-license law. Mr. Blaney said he enjoyed the sentiment of the last speaker, but it was all sentiment. The speaker questioned the figures given in the town report, and said there was nothing to show or prove that this business had anything to do with it; and further, if the Selectmen had taken hold of the liquor business with a good back bone and worked with a purpose and will with the police department, and had enforced the license law as well as they have the prohibition law the past year, we should not be called upon now to contribute so large a sum for a police force. Mr. King replied and John Linehan made some remarks of a humorous nature which were lost by most of the audience who could not hear him. Mr. Farnham and H. H. Proctor spoke in favor of the appropriation, and the recommendations of the committee were adopted by a vote of 163 Yes to 110 No. Meeting then adjourned till 1 o'clock.

AFTERNOON.

Articles 18, 19, 20 and 21 were adopted as recommended without discussion.

In relation to Article 26, Mr. Blaney said that if the contemplated extensions were carried out more money would be required, but he feared that the town would come short if she guaranteed four per cent. on the extensions. The board thought they could extend a little every year even if the town didn't find it was paying them four per cent. In relation to the tank it was not sufficient for the demands upon it, and as you can't run the works night and day with one man, this matter should receive your attention. There have been several severe fires during the past year and the pumps have had to be worked. (Here the speaker spoke in high terms of Mr. Pettee at the pumping station.) The engineer has always had orders to have the tank full every night. He would not make a motin but wanted to call the attention of the town to the tank it so that in case of accident they would not hold the water board responsible. The article was carried as recommended by the finance committee.

Articles 35 and 40 and also the miscellaneous appropriations were adopted as recommended without discussion.

Before adopting the report, Mr. Farnham moved for a re-consideration of that part of Article 14 which related to South and West Peabody, giving the power to the Selectmen to appoint surveyors for those wards. Mr. Osborn hoped the vote would not be re-considered. Mr. Spaulding is here to stir up things. The town has had more trouble about the surveyor in these wards than with any other department of the town. They can't agree among themselves up to West Peabody. We all know why Mr. Walcott was left off; I don't want to say anything about it in open town meeting, the committee want the Selectmen to be responsible and don't want the money trusteed; it is entirely wrong and he was surprised that Mr. Spaulding should try and force a man upon the town. Last year a large portion of the money appropriated for So. Peabody was put on Lynnfield street from the brook to County street, while the Lynn road was neglected and is in an awful condition. By leaving the matter with the Selectmen if the work is not well done, they can put in some one else who can properly look after it. Mr. Farnham said as there was considerable feeling he thought it proper for the town to settle it now. Personally, he had no one to recommend, he did not believe all the justice and honor was in this section of the town, he thought Mr. Osborn had some personal feelings in the matter (denied by Mr. Osborn). And he had never heard that Mr. Walcott was a bad road maker, and it had been his experience that the Lynn road was one of the best in town, and as to Mr. Walcott's finances, that could be easily arranged, as it had been during the past year. Mr. J. G. Walcott said he wished to state his position. The reason he could not always finish a job to his satisfaction was, that the Selectmen limited him on the amount of money, after the town had appropriated a certain sum for his use, they would cut him down. He laid the trouble on the Lynn road to the horse car track, which had damaged Lynn street more than $1000. The Selectmen had sunk $500 on Brown's pond. He wanted money for side walks and after telling Selectman Herrick there would be music at town meeting if he didn't get it, they gave him $100. He would defy any man to say he owed
